He was born June 24, 1850, in County Kerry, Ireland, a fact that gave rise to a general belief that he was of Irish blood, but his parents were of French and English descent. His father was a soldier, but of no very high rank. He had managed to climb to the lieutenant-colonelcy of a dragoon regiment, when he retired to the estate in Ireland, where Horatio Herbert Kitchener, the to-be-distinguished son was born.

His Soudan Success.

Young Kitchener received his fundamental military education at Woolwich, where he displayed only ordinary brilliancy, with the exception of his liking for mathematics.

The fight at Omdurman, September 2, 1898, just across the Nile from Khartoum, was the greatest battle of Kitchener's time in Egypt. Osman Digna faced him with 50,000 Mahdists, while he had but 20,000 men.

When the battle was over 11,000 of the Mahdists had been killed outright, 16,000 wounded, and 4,000 taken prisoners, while the English and Egyptian loss altogether was under 500 men.

With the capture of Khartoum, capital of the Soudan, which meant the re-establishment of British possession of those upper reaches of the Nile, Kitchener became the object of hero-worship in England.

For his triumph in the Soudan, he was raised to the peerage as Baron Kitchener of Khartoum, and received the thanks of Parliament and a grant of $150,000.

His Work in This War.

Earl Kitchener was appointed Secretary of State for War on August 8, 1914, a few days after Great Britains' declaration of war on Germany. He was regarded as England's greatest soldier, and the decision of the Government to entrust him with supreme direction of the war was received with unanimous approval.

As the war progressed and Great Britain's deficiencies in certain directions, particularly in regard to shortage of artilleryy ammunition, became apparent, Earl Kitchener was subjected to severe criticism, led by Lord Northcliffe. The Secretary was charged with responsibility for failure to foresee the extraordinary demand for heavy shells, and as a result the Ministry of Munitions was formed with David Lloyd George at its head.

Raised Great Army.

Earl Kitchener's responsibilities were further lessened by the appointment of Gen. Sir William Robertson as chief of the imperial staff in December of last year. It was reported at this time that friction had arisen between Earl Kitchener and Field Marshal French, then in command of the British forces in France. Shortly after the appointment of Gen. Robertson, Field Marshal French relinquished his command.

Notwithstanding the criticism directed against Earl Kitchener, his great accomplishments during the war are recognized universally.

Foremost of his achievements is the creation from England's untrained manhood of a huge army. At the beginning of the war Great Britain had only a few hundred thousand trained men. To-day more than 5,000,000 men are enrolled for the various branches of the service.

There have been no recent reports of Earl Kitchener's movements.

In South Africa.

Shortly afterwards he was promoted lieut.-general, and then chief of staff to Lord Roberts in the South African war, and on Lord Robert's return to England in November, 1900, succeeded him as commander-in-chief in that field. By constructing a 3,500-mile chain of blockhouses he stopped the Boer raids, and virtually ended the war in South Africa. prestige added to his popularity and prestige at home, and he was rewarded by the title of Viscount, promotion to the rank of general for distinguished service, the thanks of the Parliament, and a grant of $250,000.

Immediately after the peace General Kitchener went to India as commander-in-chief of the British forces there, and in this position which he held for seven years, he carried out not only many far-reaching administrative reforms, but a complete reorganiastion and strategical redistribution of the British and native forces. On leaving India in 1909 he was promoted field marshal and appointed commander-in-chief and High Commissioner in the Mediterranean and later on took a tour of inspection of the forces of the entire Empire, drawing up a scheme of defence of the overseas dominions.

He then returned to Egypt, the scene of his first triumph, in the capacity of British agent and consul-general in Cairo—virtually a Governor-Generalship of Egypt — and led in the economical development of the country, building new roads and irrigation projects on a large scale.

"All Steel and Ice."

During all the years the British people had looked on Kitchener's silent but effective work, they had never been able to fathom this personality. A cockney non-commissioned officer, who had seen much service under him, summed up the general opinion when he said of Kitchener: "'E's no talker. Not 'im: E'l all steel and h'ice."

His face was that of a man who neither asked for sympathy nor wanted it.

He had steady, blue-grey, passionless eyes, and a heavy moustache covered a mouth that shut close and firm like a wolf trap. He believed with all his might in the gospel of work. He had illimitable self-confidence. For bungling and faint-heartedness he was incapable of feeling sympathy or showing mercy; an officer who failed him once got no second chance. He had a grim, laconic humor. "What is your taste in hairpins?" for instance, is said to have been the query with which he annihilated a dandified officer. He was indifferent to popularity, particularly among women, and though feted all over the world in social circles, he never married.

Hard Work in the Desert.

His success in the Soudan was the result of thirteen years' work in the desert when he silently pursued the Kalifa and his hordes, laying the railroad each mile as he pushed on, and met the enemy at last. He concluded his work by blowing up the Madhi's tomb, scattering the bones of the prophet to the four winds, and settling the sands of the desert over the spot where the tomb had been. For this he was severely criticised, and in the House of Commons he was censured by some sentimentalists for an act of vandalism. He curtly replied that his instructions were to destroy the enemy, and he had done so, and to insure the future peace he had also destroyed the resting place of the prophet by whom the fanatics swore, as the tomb would have been a rallying centre for the enemy. He had wiped out all traces of the prophet and the followers. The resulting peace justified him.

When, after the three awful disasters to British arms in South Africa under the command of Gen. Buller, the Daily Mail came out with the placard, "The Government's Xmas present to the nation; Lord Robert and Lord Kitchener to leave for the front," the while British people gave a great sigh of relief; now the errors would be repaired. Roberts for tactics, Kitchener for organization.

He lived for his life work; his passion was for efficiency. "He served no other god but the god of battles," said one of his critics. His whole life was planning and organizing of forces. He never had a great reputation as a skilful leader in manoeuvring; it was as an organized that he was supreme. He was exact in equipment, mathematical in calculation, stern to ruthless to accomplish his end. Yet he settled the Boer War by offering to the leaders of the Boers terms of surrender so generous that only a man of statesmanlike mind ould have seen them to be justified.

His Work in India.

In 1902 he was sent to India as Commander-in-Chief, where he thoroughly reorganized the Indian army, in which operation he came into collision with Lord Curzon who resented his high-handed methods.

His instructions were to reorganise the British Army in India. This required appropriations largely in excess of the previous years. He sent the request for their approval to the Indian Council, over which Lord Curzon, not the least of autocrats himself, presided. Lord Curzon refused to pass them. Lord Kitchener's tone changed. Before he had asked, now he demanded. Lord Curzon refused with a curtness that showed he believed his will equal to the stern and immobile Kitchener. He was wrong. Lord Kitchener stood upon the broad authority of his commission, which was to reorganize the army in India, and he demanded that the Home Government support him. Lord Curzon stood upon his constitutional rights as the civil power to control and overrule the military. Lord Midleton, the life-long friend of Lord Curzon, his fag at Eton, to whom the appeal was made, as Secretary of State for India decided against Curzon and with Kitchener. Lord Curzon resigned and returned to England.

His Power of Silence.

For some years he held the post in Egypt made famous by Lord Cromer and his system of land reform and his encouragement of cotton growing on the Nile showed him to be as great an administrator as he was a soldier.

On his visit to America several years ago, Lord Kitchener made a very favourable impression, not by what he said, but by his astonishing power of saying nothing and his imperturbed demeanor.

Although in his sixty-sixth year Lord Kitchener had the vigour of a man ten years younger. He was straight as a dart, stood six feet two inches, his black hair only slightly tinged with grey. His penetrating grey eyes and stern, cold expression were the terror of army loafers, who either "get on or get out!"

Lord Kitchener was a bachelor. Society he detested. For women he had no time. He dedicated himself to his work and did not believe in the domestic joys for the soldier. All his officers when he commanded the army in Egypt had to be bachelors. He did got want to have men around him sighing for home and wife and children. Those things were not for a soldier in Kitchener's understanding of the life.

The Man of Iron.

Kitchener was perhaps best described by the phrase frequently applied to him —"the man of iron." Work, not talk, was his motto.

Take the Boer War, for instance. Kitchener went to South Africa in the black days, when we had suffered a succession of defeats—Stormberg, Magersfontein, Colenso — and our military supremacy was in grave danger. And how the "gentlemen" of the ranks, and others, hated his methods. Soon letters were arriving in this country complaining of his arbitrary ways. He was "making himself hated everywhere;" "insulting voluntary officers of noble birth daily;" "ruining the organization;" and so on. But never a word from Kitchener until he broke the silence with the laconic despatch, "Send me more men." And with these he won through.

His thoroughness was proverbial; but he liked things done his own way.

Rash in His Daring.

In the early days in Egypt Kitchener was daring almost to rashness. He thought nothing of disguising himself as an Arab and living among the sons of the desert for months at a time, in order to acquire a knowledge of the Mahdi's movements and conspiracies. And so clever was he at disguising himself that even his own comrades did not know him. Indeed, one day a soldier flung a brickbat at Kitchener, whom he mistook for "a bloomin' nigger," inflicting a nasty scalp wound.

Kitchener's cleverness in disguising himself, coupled with a knowledge of Arabic, which he had picked up in his wonderings in Syria, made him invaluable to the authorities. He was appointed chief of the Secret Service, and the following incident, the truth of which is vouched for by one of Lord Kitchener's relatives, strikingly illustrates his personal courage and cleverness.

Two Arab spies had been caught, but they feigned deafness, and Kitchener could get nothing from them. They were detained in a tent. In half an hour another spy was caught and bundled into the tent with the other two. They were left for an hour, talking briskly all the time, and then the door was thrown open and the third spy demanded to be taken to headquarters. It was Kitchener himself, who had, of course, found out all he wanted to know.

Carried Life in Hands.

For two years Kitchener practically lived among the Arabs, carrying his life in his hands, never knowing when he might be brought face to face with a violent death, and all the while communicating to the heads of the Eryptian Intelligence Department information of the utmost importance.

Curiously enough, Lord Kitchener was a fatalist, and on several occasions has expressed home very strong convictions as to his future. During the Soudan campaign he was once warned not to expose himself so recklessly to the enemy while in action. To this remonstrance he replied: "I shall never be killed. When my time comes I shall die peacefully in my bed."

His capacity for work was amazing, and he had no patience with a man less energetic than himself. It was characteristic of him that his first question when he entered the War Office as Secretary for War was: "Is there a bed in the building?" "No, sir," replied an official." Then get one," said Lord Kitchener. Then the officials knew that day or night would find Lord Kitchener at his post.

During the South African war he seldom had more than three or hour hours' sleep a day, rising regularly at 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning and working hard until night. Officers knew that Kitchener always meant business. He had no use for regimental ornaments; practical soldiers were what he wanted. One officer in command of a column had not been heard of for some days. Telegrams were sent in all directions to find him, bearing two questions: "What are you doing?" Have you taken any Boers, and how many?"

Grim and Laconic.

Stories of Kitchener's business are legion.

"Sorry to report the loss of five men through explosion of dynamite," was the gist of a telegram he received one day during the Boer war from a captain at the front.

"Do you want any more dynamite?" was the immediate answer.

His grim, laconic humor was well illustrated by his reply on one occasion to the War Office authorities who were pressing a certain weapon upon him.

"Keep the gun," he wired. "I can throw stones myself."

"Twelve hours in which to carry this despatch?" he remarked to an officer on one occasion. "You must do it in six." And the officer, who had asked for twelve hours, did it in five.

Time to Kitchener was everything. While engaged in building a bridge for the advance upon Pretoria, the engineering officer, apprehensive of danger of his workmen, hinted his fears to Lord Kitchener, explaining that a different mode of construction would be much safer than the one employed, which might, indeed, cost the lives of 20 to 30 men. Kitchener listened patiently, and then asked: "How much longer would it take to do the work by this safer method?" "Not more than an hour longer, sir." "Very well; do not change the plans. You will continue the work as it is begun."

Even before he entered the army in 1871 he had had a taste of actual war. While still a Woolwich cadet he was staying during a vacation with his father in Brittany, for the Irish estates had been sold. France's last desperate struggle against the German hosts was being fought out by brave but ill-organised armies of hastily raised levies. Young Kitchener offered his services to the French, was accepted, and fought under Gen. Chanzy in the operations around Le Mans. It was to be remembered afterwards when he and Capt. Marchand gallantly drank to one another on the Nile at Fashoda.

The Tale of a Telegram.

It was characteristic of so unconventional a nature that his first step to fortune and greatness was a piece of indiscipline. He was on leave in Alexandria on the eve of the famous bombardment, and, knowing that a telegram recalling him to Cyprus was imminent, he arranged with a friendly press-man to delay its reaching his hands until the weekly boat to Cyprus had gone. Lieut. Kitchener with his, at that time, unrivalled knowledge of the natives and their language, was of course, a welcome find for any commander like Lord Wolseley, committed to operations in a comparatively unknown country. Accordingly his services were retained, and from that moment his future was assured.

The Only Man Who Ever "Talked Back."

Only one man is ever known to have given back-talk to Kitchener in the matter of an order. When at the most critical stage of the long advance towards Khartoum the all-important desert railway was being pushed into the gleaming wastes of rock, and sand beyond Wady-Halfa, K. one day made a sudden descent upon the officer in charge of the work and strongly objected to some method of construction.

It might well have silenced some men. But the young, and at that time unknown soldier of French-Canadian extraction, Percy Girouard, looked calmly into the eye of the dreaded chief and replied deliberately: "Look here, sir, am I working this job or are you?"

Kitchener laughed. "Go on," he said "Do it your own way." He knew his man and the qualities which gave him such faith in himself.

TEUTONS "STARVE" TO JUSTIFY "MURDER" ON THE HIGH SEAS

Berne, via London June 8.—Not since August, 1914, have the German frontiers been so strictly watched as during the last two months.

If a neutral now wishes to go to Germany he must sign a document agreeing not to return before the expiration of three months. Even commercial men who have been doing continuous business with Germany and are known to have a genuine connection with the country, must now conduct their affairs by correspondence, or if they do cross the frontier they are forbidden to recross it before the lapse of the statutory three months.

I know of a Swiss professor and author, who like so many other Swiss writers, has his books published in Germany, and consequently he is well known there, but even he, when anxious to consult some German professor about the publication of a certain work, could not obtain permission to go to Germany and return from it within a week or two.

People who have to travel between Switzerland and Holland are consequently subjected to the greatest difficulties and are not permitted to leave the train nor to spend a night in Berlin or any other town, but must travel straight through, and all the time they are under surreptitious police supervision. That is to say they could not do anything without the German police being aware. The entire German empire now is more than ever a beleaguered fortress. Even such neutrals as are suffered to enter Germany and remain there three months, are selected neutrals, for it is not to be imagined that the editor of a neutral newspaper which does not happen to always write in such a way as to please the Germans would be permitted to cross the frontier, not even were he to agree to spend three months in the country. Not even" Germans are allowed to leave Germany now, unless for some very special reason.

However, the regulations as regards foreigners in Germany are more stringent and more strictly enforced than ever. Any one faking any foreigner, of either sex, over the age of 15, into his house or hotel must see personally that he or she has reported himself or herself to the proper authorities within 24 hours at most. Should the foreigner have failed to report himself within the stipulated time, then the person taking him in must inform the police immediately to that effect. Should the foreigner have arrived on a Saturday night or on a holiday or the day before a holiday he must still report himself within the same given time, 24 hours being in all circumstances the maximum period allowed.

It is not so much to prevent spying on German military movements that foreigners are admitted only with so much difficulty and are so closely watched, but to ensure disagreeable facts not becoming known outside Germany concerning her real economic and financial condition, and above all just now not to let anything get abroad about her preparations in view of a possible third winter campaign.

Already all manner of government commissions and government offices are taking stock of one or another of the foodstuffs and necessaries in the country—tea, cocoa, coffee in particular at present. Everything is being done to encourage the people to breed more goats in order to increase the diminished and insufficient supply of milk. A premium has been offered to a goat breeder who succeeds in bringing up twin kids or triplets. The German Fishery Association is also doing its utmost to impress upon the people that any water, whether pond, slow-flowing stream, pool or lake, in which fish will live must be stocked with fish of some suitable kind.

MEAT SUPPLY CURBED.

The meat supply has now for about a month past been in the hands of a special meat supply board whose duty it is to look after the supply, distribution and import of meat of all descriptions for the entire empire. Even in the best and the most expensive restaurants the law does not allow more than two kinds of soup, two hors d'oeuvres and two meat dishes to appear on the bill of fare at once, and only one each of these may be served to any single person.

Furthermore any one going to a restaurant must now bring not only his bread card with him but his meat card also. Butter of course is not usually served in restaurants, and the scarcity of it and of milk does not seem as yet to have become much less. In Berlin as in the rest of Germany, butter is now obtainable only on production of a butter card. As to whether the introduction of meatless days into Germany has seriously diminished the consumption of meat statements are contradictory. The official statement does not say anything about the reduction in the consumption of meat in the parts of Berlin inhabited by the wealthier classes. But one thing is clear; the poor have suffered and are suffering.

PLAINTIFF SEEKS $200 FOR FOX HE CLAIMS WAS SHOT

LONDON, June 8.—The first case to be heard at the jury sitting of the June sessions of the county court, which opened here, before Judge Macbeth, was a peculiar one.

Walter R. Campbell is suing Roger Headley and John MacIntosh for $200. He claims that last January they shot a tame fox belonging to him. The pelt was produced in court and on examination showed two bullet holes.

No decision was given in the case yesterday, and there are yet many witnesses to be examined. Most of the witnesses for the plaintiff were called to identify the skin. The fox, they stated, was a particularly large one, of the cross variety. Some said that it could be identified by a white mark on its chest.

TRYING TO DISPROVE.

The defence tried to disprove this. Never were called to testify when the shooting occurred, and what conversations ensued between the plaintiff and others at a game meeting later that day. Some doubt was expressed that the fox that was killed did really belong to Campbell or was a wild one. The debate will probably centre around this.

The teacher had been telling the class about the rhinoceros family. "Now, name some things," she said, "that it is very dangerous to go near to and have here." "Motor-cars," replied little Jenny Jones promptly.

Diplomas Presented To Three Graduates of St. Joseph's Hospital

Interesting Event Took Place Last Evening in St. Alphonsus Lyceum —Successful Graduates Bombarded With Oratorical and Floral Bouquets.

MUSICAL PROGRAMME

A crowning epoch in the nursing careers of Miss Rose Farley, Miss Cath arine Valiquette and Miss Anna McGee was reached last evening when each of them was presented with a medal and certificate of proficiency. The occasion was the graduating exercises at St. Joseph's Hospital training school for nurses, which were held in St. Alphonsus Lyceum. The platform was prettily decorated for the event which marks the termination of the student career of the successful graduates. Mr. D. O'Connell very ably performed the duties of chairman. He had an embarrassing array of speakers to choose from, including every member of the clergy and the medical profession that was in the building. There were nine doctors present and each of them was given an opportunity to speak. Each of them in turn congratulated the nurses upon the attainment of their objective.

The meeting opened with an address by Mr. O'Connell who among other thing depicted the life of the nurse upon the battlefields and closed with a stirring tribute to the profession.

LONG NIGHT VIGIL.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien in presenting the diplomas to the three graduates, spoke of the long night vigil that nurses often spend at the bedside of the sick. Next to the spiritual side, the human side of life appeals most, and the supreme efforts of the nurse should be directed toward the saving of their patients and their welfare. Rev. Dean McColl, Rev. Father Phalen, Rev. Father J. J. O'Brien and the Rev. Father McGuire of Enniamore followed. Each of the speakers congratulated the nurses and expressed the hope that their nursing careers would be crowned with success.

Among the doctors present were Dr. Buchanan, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Scott, Dr. Cameron, Dr. McGrath, Dr. Gallivan, Dr. Baker, Dr. Morgan and Dr. Birnie.

Miss Lillian Hurley, Miss Ailenne Sullivan, Miss M. Mahoney, Miss K. Masterson, Mr. E. Hanrahan and Mr. Edward Desantel contributed to a very excellent programme.

Canadians advanced. When the Canadians did move forward they found dead Germans by the score.

MINER TOOK HEAVY TOLL.

While only the broad outlines of Friday's contest are at present known the devotion of the Candians never has been more strikingly attested, writes the Morning Post correspondent.

Friday morning, Germans, under cover of a fierce bombardment, had vanced along two miles of front in the direction of Zillebeke. Two hours before the bombardment, Major-Gen Mercer, accompanied by Brigadier-General Williams, went on a tour of inspection of the front trenches. Both were cut off in the evening by a storm of fire and coolly remained to direct and encourage the men of the 42nd and 49th Battalions, with whom they found themselves. Just before sunset a terrific explosion occurred, followed by two others of equal magnitude. The enemy had successfully fired three mines in the vicinity of our lines, which sent many gallant fellows to instant death.

When the Huns arrived, General Mercer was observed leaning against a parapet suffering from shell shock and a subaltern later reported him wounded. Subsequently General Williams was hit while repelling an attack. While in this state both generals, it is believed, fell into the hands of the enemy. The men of the 3rd Canadian Division fought valiantly against heavy odds, yet they inflicted severe damage before they were overpowered, as German bodies in these same trenches testified at 7 o'clock the following morning. The Canadians, in their counter-attack plunged overnight, began a bombardment of vigour equal to that of the Germans on the preceding day, creating a shelter for our advancing battalions. The enemy's guns replied and the battle reached a pitch of appalling intensity. None the less, the Canadians pushed on and succeeded in reaching their old front line of trenches, which they found battered to pieces with hundreds of German dead lying about unburied. Some of thes advanced trenches were in such a state as to be untenable.

Tiny Rift in Board of Works Lute Satisfactorily Patched

Chairman McIntyre Claimed That City Engineer Parsons Ignored His Suggestions and Did Work Without Consulting Him—Minor Business Considered By Board

"Who's boss around here?" was Alderman McIntyre's query at the Board of Works meeting last night, in the presentation of which he intimated that relations between himself and City Engineer Parsons were slightly—not seriously—strained.

The chairman recalled a number of matters which he said he had referred to Mr. Parsons who had replied that he would look into them. "That was all that was done about them," said Alderman McIntyre. "I wouldn't mind," he continued, "if he told me the suggestions were no good, but I don't like it when nothing at all is done, and I don't hear any more about it."

Alderman McIntyre developed his complaint out of a particular reference he made t the gravelling of McDonnel street which has been recently put under way. The Engineer had gravel carted from the C.G.E. which Alderman McIntyre regarded as poor business, when the city's north end pit was nearer. He had not been considered in the matter and, generally speaking, no notice was taken of what he said. Hence, he wanted to know who was boss, and if the responsibility was his he desired a definite understanding to that effect from the Board.

Replying to the Chairman's complaint, Mr. Parsons said he did not consider the gravel in the city's pit as suitable for this particular road work. A fine quality had been reached and, to obtain heavier material, considerable labour would be necessary to get at it, that is to remove surface earth. The C.G.E. gravel was of a stouter consistency and was more easily obtained.

Members of the Board assured Alderman McIntyre he already possessed all the authority necessary.

"Last year the chairman ran the Board of Works," remarked Alderman Stratton.

"And gave it lots of his time," added Alderman Saunders.

Alderman McIntyre was apparently unsatisfied with a general expression, and asked for a definite statement.

Alderman Weir—I think you were to blame for the gravel going up there.

Alderman Stratton—I agree with you there.

In short the members told the responsibility for the working of the Department should be largely his concern.

To further assure him of his authority, Alderman Stratton proposed a motion making Alderman McIntyre "complete boss for the balance of the year, and that the City Engineer provide him with a statement of the work that had been done and of what remained."

Mayor Duffus observed that this was altogether unnecessary.

"You'll have to stick around the city a lot, Mr. Chairman," remarked Mr. Parsons.

"That's not necessary," said Alderman McIntyre. "There's always a 'phone you can get me with."

Mr. Parsons—It's not always possible to explain over the telephone what should be visited for a complete understanding.

Alderman Weir pointed out that $396 had been spent in filling in Bonaccord street near the new bridge without Alderman McIntyre's knowledge. He claimed that last year this work was promised to cost nothing.

Mayor Duffus said that $250 had been set aside for it in addition to the ashes that were to be dumped there by the garbage collectors.

Mr. Parsons stated that $100 remained of the debentures for this work.

Alderman Saunders said that the Bonaccard street hollow wouldn't be filled up in ten years.

Alderman Stratton and Alderman Duncan remarked that there was no reason for even minor differences between the Chairman of the Board and the City Engineer, and advised that they get together in close harmony.

Alderman McIntyre, referring to a site for the outfall sewer disposal plant, said he was blocked for the time being by an option he was after. He agreed with Alderman Weir that a site should be procured first. The Engineer had estimated at $14,000 the cost of diverting the sewer to King George street. "I'll resign to-morrow and take the contract for $10,000," he declared.

Rebuild Sidewalk.

City Engineer Parsons recommended that to satisfactorily repair the sidewalk in front of Dr. Greer's office on Aylmer street, a new five-foot walk one hundred feet long be constructed from the Simcoe street corner to the Fire Hall approach, at a cost of $78. The old walk has been heaved out of shape and was considered a danger to pedestrians. Alderman Saunders moved, seconded by Alderman Duncan, that the Engineer's recommendation be carried out. They contended that an accident resulting from the existing conditions might prove more costly. Alderman Weir and Alderman Stratton argued that the restoration of the walk was unnecessary this year. Mayor Duffus supported the motion which carried by three to two.

This Walk Unnecessary.

Mr. E. A. Peck representing the Burnham Estate, objected to a concrete walk on the north side of Robinson street between Rogers street and the G.T.R., claiming that it would have to be raised some feet above the Burnham property. Compensation would be claimed if the walk was built. It had been petitioned for by several residents, and members of the Committe did not agree with Mr. Peck that there was any cause for compensation. Alderman Stratton moved, seconded by Alderman Duncan, that good crossings be constructed to the south side since there are only several houses concerned.

Getting Over the Bumps.

Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Alderman Duncan, that the G.T.R. and C.P.R. be requested to level and maintain level the crossings on all the principal streets including sidings to the Quaker Oats Co.

$25 for Water Waggon.

The Board accepted Mr. Harry Baker's offer of $25 for one of the city's old water waggons.

Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Alderman Duncan, that Cambridge street be "fixed up" when similar work on Cedar street is completed. Mr. Parsons stated that Cambridge could not be drained into the creek because the grade sloped in the opposite direction. McDonnel street was twelve feet higher than Elm street.

Alderman McIntyre referred the filling of a long mudhole on Rink street, between George and Aylmer streets, to Mr. Parsons.

WILL PAY FOR SEWER.

Mr. Parsons reported that Wm. Flemming agreed to pay $40 towards the cost of a sewer to house number 1913 Water Street, the city to pay the remaining $15.

Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Ald. Stratton, that this work be done.

WILL REMOVE ASHES.

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Weir, that the ashes complained of be removed from the property of Mrs. Rubidge on the north side of Smith Street.

NOT SUFFICIENTLY SIGNED.

Mr. M. A. Turner's petition for a sewer on Dublin street, from Aylmer to the G. T. R., was not sufficiently signed.

POLES ERECTED.

The Utilities Commission asked permission to erect four poles on Wolfe Street and four on Rubidge street. Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that this be done. The work was completed yesterday.

TO GRADE HILL.

The Council will ask Smith Township to grade the hill fronting the Isolation Hospital.

WANT LANE PAVED.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Mayor Duffus, that Ald. McIntyre and Mr. Parsons interview Bradburns, Limited, and the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, joint owners of the King George Hotel lane, in an effort to induce them to have it paved.

MISSES DICKSON OBJECT.

A letter was read from the Misses Dickson and the Dickson Co., Ltd., asking the Council not to grant the Quaker Oats Co.'s request without serious consideration. The City Solicitor and Engineer are preparing a report on this matter.

SCHRADER ESTATE GOES TO CHARITY

Entire Fortune of $3,000,000 Bequeathed to Caroline Rest Home—Family Cut Off.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y., June 8.—The entire estate of $3,000,000 left by George H. S. Schrader, formerly of Hartsdale, N.Y., goes to Caroline Rest, a home for convalescent women, by his will, which was filed here yesterday. Mr. Schrader died at sea on November 15, 1915.

The Title Guarantee and Trust Company, as trustee, petitioned for the probate of the will. His only known relatives are Emma A. C. Schrader, a sister, of Copenhagen; Melsine A. D. Kapff, of Brooklyn, and Augusta Mertelmeyer, of Berlin, half sisters, none of them being mentioned in the will.

The will provides that the entire estate go to the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, to be applied to the Caroline Rest Home, which Mr. Schrader himself founded in Hartsdale.

TO INFORM DRUGGISTS ON TEMPERANCE ACT

Council Will Also Inquire as to Commissions For Pharmacists

In order that every druggist in the Province of Ontario might have a full understanding of the various clauses of the prohibition bill, which will directly affect them, the By-laws and Legislation Committee of the Pharmacy Council at their meeting yesterday decided to mail to every druggist in the Province a copy of such clauses, "as the act is very voluminous," says the recommendation, which was unanimously adopted, "we would urge that the College solicitor dissect the act by taking out all sections and clauses affecting druggists and arranging the same so that it can be printed and distributed." The Registrar will be instructed to have 2,000 copies of these printed and to mail one to each druggist in Ontario.

In a communication from J. A. Macdonald, a graduate of the College, who is now on active service in France, the attention of the Council was drawn to the fact that there was no provision for the appointment to commissioned ranks of pharmacists.

It was therefore decided that this condition should be brought to the notice of the Minister of Militia, with the request that official action be promulgated recognizing proper commissioned standing for all graduate compounders on active service.

Lieut. Fife and Pte. Anderson

the old Literary Society he displayed exceptional talents in debating and public speaking and the "Lit" flourished during his term. Removing with his father to Edmonton, he entered the University of Alberta where he won new triumph, finally winning the distinction of being selected one of four students for Rhodes Scholarship at Oxford, England. To his sturdy Canadianism he added the rich culture of the old university and was deeply influenced by its peruading imperialism strengthened by the impressions his experiences in England and Scotland developed in that direction. Returning to Canada he was appointed to the staff of the University of Alberta in Edmonton, where he had been a lecturer for a number of years previous to August 1914.

To those who knew Lieut. Fife's character and were acquainted with the training he received at home and at college his enlistment last year was no surprise. He took out a commission in the Western University reinforcements to the Princess Patricias had been in England for some time past on training and instruction work and had been in the trenches only a few weeks.

Lieut. Fife's loss will be keenly felt by all his old friends. He was of a type of manhood that was all too few in times of peace. To his parents will be extended the sincere sympathy of the many friends of their former residence in Peterborough. Mr. William Madill received a telegram last night from Mr. Fife verifying the notice in the casualty list issued yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Madill were intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fife. Among the local relatives of Lieut. Fife are Mrs. A. H. Wright, Ashburnham, Mrs. John Wood, Boswell Ave., Mr. H. Stabler, and Miss Fife.

The honour list of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute must give to Lieut Fife a foremost position. He reflected its ideals, was ever a credit to its staff and an example to its students.

His brother Lieut. Max Fife is also in khaki.

GUNNER ALEX. BUTCHER.

Mr. John Butcher, 301 Burnham street, was notified officially this morning that his son, Gunner Alex. J. Butcher, Canadian Field Artillery, was admitted to hospital on June 6th, suffering from slight wounds in the arm and thigh. Gunner Butcher is one of the best known members of the contingent who left Peterborough with the 33rd Battery. He was born here twenty-one years ago, and is widely known to the sporting fraternity for his prowess in hockey and baseball. He was the captain and centre of the Boston Exploits, which won the City League championship in 1914, and last summer was the star third baseman of Dan McCabe's East City team, winners of the City Baseball League. Like many more of the City League players, he enlisted before the ball season was over. Gunner Butcher's brother George is at the front with the Mounted Rifles.

Gunner Butcher went overseas with the 33rd Battery and was transferred to the 2nd Battery, where he was acting as orderly and telephone operator for Lieut. Harold Matthews of Peterborough. The message that he only slightly wounded comes as a relief to his parents, who have been very uneasy since the news arrived a few days ago that Lieut. Matthews is missing.

Will Ask G. T. R. To Fill Tracks

The G.T.R. will be requested to fill in the space between the rails on Bethune street, between Hunter and Brock streets, for the occupants of Driscoll Terrace and other adjacent houses to which a rear approach leads over the tracks. It is desired that the spaces referred to should be filled up even with the top of the rails in order that automobiles and other vehicles may easily pass over them. A motion embodying this request was presented by Ald. Duncan, seconded by Ald. Saunders, and the Board of Work at last night's session felt that their wish would be upheld by the Railway Board of the G.T.R. declined to accede to it.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

The Boy Scouts' Association in Canada is especially fortunate in the Royal favour bestowed on it by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, Canadian Chief Scout. In each of the nine provinces besides the Lieutenant Governor is serving as Provincial Patron. Sir Evariste Le Blanc, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, reviewed the Montreal Boy Scouts on McGill campus last Saturday, and on that occasion he remarked that their exhibition of manliness alertness, initiative and ingenuity fully justified the existence of the Boy Scout organization, which was doing so much towards providing the material for a better and bigger future manhood.

A fair estimate of the number of Boy Scouts now serving the Empire from Ontario is 1,200, drawn from all parts of the province. One case worthy of special note is that of the Boy Scouts Troop of Hespeler, Ontario comprising twenty-four, all told, every one of whom is now with the colours. One of the Toronto Troops shows an enlistment of thirty-one and another of thirty. The Province of Quebec has a record of over two hundred and fifty names, and estimates that the total for that Province would be about four hundred. Two of the Montreal troops shows a total enlistment of over twenty for overseas service. Lt.-Col. J. A. Hesketh, of the Lord Strathcona's Horse, who was Acting Provincial Commissioner of the Boy Scouts' Association for Manitoba when the war broke out, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Order. Capt E. R. Street, a former Guelph Scoutmaster, has also been the recipient of a like distinction for his work in Flanders.

A splendid example of the manly and courageous attitude of the average Scout is that given by the 1st Regina Troop, who recently disbanded in order that they might enlist for overseas service. This troop was altogether composed of musicians and was known as the Regina Boy Scout Brass Band. The band was organised in the early part of 1913 under the leadership of E. R. Phaneuf, who retained the position until the summer of 1914. Bernard Laubach, a young but capable musician, was his successor. The band held important places in the musical programmes of several exhibtions and fairs, and was very much in demand. The 1st Regina Troop has a record to be proud of; besides its name on the Troop Register of the Saskatchewan Provincial Council stands the proof of the loyalty of its members: "Disbanded because called to the service of the Empire."

The Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts' Association has adopted a very wise plan in connection with the general scheme to develop good citizenship among the Scouts, and at the same time to give every member an opportunity of doing something to aid the Empire in this hour of need. The Council has decided to issue War Service badges to Scouts performing special voluntary war service.

One badge, to be known as the Twenty-Eight Days' Special Voluntary Service Badge, will be granted to all Scouts and Scout officers who have performed, before the end of the war, twenty-eight days' voluntary service of at least three hours per day in helping the naval, military police and public authorities and private societies. The badge will be granted on the recommendation of a Scoutmaster approved by the Commissioner. A second token, to be known as the One Hundred Days' War Service Badge, will be issued to all Scouts and Scout officers giving one hundred days' voluntary service of two hours daily.

The Council will also issue a special "War Service Troop Roll" to any troop in Canada upon five war service badges being earned by members of the troop. The roll will be so designed as to permit the addition of the names of those earning either of the war service badges.

LOVED ONE WOMAN BESIDES HIS MOTHER

Nurse of His Childhood, the Only One Said to Have Gained Kitchener's Affection.

Nestling 'mid the woods and waters of Kerry is the tiny village of Ballylongford, which will go down to posterity as the place where a great soldier, whose name will shine as brightly in military history as the name of Wellington, spent his boyhood days.

Of the early days of Herbert Horatio Kitchener's boyhood, few anecdotes or interesting particulars have survived, or, at all events, found their way into print.

Nurse of Childhood.

But many a little reminiscense must have been stored up in the mind of one person at least—the nurse of his childhood, the one woman in all the world besides his mother, as it has been cynically said, whom he has really loved. National honours might be showered upon him, but to her he was not the distinguished general, the man, "in the public eye," but "Master Herbert" still, "her boy," whom no stars or titles could make dearer.

Life moulds boys with a future. Herbert Kitchener had his fancies — dreams which occupied him when he should have been mastering his books.

His Father's Threat.

His father, who, as befitted a soldier, had very clear ideas anent the value of discipline, mental as well as bodily, noted the growing gawkit and told the boy that if he did not pass the forthcoming examination at the private school he was attending, he should be made to take his place with the "kids" of the neighbouring Public school. The boy did not pass, and he was, to his horror, relegated there forthwith, with the additional threat that another failure would result in his being apprenticed to a hatter —a threat which makes one think the father was something of a humorist. He didn't fail.

So the early years slipped by.

Drive at Italians Checked By Czar

Thirty Thousand Prisoners Already Taken in Muscovite Offensive.

NEW YORK, June 8.—A London despatch to a news agency here says:

"The interest of the military critics of Europe is now centred on the armies of the Czar. The Russian offensive has now been in operation for a week, each day growing in length of line attack and frequency of infantry rushes.

According to official announcement from Petrograd the drive has already resulted in the capture of nearly 30,000 prisoners, together with cannon and small arms. The Czar has more than 1,000,000 men massed along the line from the Pripet marshes to Pruth in the Bessarabian region. Critics believe the Austrian defenders are of but half that number.

For several days prior to the Russian offensive, the official Austrian reports bristled with announcements of successes against Italy. No reports of successes have been made in the past few days, indicating that the Austrians already may have withdrawn troops to bolster up the line against the Czar.

THE DE KOVEN OPERA COMPANY

A Treat is in Store For the Theatre Goers of Peterborough—Here June 15th

The appended reference to the De Koven Opera Company's presentation of "Robin Hood" appeared in the Toronto press. The De Koven Opera Company will be in Peterborough on June 15th at the Grand Opera House. The article follows:

"Devotees of light opera are given a treat this week in the De Koven Opera Company's presentation of "Robin Hood," which opened it engagement at the Grand Theatre before an unusually large and enthusiastic first-night audience.

That is by far the best musical entertainment furnished theatregoers for many months was clearly indicated in the decided impression which the efforts of the company made in its initial production. The chorus is a singing organization, which revealed much in excellence of harmony and volume of tone. The respective choruses were sung with admirable regard for ensemble effects, practically lacking suggestion of deviating from sane interpretative results.

The sternest critics noted with gratification that the too oft forgotten detail was given attention, and the scenic investitures, especially in the second and third acts, were skilfully arranged. The principals were worthy of the praise and commendation which found expression in the frequent and prolonged applause. Ivy Scott, as the Maid Marian, is a gifted coloratura soprano, whose several solos were brilliant and warm. Her "Forest Song" in the second act, was artistically meritorious. Cora Tracy a contralto with a vibrant voice an evidently well-schooled, assumed the role of Alan-a-Dale with success. Her rendition of "Oh, Promise Me" found a responsive chord, accounted for in the singer's convincing emotional expression. Miss Tracy was made the recipient of a bouquet after the song. James Stevens, a baritone of exceptional ability, won critical respect in his interpretation of Little John, and the familiar "Brown October Ale," sung by him, won repeated encores.

A basso of commanding stage presence was Herbert Waterous, as Will Scarlet, who thrilled his auditors with the "Armorer Song." Ralph Brainard was Robin Hood, whose natural tenor voice, despite that it was somewhat spoiled by a nasal twang, found many friends.

The comedy work of Phil Branson as the Sheriff of Nottingham, was a prominent factor in the success attained by the company. He caught the fancy of the audience, and gained an individual place as a favorite. Fred Walker and Sol Solomon, as Friar and Guy, assisted him as comedians. Tillie Salinger was an agreeable Dame Durden, and Carolyn Andrews, with a delicate lyric soprano voice, played Anabel. The orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Luigi de Francesco, was noticeably an important element in the presentation."

SCHOOLS WERE CLEARED QUICKLY WHEN FIRE TESTS WERE MADE

The annual tour of inspection of the Public and Separate schools of Peterborough was conducted yesterday afternoon by Fire Chief Howard, who made the usual fire alarm test with very satisfactory results. In every school in the city the pupils were outside in orderly fashion in less than a minute. The King Edward school, with an attendance of 490 pupils, was cleared in 48 seconds, which is considered remarkable time. Chief Howard was accompanied by Mr. B. F. Ackerman, chairman of the Board of Education, Ald. G. Evans, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee of the City Council, Ald. Stratton, Ald. McIntyre, Adjt. McElheney and Mr. R. M. Waddell. The deputation was accompanied by their wives and the whole party found the tests most interesting. It is evident that the fire drills have been carefully practised in Peterborough schools, and although the test was a surprise in every case and the pupils had no way of knowing that the alarm was not a real one, there was no signs of panic, the schools being quickly and systematically cleared.

The following table shows the results yesterday as well as the report of the tests last year:

A Canadian Staged Play at the Empire

Edna Goodrich in "Armstrong's Wife"—A Strong Programme for Balance of the Week

Miss Goodrich will make her photo-play debut in the strong dramatic feature, "Armstrong's Wife," by Margaret Turnbull. The star only recently returned to the United States after a year of nerve-wracking experiences as a nurse in war hospitals in Europe. Her own beatuiful home near London is now being used for convalescent wounded.

"Armstrong's Wife" provides Miss Goodrich with those opportunities for her dramatic talent which has given her fame here and abroad. She appears as a young woman, for whose affections two men are seeking. Disappointed, unhappy and discouraged after a few months with one of them who she discovered was married, May, as portrayed by Miss Goodrich, consents to lose herself in the Canadian wilds with her other suitor. This man offers his name only to her. Subsequently, at a meeting of the three principals in this strange case, wrong is righted.

Wonderful Fire Sale Bargains

Those who are keeping their eyes open for the best sales in the city stores should visit the store of P. Black, Corner of George and King Streets, opposite Peter Hamilton's. A fire occurred in the adjoining premises, which caused some of the goods in Mr. Black's store to become slightly smoked. These goods are being sacrificed for cash. The sale is now going on at half price and less to make room for a new stock. In Ladies' and Gentlemen's Clothing and other lines, the bargains are said to be the best offered on George St. The store is opposite Turner & Sons' tent, sail, and awning factory. Make sure of the place so as to get a share of the wonderful bargains.

Cordova Mines Will Be Re-opened

Manager Kirkegaard of the Cordova gold mines, was in Havelock last week, en route to the mines, which have been idle for many moons. Mr. Kirkegaard states that he is re-opening the mines at once and expects to have a pay roll of about $6,000 per month at the start. This will be good news to the residents of Cordova, and in fact, to this entire district.

Close Poolrooms, Register All Men To Help Recruiting

Officers Frame Suggestions for Militia Department

Niagara, June 7.—Lieutenant-Colonels form all over seas battalions in this district, Brig.-Gen. Logie and the headquarters staff and Lieut.-Col. C. S. McInnis, headquarters, Ottawa, today discussed plans for recruiting. The prevailing opinion was that national registration, which meant that men who ought not to enlist would be singled from those who should offer their services, was the proper means by which Canada's voluntary contribution to the allied armies would reach the maximum.

Major Williams, the chief recruiting officer of the district, left for Ottawa with the suggestions made by the different commanders. The principal suggestions are: The suppression of all poolroom sin the province; co-operation of industrial organisations with the military authorities; requiring eligibles leaving the country to take out passports; suppression of news detrimental to recruiting, and the issuance of special buttons to those exempt from military service by reason of other work for the Empire.

This Frees Your Skin From Hair or Fuzz

(Toilet Tips.)

The method here suggested for the removal of superfluous hair is quick and certain, and unless the growth is extremely stubborn, a single application does the work. Make a stiff paste with some powdered delatone and water; apply this to the hairy surface and after about 2 minutes rub it off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. To avoid disappointment be sure your druggist sells you delatone.

EXCITING MAN HUNT IN HAVELOCK

Saturday forenoon saw an exciting man hunt in town, when military police from Barriefield arrived in an automobile on a still hunt for three deserters from the Cobourg Battalion. The men were finally rounded up at Quinlan's barber shop, but one got away, and running around to the back, escaped in the maze of outbuildings. Search was unavailing, and the soldier is still at liberty. The two captured deserters were taken to Campbellford for trial.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

Saturday morning the boys will have the first war canoe trip of the season. This will be good news for the boys as they have been waiting patiently all spring for a trip down the river. The big canoe will accommodate over thirty and will be in charge of a member of the staff. The boys will bring their lunch and bathing suit.

Parents are reminded that special swimming classes are now being held for the boys. This is a good opportunity for members to learn the art of swimming under expert supervision.

The Junior Collegiate boys' tennis tournament is proving very interesting and the boys are playing a class of tennis that would surprise a few of the older players of the game.

Col. Roosevelt On Kitchener

FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE U. S. GREATLY ADMIRED BRITISH WAR MINISTER.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., June 8.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt last night paid the filowing tribute to Lord Kitchener.

"Six years ago I passed through the Soudan and was more deeply impressed than I can well express by the extraordinary benefits secured to the natives of the country by Lord Kitchener's conquest and the administration of himself and of his lieutenant and successor, General Wingate.

"He rescued it from a condition of chronic slaughter and rapine, under which the population had diminished by considerably more than half, and of the younger children over nine-tenths died of disease or starvation.

"The result of the conquest was to establish absolute peace and justice under the orderly reign of law. Industry flourished amasingly, slavery and the oppression of weaker tribes were completely abolished; schools were established everywhere and the Soudan entered upon a career of peace, prosperity, and justice which it had never before known in its history.

"Kitchener and Wingate did in the Soudan exactly what Admiral Dewey, Governor-General Taft, Luke Wright, Smith, Forbes and their associates and Generals Leonard Wood, Bell, Funston, Barry, and others like them did for the Phillippines. In each case the gain was immeasurable for the natives themselves and was also large from the standpoint of humanity as a whole.

Regarding the work in India and Egypt, Colonel Roosevelt says Lord Kitchener was one of the great figures in that work of spreading civilization which has been the greatest, permanent achievement of the civilized powers of the world during recent decades.

"Taken as a whole," Col Roosevelt said, "nothing has meant more for humanity than this work of spreading civilization over the world's waste spaces and as a whole it has reflected the highest credit on the various nations engaged in the task. The death of Kitchener, who has been so prominent in this work, illustrates in striking fashion what a lamentable and evil thing it is that these great civilized nations should be tearing out one another's lives."

Vessels Gleaming Red Light Sea Through Pall of Smoke and Mist

Sea in Turmoil, Lashed by Ships and Shells, as Great Fighting Machines With Their Hundreds of Guns Fire Broadside After Broadside

Edinburgh, June 8.—Survivors arriving here from the British destroyers which made a massed attack on a German battleship in the Jutland battle are convinced that they sent to the bottom the dreadnought Hindenburg, the pride of the German navy.

These sailors say the Hindenburg was struck successively by four torpedoes which the destroyers dashed in alongside of her hull, tearing her to pieces until the mighty ship reeled and sank.

An officer from one of the destroyers gave the following graphic account of the battle:

"The ships of the Grand Fleet went into action as if they were going into manoeuvres. From every yardarm the white ensign flew, the flag which is to the sailor as the tattered colors were in days of old to a hard pressed regiment. That it went hard with the battle cruisers is apparent, but one ship cannot fight a dozen. They had fought a great fight, a fight to be proud of, a fight which will live longer than many a victory.

"We fought close into the foe, and if anything is certain in the uncertainties of naval battle it is that we gave at least as good as we got. We passed along the line of German ships some miles away and let off broadside after broadside. The air was heavy with masses of smoke, black, yellow, green and every other color, which drifted slowly between the opposing lines, hiding sometimes friend and sometimes foe. The enemy ships were firing very fast, but watching the ships in front one came to the conclusion that the shooting was decidedly erratic. Again and again salvos of shells fell far short of the mark, to be followed immediately by others which screamed past high in the air.

"I watched the Iron Duke swing through the seas letting off broadside after broadside, wicked tongues of flames leaping through clouds of smoke—the din of battle was stunning, stupendous, deafening, as hundreds of the heaviest guns in the world roared out at once. Great masses of water rose in the air like water spouts, reaching as high as the masts as the salvoes of German shells fell short or went over their target. Now and then a shell found its mark but it left me absolutely cold—as its effect on each man at a time like this. A dozen men may be knocked out at one's side. It makes no difference. It is war.

SMOKE OBSCURED GERMANS.

"It was impossible to see what was happening among the ships of the foe. The smoke obscured everything so effectually that one could only get a glimpse at intervals when a kindly wind blew a lane through the pall. It was apparent that the best ships of the enemy were engaged but how many neither eye nor glass could make out. The number was certainly large. It was equally impossible to see what damage we were causing. Only the high command knew the progress of the battle. That the damage inflicted on the German ships was great does not admit of any doubt. At one time two vessels red with fire gleamed through the smoke.

"It is a curious thing to be in the midst of a battle and not to know to which side fortune leans. Where only a few ships are engaged it is different. Our own losses were known with some degree of exactness, but even that was uncertain. Thus at one time it was thought that the Lion had been lost, as she did not answer any call. It developed that her wireless had been destroyed.

"With dusk came the great opportunity of the mosquito craft and both sides made use of it to the full. It was in this way that one of the saddest of many sad incidents occurred. A destroyer, true to its name, dashed for the big enemy ship. She soon got into effective range and loosed her torpedoes with deadly effect on a German battleship. The ship went down and the destroyer raced for safety, the commander and officers standing on the bridge indulging in mutual congratulations at their success. At that moment a shell hit the bridge and killed the entire group.

SEA STIFF WITH DEAD FISH.

"It was curious to note the effect of the fight on the sea. Calm at the the beginning the water soon looked as if it were under the influence of a gale, so great was the turmoil caused by the leviathan ships ploughing at terrific speed through the waves. The sea also seemed to be stiff with fish killed by the shells bursting in the water.

"We fought what was in its way a great fight but it was not a sailor's battle. Both the grand and the terrible were present to an almost overpowering degree. As a spectacle it was magnificent, awful. How awful it was was impossible to realise until the fever of action had subsided, until the guns were silent and the great ships, some battered, others absolutely untouched, were ploughing home on the placid sea."

This account was published in the Scotsman to-day. After describing the battle itself the officers reverted to incidents preceding it, saying:

"I shall never forget the stir which passed through the men on board the ships of the Grand Fleet when that inspiring message was received from the battle cruiser squadron many leagues away: 'I am engaged with heavy forces of the enemy.' One looked on the faces of his fellows and saw that the effect was electrical. The great ships swung into battle order and the responsive sea rocked and churned as the massive vessels raced for what were virtually enemy waters. As the Grand Fleet drew near the scene of action the smoke of battle and the mutter of guns came down on the winds. The eagerness of the men became almost unbearably intense, and it was a blessed relief when our own guns gave tongue."

BIG GERMAN CRUISERS ALL HIT, LONDON SAYS.

In an official despatch received from London regarding the great naval battle in the North Sea it is asserted that many vessels of the main German fleet may have reached home ports, but like a vessel of the Koenig class, which came directly under the fire of the British battle fleet, all are severely damaged.

Not only did the British war ships pursue the German fleet toward its base but the war vessels of Britian also swept the scene of the battle four times during the morning and afternoon of June 1 for enemy ships. The commander in chief finding that the whole German fleet had fled proceeded at his leisure to his bases. The remarkable fitness of the British fleet is manifst by the report that five hours later after revictualing and coaling, the war ships of Great Britain were again ready for action.

In this message it is alleged that the German losses have been deliberately falsified and that from brief telegraphic summaries received, as reports from individuals of the squadron have not been collected, the British Admiralty is quite satisfied that the German losses were as follows: Two battle cruisers, one and probably two battleships; four light cruisers, eight destroyers and one submarine. Here is the full despatch:

"Our destroyers made a determined attack on the retreating battle fleet during the night of May 31 and June 1, which hastened their flight. Remaining in possession of the field of battle the British fleet traversed the scene of action four times during the morning and the afternoon of June 1, but the commander-in-chief finding that the whole German fleet had disappeared, proceeded at his leisure to his bases.

"The British battle fleet reported five hours after the arrival that it was ready again for action.

The 93rd Battalion added two more recruits and, incidentally, another pair of brothers, to its long family list, yesterday, when two former Peterborough residents, Messrs. Frank and Harry York, signed up with Lt.-Col. Johnston's battalion. The two brothers only arrived in town yesterday from Winnipeg, and ran into the recruiting staff of the 93rd, who persuaded them that khaki was the only fashionable wear at the present time.

A draft of recruits recently secured by the 93rd Battalion, will leave for Barriefield Camp on Tuesday next. So far, since the battalion left, fifteen recruits have been signed up in Peterborough for the 93rd, in spite of the competition supplied by other units.

No less than twenty Peterborough men, who have tried unsuccessfully to enlist for active service, have already registered their names at the local recruiting office for the Army Service Corps, for which 100 men physically unfit will be accepted. No further information as to this corps has yet been received, but in the meantime all local men who are physically unfit for other branches of the service may leave their names at the recruiting office.

Lance-Corp. Degen of the recruiting staff of the 93rd Battalion, returned last evening from Barriefield Camp, having taken back to Kingston a member of the 93rd who was absent without leave. Lance-Corp Degen reports the conditions at Barriefield are now very comfortable. The 93rd have board floors in all their tents now, and any rain that may come along in the future has not the same discomforting effect last week's showers had.

The announcement from the Kingston Standard, yesterday, that three new battalions were to be authorized in this division, with headquarters at Kingston, Renfrew and Lindsay, was received with a good deal of interest here. It has been considered practically certain that Peterborough would be the headquarters of another battalion as soon as the 93rd was completed. The recruiting record of this city in all branches of the service should entitle Peterborough to the consideration of the authorities. Not only has Peterborough been represented largely in every infantry battalion raised throughout the division as a whole, but it has made the largest contribution of Mounted Rifles in the division, as well as making a fine record in recruiting for artillery, being recognized as one of the best centres in Eastern Ontario for securing artillery men. Ninety gunners and drivers went with the first contingent, 50 to the 28th Battery, 150 to the 33rd Battery, and 60 to the 52nd Battery while there has been a good representation in the Cobourg Heavy Battery. Altogether Peterborough is represented in the overseas forces by 2,200 officers and men, and there is no reason to believe that the military authorities will overlook the fact when they are considering the disposition of new units.

Peterborough garrison was reduced this morning by the departure for Barriefield of Bert. Searight, Signaller S. Martin, Pte. Forsythe, Pte. G Rowe, Pte. F. Rowe, and other 93rd men who have been in hospital here. A number of the squad who were left to put the Armouries in shape, also went down to Barriefield this morning.

There is a persistent roumour around town that the 93rd Battalion is soon to be moved to the new Borden Camp, near Barrie. There is no official foundation for the story, although it possibly might material ize after all.

The young men who have been telling the recruiting sergeants of the 93rd that they wanted to join the battery, have their chance now. The 74th Battery has representatives here now, signing on recruits, so that the men who have been waiting to man the guns have their opportunity. Recruiting for the 74th is not as brisk as for the 52nd or 33rd Batteries, but at that Lieut. Thompson has secured a number of recruits here, and has excellent prospects of others. After a week in Belleville, which did not produce a solitary recruit. It is a poor day in Peterborough that is barren of results. Some branch or other of the service can always be counted on to come through.

Mrs. S. T. Medd has received word from England that her husband Major S. T. Medd, who went overseas in command of B Squadron, 8th C.M.R., has been attached to Lord Strathcona's Horse.

BOWMANVILLE, June 7.—Lieut. Col. S. B. Scobell, O.C., 255th Battalion reported sixty recruits enlisted with his battalion since June 1st. Lieut. A. B. Mills of Peterborough who served in France with the 2nd Battalion, is attached to the new battalion. He is a son of Lieut.-Col. J. Mills, inspector of supplies and transports in division No. 2. The fourth lawyer became attached to the 255th to-day in the person of Lieut. M. C. Lane, of El Pas, Texas. He is a Canadian, and a son of the late Rev. Bidwell Lane, former pastor of the Methodist Tabernacle at Belleville. Lieut. Lane holds the degree of B.A. LL.B. from the State University of Texas.

SIR SAM AT BARRIEFIELD

KINGSTON, June 7.—Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, will visit Barriefield Camp on Friday and make an inspection of the troops stationed there.

The Kingston Standard Says:—

The bank in camp will only be open for four days after each pay day. It would be a real advanatge to the men to have a bank branch in camp open at all hours, and on every day in the week. Much business could be done with officers and men, and with a saving branch could handle a lot of money, as well as furnish a real service to the men in training.

Lt.-Col. Johnston of the 93rd battalion will also put up a big messing and recreation tent, and will provide entertainment for the Peterborough boys.—Kingston Standard.

From 'Somewhere in France' Harvie Staunton, a wellknown Peterborough boy, sends the Examiner the following programme:

"Continental Theatre of Varieties, Flanders (under the management of Kitchener and Joffre). Performances night and day until further notice.

COMPLAINT OF SCRAP WOOD DROPPED ON STREET

Shavings, shingles and scrap wood, dropped on Aylmer Street, in cartage from E. H. Mann's mill, at the corner of Sherbrooke Street, was reported as a nuisance to the Board of Works, last night, by Ald. Duncan. Ald. Weir stated that a similar complaint could be laid against the Dickson Company, in East City. Mayor Duffus stated that the police have the authority to prevent this carelessness.

DOUBLE WEDDING SOLVES PUZZLE

NEW YORK, June 8.—When Joseph Neville Colford and Miss Josephine Pallus announced their engagement a few days ago the disappointing fact was revealed that somebody was to be left out in the cold. The young man has made his home with his attractive widowed mother at No. 80 Steenwick street, Corona, Queens, and the girl, one of the prettiest in Corona, has been housekeeper and sole companion for her father, John A. Pallus, a widower, at No. 90 High street.

Of course, the young couple would have to live somewhere. If they lived with his mother her father would be left alone. If they lived with her father his mother would be left alone. What was to be done? Only one thing in this world—Mr. Pallus would have to marry Mrs. Colford, to make everyone happy, and that is just what is going to happen.

Mr. Pallus and his daughter and Mrs. Colfrod and her son appeared at the office of the Marriage License Clerk in Long Island City yesterday, obtaining two licenses to wed and announced that the double ceremony would be performed to-day in the home of the bride. Which bride? Mrs. Colford. Then father and daughter and mother and son and husbands and wives will decide which house will be their joint home and which will be closed; or, there being two couples, maybe they will continue to occupy the two homes, each bride keeping her own.

BASEBALL

The King Edward school defeated South Central yesterday by 17 runs 14. The batteries were Snowden and Sabin for King Edward and Fuller and Walton for South Central.

DANCING IN THE STREETS

PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT REPORTED TO BE A SUCCESS.

The first municipal street dance of the season has been held without attracting much general attention but with great success in the vicinity in which it was held. When this innovation was proposed last year there was some little fear that it would also develop evils and abuses. But the police censor who was appointed had very little to do except enjoy the pleasure which thousands found in this amusement and recreation.

The street dances may be stamped as a successful attempt of the city authorities to bring cheap and an almost universal form of recreation to the people. Like the band concerts the street dances have become an institution whose popularity is evidence of the fact that they satisfy a need.

The municipal oversight and creation of recreation facilities for adults as well as children and youths is yearly looming bigger as an important problem. Social reformers are urging it with great insistence. The same principle evoked when the city was compelled by the facts to provide playgrounds for the children is summoned to support the need of municipal recreation for youths and adults.

If children are not given an opportunity for wholesome play in places supervised by the authorities their natural tendencies may be perverted in the direction of malicious and petty crimes. This was the argument that won public playgrounds. The same argument is now being used to support the demand for municipal provision for adult recreation.

Dancing is one form of such recreation. It seems a natural expression, too, for who has not seen children dancing to the tunes of a hand organ or gathering in glee around the blatant ambulatory bands and following them for several squares?

In some cities the private dance halls have developed such evils that experiments are being made with municipal dance halls. Wise police supervision such as has been exhibited in these street dances will curb tendencies toward license. Any evil connected with dancing is not in the amusement but in the abuse of it.—Philadelphia Press.

Gertrude (the big sister)—"Maud, I do wish you'd stop your chattering to that dog. Can't you see I'm talking to Mr. Lovedale?" Maud (aggrieved)—"Well, I've got a right to talk to my puppy too."

Baseball Owners Assured Big Returns on Investment

Highly Prosperous Year for Every Minor League Club is Almost Certainty Now Since Tremendous Crowds at Early Games

Physically, baseball has returned to the nation more popular and a bigger attraction than since the days of the prosperous seasons of 1908 and 1909. In practically every major league city the crowds have been larger, the enthusiasm greater and the playing better than in years. The country speedily is going base ball mad and the owners fortunate enough to be in possession of franchises right now are reaping the harvest.

Never in the history of the Yankees have so many persons paid to see the local American League club in action. The new owners, Colonel Jacob Ruppert and Captain T. L. Huston, are enthused not only with the patronage but the success of their team. Financially the local men are looking forward to a big return on their enormous investments.

In Cleveland, too, new owners are getting quick returns. The Indians thanks to early successes, have attracted crowd after crowd to see them play. One Cleveland critic avers that already the actual yearly expenses of the team have been met, and that from now until the end of the season the cost of the franchise can almost be paid for.

With Giants in Defeat.

Even when the Giants were playing poorly and losing consistently at home thousands of "fans" attended the games daily. The fact that the team was losing or winning did not seem to enter into the question of seeing the games. Now, with the club winning constantly and even spectacularly, the attendance records probably will be shattered.

There are several good reasons that might be assigned to the prosperous conditions attached to the national sport. Probably the best of these is the death of the Federal League. During the life of the Independent family there were so many back-fence quarrels, later aired in the open, even rabid 'fans' became disgusted. Baseball was put on a purely commercial basis, with the sport eliminated, and the 'fans' who do not care a fig whether or not the owners make money, lost interest.

Every artifice known was used by each side to throw mud at the opposition. Players who were almost idolized before were torn from pedestals and rolled into oblivion by the different factions. Baseball became little more than a personal, jealous war between men of means. The struggles of the diamond were lost sight of in the face of those in the courts.

Just when 'fandom' appeared ready to retire from the odor of baseball those at the helm decided drastic action was needed. The olive branch was extended palm upward, differences were forgotten, serenity displaced brutality, maligned players were taken to the bosoms of the faithful and the way was prepared for the reaction most of the men interested were certain was bound to come. The nation was informed by baseball leaders that the war was over and that from now on only the daily games would receive consideration. And the nation, gullible always, has been credulous to a greater extent than even the leaders of the game could have hoped.

NATION IS PROSPEROUS.

Another reason for the prosperity and large crowds attending the games is the condition of the country just now. Money does not grow on bushes and the government still objects to allowing any other than itself the right of coinage, but, nevertheless, many there are who have a dollar now where a penny lodged a few years ago. The nation is healthy and ready to smile on all its pleasures. Therefore, baseball must share some of those smiles. Baseball is a good barometer of business conditions. When the glass is clear baseball gains and there were no clouds in sight at the latest reading.

Under the head of improved playing comes another strong reason for the renewed popularity of the game. The influx of Federal players into the teams, new faces everywhere, new stars coming into prominence, and a thousand other differences in styles of play has warmed the hearts of the patrons. The Giants alone present each day four players who were not on the club last year. The Yankees have four outstanding stars performing daily who were not with the club last season. One could go through the two leagues and find convincing arguments of this character without missing a club.

Upsets in the 'dope' of boosters, critics and 'fans' has increased the interest. The sensational spurt of Cleveland, with the spectacular 'Tris' Speaker supplying most of the driving power, practically has made over the American League. The ability shown by 'Connie' Mack's Athletics has aroused sleepy Philadelphians. Washington's spring advance has kept the staid Senators away from their duties. New York's unprecedented dash through foreign territory, in which a road record of seventeen consecutive victories was established, has created anew a fire of enthusiasm that swept over the other National League cities in quantities almost as great as in New York.

Only in St. Louis does there appear a doubt that the season will be a physical success. Unfortunate 'breaks' and poor pitching have kept the two St. Louis entries fighting to keep out of the cellar. Few 'fans' can enthuse over a tail-end contestant.

NEW YORK HAS PENNANT FEVER

The pennant bee is buzzing around New York louder than ever. Local 'fans' believe that it is not impossible that both the Giants and Yankees can get to the wire first. Both teams rest in second place and both teams are playing a brand of baseball as good, if not better, than is being shown by any of the other aggregations. In each team there is strength which, as yet has not arrived at normal capacity. When this latent spark is fanned to life victories may come oftener.

The power at bat of the Giants should bring a pennant even with only mediocre pitching. There are eight men in the line-up, any one of which can break up a ball game with a mighty drive. Should Tesreau Mathewson, Benton, Perritt and Anderson continue sending the ball across the plate with the ability they have shown in previous games, it seems nothing can keep the Giants out of the world's series.

There are several players on the Yankees who have not reached their known efficiency yet. Baker and Magee especially have much room for improvement. Should these two players hit their proper stride and begin driving the ball there is little doubt that the Yankees can keep on winning as consistently as now. With this improvement the club has a mighty fine chance for the pennant. Five pitchers of the Yankees are exhibiting a power on the mound that will prevent the run making machines of the opposition from doing any great damage.

DEATH LIST EXCEEDS 150.

Five States Suffer From the Sweep of Tornado.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 8.—A death list in excess of 150 persons was indicated yesterday by additional reports from communities in Arkansas, Missouri, Mississippi, Tennessee and Illinois. At least 30 persons, mostly negro deckhands, perished when the storm upset the Mississippi River packet Eleanore twelve miles above Memphis.

THE DOUBLE BLUE

The Toronto News: The light and dark blue colours of the Argonaut Rowing, Rugby and Hockey Clubs have been a source of pride to Toronto citizens for many years. Whether on the water, or the rugby field, or on the ice arena they have always played the game like true sportsmen, taking their victories or defeats with the same old smiling spirit. In the greatest game that the world has ever seen the Argonaut Club has a far larger representation at the front than any other organization of its kind in the world. Our hat is off to one of the finest sporting clubs in the Double Blue of the Argos.

When word was received that big, good-natured Capt Alex. Sinclair, the Argonaut oarsmen and rugby player, had been wounded in the gallant fight of the Canadians at Ypres, it recalled to one's mind just how much the great organization had suffered in the great war.

The Argonaut colours on the water, field and ice have been prominent for many years, and they still continue to take an active part in sport, despite the fact that during the time that has elapsed since the war commenced they have given up entire crews and teams to the cause of liberty.

When war was decared several of the Argonauts were the first to don the khaki uniform, and in the fall of 1915 they had nearly one hundred of their members in uniform, and ten of them had made the supreme sacrifice. Since then nearly every member of the club who was fit and able has donned the khaki, and still the Argos go ahead and have several crews out on the water every morning.

When the list of casualties came in after the first Canadian Contingent were in action the Argonauts suffered heavily. During the month of May, 1915, eight of their best known athletes and active members were killed in action.

Lieut. "Bill" Jarvis was one of the all-around athletes of the club. A fine horseman, one of the best sailors on the lake, and he also represented the Argonauts in many boxing tournaments, and played quarter-back on the rugby club. He was killed at St. Julien on April 25, 1915.

Lieut. Geoffrey Taylor, of the 15th Battalion, was reported under the dread heading of "missing" after the battle of Langemarck on May 1st, 1915. When war broke out he was a student at Oxford, where he had succeeded in making the rowing squad. In the opinion of Joe Wright, Taylor was the best stroke ever developed in Canada. He was a member of many championship crews and also was a star wing player of both the Argonaut and Varsity rugby clubs.

Probably there never was a rugby player so well known as Ross Binkley, who fell at the battle of Langemarck in May of last year. While not built on a large scale he was one of the greatest kicking half-backs that ever appeared on a gridiron. When he came to Toronto several years ago from his home in Dundas he joined the Argos and in 1912 was captain of the team, and the next year was elected manager.

Lieut. Arthur Muir, a young man of considerable wealth, and a great favourite both at Varsity and afterwards as an Argonaut rugby and rowing expert. He was severely wounded on May 21st, 1915, but despite his injuries led another charge of his men with the indomitable spirit of the Argos, and when he was killed was away out in front of his men.

BIRTH.

Following along with Lieut. Muir was Pte. Ardagh Coe, another Argo oarsman, and he fell on the same day as his officer. He also played on the rugby club and was a prime mover in the success of St. Simon's Lacrosse Club.

Of the Argonaut Rugby Club who captured the Dominion championship of 1914, the following are in uniform: Everett Smith, the clever half-back has just completed his course in the Royal Aviation School in England; Dr. Frank Knight is attached to the Dental Corps; Dr Smirlie Lawson is at hospital work in England; big Alex. Macfarlane is away at the front; Colin Simpson, the clever scrimmage player, has been gone a year, while "Mac" Murray is also an aviator. "Bob" Dibble is with the Sportsmen's Battalion while Bickle, Mavety, Simpson and Gordon Murray are also at the front.

Manager Ernie Laidlaw and Secretary James Dolan, of last year's team, are officers of the 198th Buffs, while everyone knows how big, pleasant whole-hearted "Glad" Murphy met his death just after he had completed his preliminary course in the flying corps.

Many other Argos are gone and are going every day, and the Toronto public have every reason to be proud of this fine organization of clean-cut sportsmen. We remember Alex. Sinclair at Rosedale in the fall of 1914, all decked out in his khaki uniform, remarking as he watched the Argos practice: "Those are the kind of men who will make real soldiers," and the light and dark blue aggies must have been proving the wisdom of his words ever since.

LAWN BOWLING.

The green is now fully open for the enjoyment of the members, the lawn is in good condition.

The skips will be selected next Monday, and the schedule for the season will start on Monday, June 19.

The first contest will be a full rink game, and will be called at 7:30 p.m.

The trophy for this contest will be silver cream and sugar sett for each member of the winning rink.

While the prizes are definitely the property of the winners when won, and cannot be played for again, yet they will remain in the custody of the club until the end of the season when they will be presented to the winners.

The trophies for the season are on exhibition at Mr. Fitzgerald's office.

Big Crop of Whiskers Adds To War's Horrors

NEW YORK, June 6.—Persons who take whiskers seriously will doubtless be interested to know that one of the greatest chilluluh bearing generations in the history of mattress making will result from the European War. Records have been searched, daguerreotypes carefully examined, barbers placed, and according, to the hard working experts, everything points to whiskers.

It seems that the history of pauperiers in the universe has ever been associated with armed conflict. When a nation takes up the sword it lays down the razor—in a manner of speaking—and so great is the natural tendency of self-effacement with most humans that once secreted behind a chin hedge the highly tickled warrior hesitates mightily about again venturing out into the open.

Take the whiskers of the United States, for instance, and be careful not to pull them. Up to 1845 there was hardly enough cheek fern in this country to make a paint-brush suitable for background work. Even now, when a safety razor salesman looks over the books and pamphlets of those days, he groans with a tremendous feeling of lost opportunity. Those were the happy barefaced days indeed.

Then came the civil war, and no American camp was complete without several tons of complexion hay. Scouts left both camps disguised as potted plants by the simple expedient of taking their hand off their chin, which is no plea for a scout's mitt anyway.

Years have passed—years and years and years have passed and passer and passed—and again the United States is a beardless country. No one thought enough of the Spanish war to raise a perspiration, much less a big bushy Van Dyke, and as a result the country has gone straight to the barbers.

But now we have the greatest war in history, and the whiskers will undoubtedly be something terrible to contemplate. It is probable that even the Japs will grow those barbed wire entanglements which have heretofore simply been used to distinguish a 370-year-old-Tokio resident from a Japanese school boy.

As we live we grow, but there should be a limit to everything.

New British Navy List Has Names of 2,500 Men of War

London, June 8.—Some queer names are to be found in the latest issue of the British navy list, which for the first time in many months contains a record of "H.M. ships." It begins with H. M. S. Abelard and ends with H. M. S. Zylpha and among the intervening 2500 ships there are some of the quaintest men of war names in all British annals.

Without giving away what they are these "war ships" are of all classes, from passenger steamships converted into patrol cruisers down to motor boats, and though no clue is given to the character of any particular vessel, one suspects that many of the incongruous names belong to those blunt-nosed trawlers that go mine sweeping in order that the lordly battle ships may proceed unscathed on their lawful missions.

Kipling has written the anthem of the sweepers, "Unity, Caribel, Assyrian, Stormcock and Golden Grain," though since he wrote it three of them have disappeared from the list of H. M. ships. But who will write the epic of the Lloyd George, the Lord Haldane, the Familiar Friend, the Young Archie, the Morococala, the Zena Dare, the Joseph and Sarah Miles, the Boy Scout, the By George and the Grenadier?

It would be gratifying to the English to believe that H. M. S. Perriby is a great merchantman but there is a suspicion that her peace time cargoes have been principally fish landed at Hull.

H. M. S. EDITOR.

H. M. S. Editor, too, might be a flagship at the very least, with a blue pencil rampant for her crest, and only George Graves could do real justice to the ideas conjured up by H. M. S. Happy Days. It often must have seemed a silly misnomer to her crew during the last two winters in the North Sea.

Many a name of the olden navy, of the navy of Drake and of Rodney, of Blake and of Nelson, figures in the list of the auxiliaries of the British navy of to-day. The Victory, the Mary Rose, the Hope, the Swallow, the Rainbow, the Fancy, all these fought the armada, and namesakes are part of the sure shield to-day, humbler parts, perhaps, but with their names none the less in the list of H. M. ships.

The Christopher, that fought at Sluys and that figured in the ships that played a part in Drake's circumnavigation, has come back at last into the British navy. There is the Half Moon, too, a name that has not figured in the fighting fleet since the battles of Barfleur and La Hogue in 1692; the Hawthorn repeats a name last recorded in 1545, and the Hector carries on a tradition that began with an armed merchantman on Lancaster's voyage to the East Indies in 1599, and has thirteen battle honors on its scroll, records of fights under men like Rodney, Cornwallis, Gardner and Keith. To-day, too, one meets again the Hero, that helped to hang Mounseer Conflans at Quiberon, that fought the Suffren five times and that was on the outskirts of Trafalgar.

THE HORTICULTURAL NAVY

The fact that the patrol ship Bluebell was mentioned during the preliminary magisterial trial of Sir Roger Casement, will give no information to the enemy for there are four ships of that name, distinguished as the Bluebell II., III., and IV., from the original. This has happened in the case of many namesakes of flowers among the new fleet of auxiliaries, including the Blossom, the Bramble, the Camellia, the Campanula, the Daffodil, the Dahlia, the Daisy, the Honeysuckle, the Hyacinth, the Laburnum, the Lobelia, the Magnolia, the Narcissus, the Pansy, the Petunia, the Primrose, the Snowdrop, the Speedwell, the Violet, and the Wistaria. The flowers that bloom in the British navy are plentiful.

It is curious, however, that the seafaring population does not remember the great names of the men of old—the seamen who taught Britain what the sea means to her. In all the list of auxiliaries to the fleet there appear to be only four names of admirals—Anson, Rodney, Rooke and Lord Chas Beresford.

Shakespearian names, on the other hand, are continually cropping up. For instance, Portia, Bassanio, Belmont, and Jessica, Iago and Othello; Falstaff, Hamlet, Juliet, Macbeth and Macduff; Hero and Beatrice; Oberon, Helena and Hermia; Perdita, Viola and Orsino. Some stage enthusiast probably is responsible for H. M. S. Pavlova, which with such a name, one may imagine a nimble craft of some sort, more apt to dance upon the waters than to plow through them, plough boy like. Art is represented by the Michael Angelo; professordom by the Huxley, music by the Elgar, and fiction by the Anthony Hope.

WEDDING BELLS

THOMSON—MICKS.

At the residence of Mr. and Mrs A. T. Micks, 425 Stewart street, yesterday morning a very interesting and pretty wedding took place when their daughter, Miss Mildred Ley Micks, was united in marriage to Mr. Charles Gordon Thomson, of Aberdeen, Scotland. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., pastor of the George street Methodist church, in the presence of many friends of the contracting parties. Mr. and Mrs. Everett were the attendants.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson left for a trip to Niagara Falls and Buffalo, and will reside in Campbellford.

Among the guests from outside places were Mrs. Mattries of Port Hope, Mr. and Mrs. Greenley of Campbellford, and Mrs. Rehill of Lindsay.

Mr. R. J. Mulligan of Omemee played the wedding march previous to the ceremony.

BARRIE—BURKE.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at "Spruce Knoll," Reaboro, Ontario, on June 7, when Lottie Mae, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Burke became the bride of Mr. A. Edmund Barrie of Peterborough, Ontario.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Herbert C. Bryant of Lindsay, in the presence of the immediate friends of the contracting parties.

To the strains of the beatuiful wedding march from "Mendelssohn," ably rendered by Miss Levada Burke the bride leaning on the arm of her father, and carrying a shower bouquet of roses, wended her way to a pretty and unique arch arranged on the spacious lawn.

The ceremony and congratulations being ended, Mr. Huber Burke, brother of the bride, sang "A Perfect Day," after which a dainty wedding repast was served.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold necklace set with pearls and diamond and to the pianist a pearl crescent.

The bride looked especially attractive in her wedding gown of white embroidered voile. Her travelling suit was of black taffeta worn with a picture hat of a contrasting colour.

The happy couple motored to Peterborough, where they will reside.

At home at 669 Water street, after October 1.

New Zealand Wood Chopper First in New War Contest

LONDON, June 8.—A new form of sport at the front, in the shape of an exciting tree-felling competition, 'somewhere in the woods,' is described by Mr. Percival Phillips, the special correspondent of the Daily Express, with the British armies in the field.

It began, he says, with friendly argument in a forest about the best method of cutting down a tree. The French woodsman admitted that the Maori was nimble and expert, but for his part he preferred a heavier axe and the less wasteful policy of shearing the trunk off close to the ground, thereby gaining at least three additional feet of good timber.

The Maori carried his opinion of French woodsmanship back to the trenches with his load of timber and the Anzacs took it up. Australian bushmen and New Zealanders found that they differed on certain points of procedure. Then the Canadians heard of it, and stalwart log cutters from the Yukon had a word to say about the methods of the Northwest.

Thus a competition was inevitable. Who shall agree when experts differ? Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, Maoris and Frenchmen agreed to pit their axes against each other in a contest of skill. The meeting place was chosen, the trees marked, programmes printed and an arena laid out with seats for all who cared to come. No less distinguished a warrior than General Birdwood agreed to take charge of the proceedings. As he indicated, the army needed wood, and this was a pleasant and instructive way of getting it.

STOP WAR TO CHOP WOOD.

The tournament began at 10 o'clock in the morning in the heart of a fine old forest. There were five competitions, one of tree felling by groups; an exhibition of felling by the French cutters regularly employed in the forest; a log chopping contest; a competition of axemanship and one of cross-cut sawig. It was a tournament of experts, watched by experts. I do not suppose there has ever been a more critical audience than the picturesque assemblage of sun-baked Anzacs, swarthy Maoris, broad shouldered Canadians, and the sturdy old French wood cutters who were the hosts of the forest and did the honours with befitting courtesy and kindliness.

Even more instructive than the tree cutting itself was the spirit of good fellowship which prevailed among these craftsmen gathered together from the ends of the earth. The French inhabitants of the British army zone get on particularly well with the Canadians and Anzacs. They like the breezy demonstrativeness of the men from the Dominions—and this feeling of cordiality was greatly intensified by this meeting in the forest.

Queenslanders who knew no French exchanged wholly intelligible comments with gray bearded "Bucherons" of the Pas-de-Calais; to see a Maori and an ancient woodcutter interpreting each other's signs was to realize the slight importance of being a linguist. Perfect understanding was established between the men of the forest as they sat under the beeches and watched one tree after another totter and fall with a crash.

CHEERED BY COMRADES.

The partisans of each group of competitors gave them cheery encouragement. There were three groups of Canadians, two of Australians, one of New Zealanders and one of local French woodsmen — each group having its own tree marked by a distinguishing coloured band. Unfortunately the competing teams could not embrace representatives of all the best talent, for some of the units of the Anzacs and Canadians are engaged in other duties in the front trenches. Had all the Dominion troops been available certain experts busy for the moment with hand grenades and sniping operations would have wielded the axe in stead.

Service axes were used by all the competitors save the French foresters, who preferred a domestic pattern of considerably heavier weight. Some of the Dominion entrants declared frankly that they could have made a much better showing with a heavier axe. Nevertheless, their records were very creditable.

New Zealand won the tree felling contest—each group to cut down three trees, the time being taken for each separate tree in each group—the trio being brought to the ground in twenty-two minutes, forty seconds. As soon as one axeman felled his tree he joined his neighbour on the next so that all three were chopping furiously at the remaining tall elm.

CANADA IS THIRD.

Australia came second, bringing down three trees in thirty-one minutes, eight seconds, while Canada was third at forty-five minutes, twenty two seconds. It must be remembered that the Canadian team had to be changed at the last moment, owing to the original competitors being called away on other duties.

The Australians proved themselves the fastest log choppers and their neighbours from New Zealand were close behind. Canada won the honours at crosscut aswing and again New Zealand was second.

Three little French boys were the competitors in the exhibition of tree felling by native woodmen. They were given comparatively small trees which they cut down with tremendous vigour, amid sympathetic cheers from the men of the Dominions, and there were more cordial cheers from Anzacs and Canadians when Berthe and Desire Albert were called forward to receive the first and second prizes from General Birdwood.

The best axeman proved to be a Maori and a French Canadian gained second place.

General Birdwood made a little speech, pointing out the advantage of sportsmanship, and the tournament ended in informal discussions between the champions and their adherents, which proved conclusively that each method of cutting a tree was without doubt the best.

BIG AWNING SPREAD FOR THE T. A. S. PARK

There has not been much activity in T.A.S. circles regarding the annual excursion, but the main features have been provided for. Two boats have been chartered, and work is now under way erecting an iron tube frame for a canvas covering 100 feet by 25 feet, for the dining quarters, an innovation that developed out of last year's despoiling shower. It ruined a perfectly good supper and liberally drenched many of the excursionists. But the T. A. S. men feel that every picnic is bound to run into an occasional wet day and this was the first rain it had encountered in quite a long list of enjoyable picnics. Hence, this year, they feel it is bound to be fair on Dominion Day but the big awning tent-shaped top will afford all kinds of protection should it be needed. Mr. Gene Hurtubise designed the covering, the frame of which is being erected at the T. A. S. park.

ELDER SISTER OF LILLIAN RUSSELL DIES A MARTYR

CHICAGO, June 8.—Mrs. Kate Schultz, eldest sister of Lillian Russell, died at Rutherford, N.J., yesterday morning. On the eve of Miss Russell's departure for Chicago, where she was to report the Republican convention, at which her husband, Alexander P. Moore, is working in the interests of Theodore Roosevelt, Miss Russell received the news that Mrs. Schultz's illness had taken a serious turn.

Mrs. Schultz was a Christian Science practitioner and had helped to found the church of that faith in Rutherford. She succumbed to typhoid fever, for which she had been treating others in her capacity as a practitioner.

Mrs. Schultz, before marriage to the late Edward Schultz, was known as one of the "three beautiful Leonard girls," the others being Mrs Leona Ross and Lillian Russell (Mrs. Alexander P. Moore). Because of Mrs. Schultz's cheerful philosophy and her indomitable courage, Miss Russell always alluded to her as "The backbone of our family."

Mrs. Schultz is survived by her four sisters—Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Leona Ross, Mrs. Hattie Colburn, Mrs Harry Allan (Susanne Westford), and by a son, Leonard Schultz, and a daughter, Mrs. Everett Martyr.

ITALY SENDS SYMPATHY.

Dismay in Rome Over Death of Earl Kitchener.

ROME, June 8.—The news of the death of Field Marshal Kitchener caused a profound feeling of dismay among the Italian public. The King and Gen. Cadorna, commander-in-chief of the Italian army, sent telegrams of condolence to King George. The Pope instructed Archbishop Bourne of Westminster to convey his sympathy to the British monarch.

A printer in making up the forms in a hurry got a marriage notice and grocer's advertisement mixed up, so that it read as follows:—"John Brown and Ida Grey were united in the flour by the quarter or barrel. Mr. Brown is a wellknown codfish at 8d per lb., while the bride, Miss Grey, has some nice pigs' feet, which will be sold cheaper than at any shop in town."

A CALL TO UNITED PRAYER

In view of the terrible battles raging at the present time, and the mourning of the nation for the loss of outstanding leaders, and remembering the great strain and sorrow of many of our fellow-citizens, and conscious of the duty and privilege of intercession, the Ministry of Peterborough are united in calling a union meeting of citizens for

FALL OF FORT VAUX WILL NOT RESULT IN VERDUN'S FALL

Neutral Correspoddent Declares Germans Will Never Reach Main Fort---Paris and the Army Remain Calm and Confident

NEW YORK, June 9.—The Paris correspondent of the Tribune cabling under Wednesday's date says: "In view of the deep interest and anxiety felt in America concerning Verdun, from whence I have this moment returned, I desire to inform you that in spite of the continued bombardment Verdun remains intact in point of its military defences. The civil sections, including the hospitals, have suffered.

"I had the honour of dining with General Petain and his staff Sunday. He is most confident and not impressed with the German successes about Verdun. The morale of his troops is superb, unconquerable.

"The most miserable feature of the Verdun affair is that the price at stake is the heritage of the Hohenzollern's. Hundreds of thousands of French and Germans are sacrificed striving for a prize which, according to all authorities, is of no military value whatever, that the Crown Prince may be made a Marshal of the Empire on the field of Verdun and, bathed in their blood, then have permission to return to Berlin.

"From my personal investigation and observation of conditions I believe that all the German armies may be concentrated on the task. While by sheer weight they may momentarily hold advanced points of defence, they will never reach Verdun. Never . . ."

FRENCH REMAIN CALM DESPITE LOSS OF FORT VAUX.

PARIS, June 9.—The fate of Fort Vaux, upon which the efforts of the Germans have been centred for three days, remains in suspense according to the latest reports received by the French War Office. Its loss would be regretted by France on account of the moral effect and for the sake of the garrison who struggled so gallantly amidst its shell swept ruins, but military critics assert that its possesaion would be of little benefit to the enemy.

The fort has long since been dismantled and is regarded by the French command as merely of value as an observation post. It is asserted that its occupation will not help the Germans to take Verdun any more than their capture of Fort Douaumont, which they held for three months without being able to make a step forward.

Behind Fort Vaux the enemy is confronted by an exceptionally strong inner line to the defence of which both nature and military art have given their greatest aid. This line includes the positions of Fronde de Terre and the heights of Souville and Tavannes which are crowned with forts. Vaux forms an advance work which supplements the defence of Souville fort, and was constructed with a view of sweeping the ravine which it commands.

As Vaux is the furthest point from the river Meuse of the Verdun defences it is less affected by the flanking fire from the French batteries west of the river than other positions. This explains why the Germans chose it as the point through which to make a determined effort to force a way to the inner lines of the Verdun forts, notwithstanding that by the conformation of the ground it was the most difficult to attack in the whole region.

German Attacks Were Repulsed On the West

Official Communique of the French War Office Says German Attacks Are of the Utmost Violence, With Heavy Losses For the Enemy

FRENCH OFFICIAL

PARIS, June 9.—The French official admission that the Germans in their attacks of late yesterday penetrated a French trench in the Caillette woods on the east bank of the Meuse, is made in the official communique of the French War Office today. Elsewhere attacks were repulsed. The Germans are continuing their attacks on the two kilometer front east and west of Thiaumont farm, says the statement, which characterizes them as being of the utmost violence. On the west bank two small attacks on Hill 304 were repulsed. At all points the German losses were heavy.

WATCHMAN'S BODY PARTIALLY BURNED FOUND IN FACTORY

Woodstock Workmen Find Remains Lying in Elevator Shaft.

WOODSTOCK, June 9.—Where two of the workmen at the Harvey Knitting Company went to the factory they discovered the body of the night watchman, Fred Hurse, at the bottom of the elevator shaft. Nothing is known as to just how the man met his death.

Evidently he had fallen down the shaft in going the rounds of the factory. He must have had a lighted lantern in his hand, for a broken lantern was found beside him and his body was badly burned, evidently from the lantern exploding.

How the factory escaped catching fire is a mystery. Mr. Hurse was a married man with a family, living on Dundas street east.

Dr. Krupp was summoned, and he stated that the man had been dead for hours. He ordered an inquest. A jury was empanelled and viewed the body, after which it adjourned.

2. How does Jesus Christ look upon and treat a Christian who has fallen into sin?

3. If we detect a brother in sin, what is our immediate duty to him?

4. If instead of telling the erring one of his sin in a loving way, we say nothing to him, but tell it to some other person, how would you characterise the act?

5. If a young cigarette addict or a drinker, who has pledged himself to quit the habit, falls into the same sin again and again, what should we do with him?

6. May a Christian by the grace of God, live without committing wilful sin? Give your reasons.

7. Verse 2. In how many ways can we bear one another's burdens?

8. Verse 3. In what grade of unworthiness would you place the sin of pride and self deception?

9. Verses 4, 5. In what successful way may a man test his own strength to bear the burdens or perform the duties, which rest upon him?

10. Verse 6. Can a man live careless of the needs of others and be a child of God? Why?

11. Why is it that all true Christians are eager to impart to others their knowledge of salvation?

12. If a person is not anxious to talk to others about the wonderful salvation revealed in the Bible, is that or not, and why, a sign that he does not enjoy salvation?

13. Verses 7, 8. What sort of a crop will that church member reap who seldom speaks of spiritual things, but talks quite freely on politics, business and sports? (This is one of the questions that may be answered in writing by the members of the Club.)

14. Verses 9-11. What guarantee have we for success and reward if with loving hearts we day by day endeavour to do such good as we are able?

15. Verses 12, 13. When people try to press upon others certain religious forms and ceremonies, or abstract creeds, what is the motive which impels them?

16. Verse 14. What is it to "glory in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ," as Paul meant?

17. What must be the condition of our souls and the practice of our lives to be able to say truthfully "the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world?"

18. Verse 15. What is the one great matter that over shadows all other matters combined, and why is it so important?

19. Verse 16. What is the one rule by which our lives should be governed, if we would be happy in time and eternity, and to the extent of our influence, impart the same blessedness to others?

20. Verses 17-19. What was the evidence of Paul's supreme consecration to Christ, and what evidence should we produce that we are followers of Christ?

Ques.: "How much walking time" do you lose?"

Ans.: "Come again, Joe, I don't see it."

Ques.: "How often do your employees take a walk at your expense?"

Ans.: "Say—it's lunch time, don't keep me."

Ques.: "Wait a minute, this means hundreds of dollars to you. Answer me this one—where is the time recorded in your plant?"

Ans.: "At the factory door, of course."

Ques.: "Then they do take exercise at your expense? Your employees, I mean. They can take a quite a promenade couldn't they, from factory door to department door?"

Ans.: "Promenade, nothing. Why, what, what's the point?"

Ques.: "Why not put a Time Recorder at Each Department door? Then your employees can take all the time they need in the halls or the lavatories or cloak rooms. But they can't get into the bench until they are all ready for work and just then they "punch the clock." How about it?"

Ans.: "Sounds good. Put me next."

Ques.: "Will you write a letter TO-DAY? Address it to the International Time Recording Co., corner McGill and Notre Dame Street, Montreal, or to their Head Office, Anderson street, Toronto, for latest folders and prices. Remember your strongest competitor may be able to under quote you because he buys the biggest of all raw products, WORKING TIME, closer than you do. Shouldn't delay, should you?"

GERMANY IN FACT, IF NOT IN DEED FIGHTING ITALY

Imperial Appeal Court Decides They Are Actually at War

AMSTERDAM, via London, June 9.—The imperial appeal court at Leipzig has rendered a verdict in which it is stated that Germany is actually, though not formally, at war with Italy. The case in which the verdict was rendered arose over a dispute about a war clause in a contract for a supply of Italian produce. The court decided that "formally a condition of war does not exist between Germany and Italy, but, nevertheless, in view of the Austro-German alliance, it must be considered that Germany shares in the Austro-Italian war because she is bound to send troops to replace on other sectors the Austrian troops sent against Italy."

TWO MORE WEEKS OF RAIN COMING

This is Prediction That Peterboro's Weather Prophets Make

Mid all the delightful showers of this morning, and, in fact, for the past few days, the best little weather prophets of Peterborough have been singing a doleful dirge. It may lack rhythm and a few other things, and it is far from consoling, but it seems to bear the earmarks of being at least a safe bet. Say the prophets: "It will rain until June 21." June 21 is two weeks away. It is "officially the first day of summer. It may be unofficially the first day of a real dry spell.

Because of the direction of the wind on March 21, predictions were made then that there would be rainy weather for the following three months. Two months and a half of these three have been successfully passed, although it might be better to say they had been "soaked," away. As the prediction has held good up to date, it might as well hold good for the remaining two weeks.

BRITISH LOSSES TOTAL 30,237 DURING MAY

LONDON, June 8.—British casualties in May were much heavier than in either of the two preceding months.

The total from all fields of operation, as compiled from published lists, is 1,767 officers and 28,470 men. The total in March, including officers and men, was 20,424, and in April 20,871.

VERDUN DEFENDED BY THE HEART OF FRANCE

Gabriel Hanoteaux, formerly minister of foreign affairs in the French cabinet writes of Verdun:—

Verdun is defended not by ruined walls, not by its forts, not by its hills, not even by the batteries or the other arms crowded into this little corner of the country, not even by the enormous anthill full of men who crowd forward to every menaced point, but Verdun is defended by the heart of France which animates this multitude, which has built these houses, these villages, this cathedral, and this city. And here! felt the pulsation of this heart of France dominating in its rythmic measure the noise of the cannonade. The heart of France is there now, it will be found elsewhere tomorrow perhaps, wherever it is needed. Leaders and soldiers all know it, they feel it beating in them and around them saying:

"You shall not pass!"

FRENCH MODERATION

My psychological impressions of what is happening at Verdun can be given in a word, which, it seems to me, can apply to the whole war. This formidable struggle is that of German pride, swollen by fifty years of success, with French moderation, made wiser and unmerited reverses.

The German effort is the effort of a parvenu, magnificent, showy, heavy and superabundant; the French effort is careful, well considered and well adjusted, just what is necessary and never too much. The Germans are sacrificing much to the hypothesis, while the French cling to reality.

The admirable thing that one notices first at Verdun is the perfect subordination of the arm which executes the work to the mind which orders it. One feels the ability of the high command everywhere.

The first gauge of the success at Verdun is the morale and the mastery of the high command. The physiognomy of Gen. Petain has still something enigmatic in it for the country at large. His rise has been so rapid that one judges him badly. You see him suddenly in the full light as general in chief. But if you approach him the clouds are quickly driven away. Of a nature that has perfect equilibrium, he naturally inspires calm and sangfoid, accepting without murmur or jubilation the divers vicissitudes of fortune. Just a year ago a man well known in army circles said to me:

"You will hear of a colonel who has just been made a general; his name is Petain."

The high command took notice of this man; it recognized his aptitude in the field. All the grades in the scale of advancement were passed in a year, and here is that colonel of yesterday at the topmost height, always calm and always cool headed. It is due to the force of our democratic army and to the honour of our generals that such advancements are possible.

AND THE POILU

Now for the soldier, the poilu. All honour to him! He is legion! One sees him everywhere, but he talks little. The general impression is that of cool and silent courage, just the opposite to what one might expect of a French soldier. Life in the trenches is not rose colored, he knows it, and there is no one like him to describe it. Here are a few lines from a soldier's letter—they give the idea:

"The country itself is not gay, a forbidding looking city, poor little villages in the country, few trees and bare hills extending in every direction; on their tops cannon. Everywhere soldiers, nothing but soldiers. Everything is abandoned. There is no longer any place for pity. You don't laugh, you kill without mercy. A man's life counts for nothing."

There is a description with no flowers to it. Thus it is, the army is grave, it only does its duty. The dominating idea is the sacrifice of life, a willing and predetermined sacrifice.

The battle of Verdun is a terrible experience from France, but the entire country will come out of it consecrated and greater. These men are the sons of a healthy nation; they will bring back to their mother, France, the health of force and—what won't do any harm—glory. The psychology of this army oversteps the bounds of collective psychology; it will be a source of instruction and marvel to history.

WOMEN'S STOMACH TROUBLES

The Great Woman's Medicine Often Just What Is Needed.

We are so used to thinking of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy exclusively for female ills that we are apt to overlook the fact that it is one of the best remedies for disorders of the stomach.

For stomach trouble of women it is especially adapted, as it works in complete harmony with the female organism, since it contains the extracts of the best tonic roots and herbs. It tones up the digestive system, and increases the appetite and strength. Here is what one woman writes showing what this medicine does:—

Newfield, N. Y.—"I am so pleased to say I can recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as an economical and beneficial remedy in most ailments pertaining to women. At least I found it so by only taking two bottles. I had indigestion in a bad form and I am now feeling in the best of health and owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. BURR WILLIAMS, R.D. No. 29, Newfield, N.Y.

Many women suffer from that "all gone feeling," and "feel so faint," while doing their work. Ten chances to one their digestive system is all out of order. A tablespoonful of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after each meal should completely remedy this condition in a few days.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My boy, Frank, seemed weak chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Kings, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

WE WONDER WHY?

The following poem was written by Gunner Horace Coon, who left Peterboro with the 33rd Battery:

A land, so fair, rich, fertile and so good,
Gently rolling to the northern sea,
Hill and dale, green fields, babbling streams and wood,
Once so peaceful, pleasant and so free,
But now scarred as with a mighty blight,
And from its labored breath ascends a sigh;
Its beauty marred, and devastated quite;
I pause to meditate—AND WONDER WHY?

A dug-out, damp and fresh in mother earth
Burrowed 'neath the ground and making there
A dwelling place for man without a hearth
Where for safety he may fly as to his lair,
His bed for blankets two, his pillow is his kit
While just above, his rifle slung on high
O'er this abode, outside the night is lit
By fire and bursting shell—I WONDER WHY?

A home, so far removed from dug-out, trench or hut,
Yet not distant in spirit, thought or loyalty,
Tranquil it seems all comforts have they there, but
Mother, sister, sweet-heart, all anxiety;
For far away, in place with hardship fraught
A brother, son or much-beloved may lie
Victim of savage foe, who has taught
The world that hate still raged in human heart—BUT WHY?

O! Why this desolation? A country laid in waste
As stricken by a plague? While struggling there
Like dogs of war, loosed, and face to face,
Men cut down men, deserting home so fair,
Ah! Why this hell? And such poor mortals we Forget that we are judged by One so high:
God understands—'Tis now for us to see
Where miserably we have failed—YET WONDER WHY?

"H.W.C."

The above poem was written by Horace Coon, who is now serving his King and Country at the present time "Somewhere in France."

It was received by us for publication.

In Danger of Collapse.—A clergyman preaching in a country church for the first time was delighted to find the congregation very attentive, and told the verger so after the service. The verger replied — "Lor' bless you, sir, we was all looking for you to disappear." "Why, what do you mean?" said the clergyman. "Well, sir, you see, the pulpit is rotten, and there's been preached in this ten years or more."

CARRYING HAND-GRENADES

Grenade fighting has become of the utmost importance in modern trench warfare, and there are various varieties of these weapons, both for hand fighting and for firing from rifles. Whenever there is an attack by either side a number of men are specially told off as grenade-throwers. These men are trained to throw their grenades quickly and accurately, and keep steady showers bursting among the Germans. In a charge the grenade-throwers usually are well in the rear, and carry their grenades in special bags or panniers. Each man has two panniers strapped round him. The panniers are made of strong canvas, and hold ten or a dozen grenades. These grenades, by the way, have each a long piece of webbing attached to them, which unrolls when the missile is thrown, and causes the grenade to fall head downwards and to ensure explosion.

WOMEN MAN LIFEBOATS

Brighton Heroines Replace Fishermen Needed Elsewhere—At Gas Works

Women have, indeed, an opportunity now of showing what they can do, and wonderfully are they rising to the occasion. The latest new idea hails from Brighton, England. The lifeboat, of course, lives in a house well above highwater mark, and to transport it to the edge of the waves and launch it through the stormy breakers in case of need is a considerable undertaking. In ordinary times there are always a body of fishermen and shoreworkers available to lend a hand in all this work. But now these stalwart fellows are no longer on the beach. Some are in the army or the navy; others are engaged in land employment; and though the lifeboat's crew remain ready for their dangerous and sorely-needed task, the launching would be a difficulty.

The Brighton Committee have called upon the wives, sisters and daughters of the boat's crew to come to their rescue; and the women have responded in their full strength. They are being trained in their new duties; and recently an excellent launch was made of the lifeboat, almost entirely by women—mothers still in their prime and their girls in their early teens working side by side with splendid results. Not infrequently in the history of the lifeboat service women have given help in emergencies in the launching; and we all remember having heard of Grace Darling, the Northumbrian maiden of one-and-twenty, who alone assisted her father, a lighthouse-keeper, in a wonderfully dangerous rescue from a wreck, her mother helping to launch the boat. That was a more than common exploit; but much courage and endurance will be called for from Brighton women if they have to launch the lifeboat in the teeth of a gale. Brighton Gas Company is also employing women laborers; and the Liverpool dockers alone prevent women from unloading the ships.

Ferns will not do well if placed on the window sill. They cannot stand a draught.

COULD NOT BEND DOWN

COULD NOT WALK STRAIGHT

BACK WAS SO BAD.

The bad back comes from the kidneys, and unless the kidneys are carefully watched and properly regulated many serious troubles may follow.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure the kidneys so that they will stay cured.

Mr. J. A. Lubinlecki, Dauphin, Man., writes: "It is my pleasure to write you in regard to Doan's Kidney Pills which I have been using for some time for kidney trouble, which used to affect my back so that at times I could not bend down nor could I walk straight. I learned about your pills from your almanac, and I bless the happy hour I thought of buying this medicine. One time a druggist persuaded me to buy —'s Kidney Pills, saying they were just as good, in fact he guaranteed they were. I yielded to his advice, and what was the result? I had bearing down pains in my back for two days, so I took the balance of the pills unused to the druggist and told him to give me Doan's Kidney Pills as they would stop the pain in twelve hours at the outside. He told me he was sorry I did not use more of the pills, and lengthen the time to await results. I told him there was no need of waiting with Doan's Pills; they go right to the spot. No substitute for me."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; See that our trade mark, "The Maple Leaf," is printed on both the label and wrapper.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Story of the Flying Dutchman

By MARGARET C. DEVEAUX

The legend of the Flying Dutchman has come to us in various forms. One of them is that a seaman of Holland, Vanderdecken, sailed in his ship, bound around the Cape of Good Hope to the east. He was never again seen alive. In attempting to weather the cape he met with head winds, losing his temper and defying heaven with a great oath. As a punishment for his blasphemy he was doomed to make unsuccessful attempts to weather the cape till the crack of doom.

Many years ago, before steam had taken the romance out of sailor life and before ships could go to China by way of the Mediterranean, the Suez canal and the Red sea, an American merchant sailed from New York for Bombay in the packet ship Albatross. The gentleman, whose name was Van Cortlandt, had descended from the Hollanders of that name who had settled on Manhattan Island in the seventeenth century.

His eldest daughter, between seventeen and eighteen years old, was a girl with an expressive face, which denoted a deep undercurrent of feeling. Her eyes were her most notable feature, being large brown ones, which gave one an impression that she was filled with wonder. And yet it would seem that this, instead of being remarkable, should be natural to any one contemplating the marvels by which we are surrounded. Perhaps these persons appear in a state of wonder because they are nearer by nature to the border which separates us from the infinite.

Maria Van Cortlandt would sit all day on deck peering out on the boundless ocean trying to form in her mind an image of its vastness, or looking upon the clouds drifting up in the heavens or the gulls soaring above the masts. Sometimes it seemed to her father, who adored her, that she was not thinking of the ocean or the heavens, but of that other spiritual world a vision of which is denied to ordinary mortals. Then he would sigh, for it seemed to him that the abode in mortality of such persons is more transient than in persons of a less spiritual nature.

One afternoon when the vessel had just begun to point her prow more eastwardly to round the cape a ship was seen astern coming in the same direction. The captain of the Albatross stood on the poop deck, his glass leveled at the stranger, surprised at the position of her sails. While those of his own ship were set to sail before the wind, the coming vessel had been close hauled. The skipper had never before experienced in steady weather a wind blowing in two different directions.

It is a fact well known to navigators that a ship will move faster with the wind abeam than when dead aft. Obeying this law, the stranger was gaining on the Albatross. As she came on the face of the Albatross' master assumed a more amazed expression. There was an old fashioned look about the other ship that he had never before seen on any craft. Her sides bulged below her decks, which were narrower, she was very high astern and was built up curiously forward.

And now a few figures began to take form on deck, going about upon their various duties—some coiling ropes, some mending sails, while others lay about smoking enormous pipes. When the vessel came abeam of the Albatross a man was seen standing on the high deck astern who seemed to be the master. His figure standing out against the sky showed him more plainly than the others. He wore a costume that had passed out long before; full breeches to the knee and a short coat with flaring skirt. His face was young, but there was an old look about it. His hair was long, his eyes were large and set deep in his head.

But the most remarkable feature of this strange craft and her antique looking crew was yet to come. Sailing much faster than the Albatross, the stranger passed her in a few moments. As she went by every eye on her was fixed on those on the Albatross as those on the Albatross were fixed on the vessel and her crew. The young master on the poop deck extended his arms to Maria Van Cortlandt with a mute appeal on his face. To the astonishment of those beside her, Maria's arms went out to the strange being.

Then there was a low swish of waters as the vessel drew away, leaving the Albatross in her wake, and Maria fell over in a swoon. Every eye of those near her was fixed upon her, and when they were raised for another glance at the receding vessel it had disappeared.

A man standing on the forecastle of the Albatross when the strange ship sailed away and out of sight said that he read the name—"The Flying Dutchman."

In the log book of the Albatross when she was broken up was found the entry, "The Flying Dutchman passed us bound southeast by east half east."

There is a story in the Van Cortlandt family of a Maria Van Cortlandt who went to China with her parents and met on the voyage a phantom lover in a phantom ship. On her return she is said to have died in the same latitude and longitude where the ghostly meeting took place. But the Flying Dutchman has appeared to so many persons at different times that there is nothing certain about this.

TEN COMMANDMENTS GIVEN FOR HUSBANDS.

The Rev. Robert J. McAlpine of the Central Presbyterian church, Buffalo, has laid down ten commandments which he said should be observed by men who would reclaim the marriage altar. This was a part of his sermon on "Modern Morality and Marriage." These are the Ten Commandments he gave:

"Do not look for perfection in your wife; an angel would never have married you.

"Do not expect more from your wife than you give her; like the rest of mankind she is obliged to pay no more than she owes.

"Do not be your wife's boss; be her partner.

"Do not try to love your wife; like a plant your love will bloom if you nourish it.

"Do not try to please your wife; but if it's all the same to you, do her way.

"Do not lead a double life; sooner or later there is sure to be a double head on collision.

"Do not forget to bring home a smile or two; nowhere else does it yield such dividends.

"Do not insist you are right; suppose you are.

"Do not forget that the hundred little things, they are what make you 'the best husband in the world.'

"Do not leave your wife to take care of her religion as well as your own; your religion is a man's job."

Marriage is the subject which interests two thirds of the men and women, both married and unmarried, of to-day. Dr. McAlpine said that two out of three modern novels treat on this subject.

TWENTY-SIX DEFEAT THREE HUNDRED MEN

Hero's Own Narrative of Epic Exploit of 22nd French-Canadians at St. Eloi

A vivd description of the battle of St. Eloi in which Lieut. Peter Browne of the 22nd Battalion distinguished himself, is given in a letter which this young officer sent home to his father, H. A. Browne of 2050 Waverley Street, Montreal. The official Canadian eye-witness, in his story of the fighting, made mention of the splendid gallantry of Lieut. Browne and the members of his machine gun section—which included Corp. P. Lambert, D.C.M., M.M. The 22nd Battalion of French-Canadians has established for itself a reputation for gallantry which is the equal to that won by any Canadian unit on the battlefront. The letter is as follows: "My Dear Father: Just a few lines to tell you that I am in London, on special leave. I will not write very long because I don't feel quite well yet after my terrible experience, but I wish to say that as a born soldier yourself, you may be proud of your son, Peter.

Pardonable Pride

"In a few weeks I will be made a captain. I am recommended for the Victoria Cross, and it is even rumored that I may get the Legion of Honor. It looks very foolish to talk like this, but it appears that I succeeded in doing something 'wonderful' or, rather, 'splendid,' as Gen. Turner, V.C., told his staff. I managed, God knows how, to knock out more than three hundred Germans with but a handful of men—twenty-six. Everybody, from generals down, came down to see me. Even Gen. Lessard wants to see me. Do not think I exaggerate, father, dear. I am glad I succeeded in doing good.

"For three hours I gave orders to majors and captains. 'That young fellow is as cool as a cucumber,' said Gen. Kitchen. I cannot give you any further details, for my memory is a blank or nearly so; but I may say that I went through the most gruelling experience. I made parapets with dead Germans and Scots. We had to fight with cold steel, as rifles refused to work on account of the mud.

Carried Shoulder-high

"The Germans attacked us at 3.45 a.m., when I had only six men left alive (after an intense bombardment). Breast to breast, steel to steel, we met, and came out top dog. Later I managed to scrape together about twenty-five stragglers, and with those (belonging to all regiments) I held the line against repeated attacks. Personally I killed three Germans. My blood was up, and I fought like a fiend with my empty revolver, my steel helmet and even my fists. I may tell you, father, that the 'little lieutenant' is now a byword in the 2nd Division. Regiments (the 24th of Montreal was one of them) came in a delegation to cheer and carry me shoulder high around the rest camp. All I had on me then was a pair of breeches (given me by Gen. Turner himself) and an army blanket.

"I must leave you, as my head is rather 'heavy.' Best kisses to mother and all. Tell mother dear that her prayers protected my life in a most auspicious manner. My! But you soon find out here that there is a God. Lovingly your son. (Signed) Peter L. Brown. P.S.—Father, this affair I hope is the stepping stone, but my luck is wonderful."

Ask Belgium

Christopher Rehhan, president of the Krieger Verein and of a number of other German associations in New York said that if an enemy sought to invade the United States the citizens of German birth would be among the first to answer a call to arms. Asked if they would respond with the same fervor if Germany were the invader, he declined to answer on the ground that the question was absurd, that Germany would always be among the country's closest friends in the family of nations, and that nothing on earth could ever induce her to attack the United States.

FRANCE'S MATERIAL MULTIPLIES DAILY

Production of Shells, Batteries and Machine Guns Keeps Rising—Marvellous New Howitzer—No Strikes

W. L. McAlpin writes from Paris to the London Daily Mail as follows: Hindenburg, addressing his troops on the occasion of his army jubilee, made the astounding statement, "The enemy's strength is wearing out and final victory will be ours." The field-marshal evidently intended this declaration for home consumption. He is too well informed to believe it himself, in view of the humiliating reverses the Germans suffered at Verdun. If further proof were needed that France is far from weakening, but is growing daily more formidable, one has only to consult a report of the Budget Commission of M. J. L. Dumesnil, deputy for Seine-et-Marne. He had just returned from a minute inspection of the munition factories. His tour embraced workshops in the districts of Lyons, St. Etienne, Tulle, and the Chatellerault and Paris region. He is filled with enthusiasm at what he described as "the mightiest creative effort that a people has ever accomplished."

Await Hour of Destiny

"Industrial France," he says, "becomes every day a more immense arsenal. We can look with confidence to the future. The hour of destiny will find us ready. The appetite of the guns at Verdun, gigantic as it is, cannot keep pace with the shells waiting to be consumed. Our stocks of heavy and light artillery munitions keep piling up despite the frightful and voracious battle which is devouring steel by hundreds of thousands of tons. Guns are being turned out and batteries renewed with a rapidity which responds to all the necessities of the combat, and the motor transport service has met all the demands made upon it. It is largely due to our countless machine guns that we have shattered the onslaught of the Germans."

Rifles Seven-fold

According to M. Dumesnil, France is turning out rifles at the rate of seven to one compared with 1915. In eight months the daily output of machine guns increased five-fold, and shells are being manufactured from three to six times more rapidly than in 1915. In some artillery workshops production increased twenty-fold, and similar results are being obtained in supplying explosives, barbed wire, and other accessories. The latest triumph of French engineers is a new 16-inch howitzer which it said to be in all respects equal to the giant German howitzer of similar dimensions.

Senator Henry Berenger, discussing the military situation, asserts that it is impossible for France henceforth to lack any of the necessaries of war. "The country is now producing less with a view to repair wastage than to increase her offensive power." Strikes being impossible among mobilized workmen, the industrial strength of France is being utilized to the utmost, and the patriotism of French workmen does the rest.

ARMENIA AMBITIOUS TO BECOME A NATION

Unconquerable Longings of Volunteers Who Aid Russians—Massacre Was Penalty For Loyalty

Camillo Cianfara writes: Hrand Navarriants, an Armenian poet, brought to Rome some hitherto unknown and appalling details concerning the massacres in Armenia. Navarriants said the number of victims has not been exaggerated and proof has been secured showing that the government not only gave its consent but aided the Young Turk party to carry out the massacres.

"It was when our brothers in the Caucasus joined the Russian army advancing toward Van, that the Young Turk party began to suspect the Armenian population in Turkey of treason and decided on its destruction in order to prevent an hypothetical insurrection," he said. "The Armenian soldiers who were serving in the regular Turkish army operating in the Caucasus were immediately disarmed and sent in the interior to build roads and fortifications. Massacres began right after that in every Armenian town. The male members of the community, from the age of twelve up, were gathered in the public square or in front of the church and shot dead under the eyes of their terrified mothers, sisters or wives."

Young Turks Guilty

Conclusive proof that the Young Turks' crime was perpetrated with the consent of the government was found in the residence of the Governor of Koms, where seventy Turkish gendarmes had been sent to carry out the massacre of the local Armenian population. Turkey will once more plead an excuse that Armenians were planning to take advantage of the European conflagration to rise against Turkish rule and secure autonomy. Enver Pasha will once more state that the Armenian population assisted the Russians advancing towards Van. But nothing is more absurd and untrue.

The beginning of the European conflict coincided with the annual meeting at Erzerum of the Dacknacktsoutioun, the Armenian national association. The Young Turk party sent emissaries to Erzerum to invite the Armenians to pass resolutions urging their brothers in the Russian Caucasus to organise an insurrection in case of war between Turkey and Russia. The Armenians not only refused but warned the Young Turk party that intervention in the conflict would cause Turkey's utter ruin. Hence the Young Turks' wrath.

Reward of Honest Warning

"The price Armenia paid for her loyalty was more than a million men, women and children deliberately murdered. The Armenian population has recalled at last that the victory of Russian is their victory and two hundred thousand Armenian volunteers are in the rank and file of the Russian army of the Caucasus. This is Armenia's Holy War, a new crusade against her unrelenting enemy."

Speaking of the Armenian national aspiration, Navarriants said: "We rely for protection on the liberal and Christian nations of the world. What we now want is our freedom, our independence under the protectorate of England, France, Italy and Russia. The latter has promised to support our demands at the next peace congress, and we have reasons to believe the other nations will not oppose them. Several years ago Russia prepared a project to grant to Armenia a large measure of autonomy. The six Armenian provinces, Erzerum, Djarbekir, Kerput, Sivas, Bitlis, and Van were to be united under the sovereignty of a governor appointed by the Sultan and controlled by the Christian powers of Europe. To-day this is no longer sufficient. Galicia must be added to these provinces and Armenia given an outlet to the sea. In 1913 the project was rejected owing to Germany's opposition to it. This time we hope, the project will be approved."

Where the Ball Landed.—The following golf story comes from the Golden West: "The ball shot in the direction of the rough, but it didn't land on the ground. Why? Well, because a porcupine jumped up from his hiding in the rough just at the crucial moment and the ball landed on his back and lodged between his brimies. What next? Why, that animal ran right toward the green, and when he got there he shook himself. Out dropped the ball and it rolled right into the up, giving me the hole in one."

FOR A BEAR OF A SHINE

A Great Business Man's View of Recruiting

A considerable discussion has been aroused by telegraph summaries of a speech on the present methods of recruiting made by Lord Shaughnessy before the Montreal Board of Trade, on March 9th, the attached complete report is of interest, showing that this speech was not anti-recruiting but was a criticism of uneconomical methods of hurriedly authorizing new units while many of the other battalions are still far below their strength and without due consideration for the possibility of considerable delay in ocean transportation to Europe. Lord Shaughnessy suggests an improvement on the present methods of recruiting, namely, that employers should prepare for careful and intelligent canvas lists of employees who are of military age.

LORD SHAUGHNESSY'S VIEWS.

In his speech Lord Shaughnessy expressed unbounded admiration of the enthusiasm, energy and earnestness exhibited by Sir Sam Hughes in the formation of the Canadian army.

"When the war broke out," said Lord Shaughnessy, "Canada was indeed fortunate in having a man of his type available.

"I am, not, however, inclined to accept his figures as to Montreal. I cannot see how, even with a population of 700,000, we could raise 70,000 soldiers unless we made a draft upon the women—and I know some women who, though they might be good in the firing line, would be almost impossible in the matter of military regulations. (Laughter.)

"We are all agreed as to the purpose to be attained, but we may not all agree as to the best manner of attaining that end. Canada was, is, and will be, determined to do her full share as a Dominion of the Empire in this struggle. We have up to the present time done marvellously.

"But I cannot believe that the suggestion emanating from the Premier that we should endeavor to raise 500,000 men is a practicable suggestion. We have many duties to perform. First, we have our contribution to the army of the Empire. Then we have our work as manufacturers of munitions, and, though I hope not, it may yet be necessary to enormously increase that work in the not remote future. Then we have our agricultural work—we must help feed the British nation. Then there is another thing of little less importance—finance. It is of all importance that the finances not only of Great Britain but of all the component parts of the Empire should be maintained in unquestioned solidarity and strength.

"If we were to attempt to raise 500,000, or add 325,000 to our present army, we would be making a draft upon the working population of this country that would be seriously felt. Within the past few days I have received a communication from the Agricultural Department asking if the C. P. R. could not lend its assistance towards bringing 10,000 Russian agriculturists to the western provinces to assist in seeding and harvesting and taking them home after it is finished.

"With such conditions facing us we must go slowly about recruiting, and carry out the best plans for the country in a sane, methodical and businesslike way."

To-day, said Lord Shaughnessy, we had enlisted 275,000 men. Of these 70,000 had gone to the front, about 60,000 are in camp in England, and over 130,000 are under arms in Canada.

"Some of the first contingent are still in camp in England. Meantime we have 130,000 men here, representing an outlay of $10,000,000, or probably $12,000,000 a month, who by no process I know of can be moved across for a very long time to come.

"Probably it would have been better to have moved more slowly and saved some $5,000,000 a month for use hereafter, but we have them now and must maintain them.

"But will it be wise for us, with these 130,000 men, to go on increasing our financial responsibilities, increasing the debt of the country, and therefore decreasing our ability to be of financial service to the Empire when the time comes, if it should, when we are called upon for such assistance? (Applause.)

RESORT TO CONSCRIPTION.

"If the time comes we must make any sacrifice whatever to get the requisite number of troops to the front to save the situation. We must resort to conscription if necessary, although I do not think we are prepared for that, or that it will be necessary.

"But should not we follow different methods, confine ourselves to the units approaching completion rather than authorize more new battalions every day and start a competition that cannot but have bad results. In the Montreal district we have the 73rd nearly full, the 87th in the same position, and the 148th, 150th, 163rd, 199th and 206th needing all told 3,931 men, the French-Canadian battalions needing 2,267.

"Yesterday I noticed another unit authorized in Point St. Charles. Is this wise? Does it not occur to you as business men, that you would hesitate about building up an additional force of from 40,000 to 60,000 men, at a proportionate increase in expenditure, without any prospect of their getting across for a year or 14 months at any rate?"

As to recruiting, Lord Shaughnessy suggested that employers should prepare lists of employees of military age who might be canvassed, not with a view to pressure, but for careful and intelligent canvass. The commanding officers could apportion these names to prevent overlapping.

"This, I think," he said, "would be effective. Then in three or four months, when some of our troops have gone to the front, and been replaced in England by others from here, we can fill their places, and in any event we must provide to supply losses from military wastage." (Applause.)

System Was Full of Poison; Pains in Side and Back

Had Constipation For Many Years, But Was Entirely Cured by Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

The most common ailment and the greatest cause of disease and suffering to-day is constipation. Artificial food and sedentary indoor life combine to induce torpid, sluggish action of the liver, kidneys and bowels. As a result poisonous waste matter remains in the system and gives rise to pains and aches and affords a starting point for serious disease.

Infectious and contagious diseases are little known to persons whose liver, kidneys and bowels are kept in healthful activity, for there are no suitable conditions for disease germs to thrive in. Even common colds usually take their start when they find the system in a constipated, poisoned condition.

Mrs. Ed. Miller, West Flamboro, Ont., writes: "I can truthfully say that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have cured me of constipation. I suffered with constipation almost ever since I can remember, and for four years had pains at the left side of the back. If I walked across the kitchen floor I would have to sit and rest. That, I think, was terrible for a woman of twenty years. The condition of my blood was shown by pimples breaking out on my face. I suffered so much from pains and stiffness in the back, I am sure my system was full of poison. Dr Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have entirely cured me, and I feel better than I have felt for many years."

As a cure for constipation Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills stand alone, for by their action on the liver they awaken the activity of this organ, cause a good flow of bile, and hence remove the cause of indigestion, for bile is nature's cathartic. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

If you suffer from this painful malady, apply Zam-Buk. It is purely herbal, quickly eases the dull, gnawing pain, stops bleeding, ends the irritation, and in a short time completely and permanently cures. Zam-Buk should be in every home.

PILES

Mrs. C. Hanson, Poplar, B.C., says: "I suffered for years with bleeding piles. The pain was often so bad I could hardly walk. I tried remedy after remedy, and finally underwent an operation, but only got temporary relief. At last I tried Zam-Buk. Perseverance with this completely cured me and there has been no return of the trouble."

Russia, France and Italy Mourn Loss of Kitchener.

ROME, June 8.—The news of the death of Field Marshal Kitchener caused a profound feeling of dismay among the Italian public. The King and Gen. Cadorna, Commander-in Chief of the Italian army, sent telegrams of condolence to King George. The Pope instructed Archbishop Bourne, of Westminster, to convey his sympathy to the British monarch.

France's Regrets.

PARIS, June 8.—The tragic end of Earl Kitchener caused a deep and sorrowful impression throughout France, where he was better known and more admired than any other British general. The fact that Kitchener fought for France in 1870 was ever present in the French mind, and went far to obliterate any lingering resentment over the Fashoda incident. Premier Briand in telegraphing the condolences of the French Government to Premier Asquith, said:

"All France will regret from the bottom of her heart the loss of the great chief who caused a magnificent army to spring from British soil. My country will never forget that the brave and efficint organizer, whose premature end it now mourns with the British people, fought in the ranks of the French army 46 years ago."

Russia Mourns Him.

LONDON, June 8.—Count Beckendorff, Russian Ambassador in London, on paying a tribute to Kitchener said: "Russia's grief will deepen when she learns he met his tragic fate on a journey to Russia which he undertook at the Emperor's invitation. Russia thus has been deprived of an opportunity of paying to the late Field Marshal a high tribute to his great achievements in the war, which have been followed in Russia with keen admiration."

THE MACHINE GUN.

It Had Its Beginnings, of Course, in China.

The ribaudequin Chinos captured from the Chinese by the French in 1860 is probably the earliest type of machine gun known. Those who have knowledge of the Chinese believe that the model was produced somewhere about the beginning of the fourteenth century. It consists of a very heavy truck reinforced with iron on which are mounted four iron barrels, nine feet long. Since these barrels were practically stationary they must have been used for a volley of grape or case shot at very close range. They were fired simultaneously by a trail of powder leading to each fuse hole.

The next weapon important in the development of machine gun was the Danish nine-barrel gun mounted in sets of three on a two-wheel carriage. This proved of great value, and was effective in that one set of barrels could always be held in reserve while the other was loaded. It was about this time that America startled the English with their bronze revolving cannon, capable of firing three charges in quick succession. This gun was very popular in the War of 1812, and doubtless was responsible for some of our sensational sea victories.

A satisfactory machine gun was not found until breech-loading had been discovered. In 1860, Richard Gatling produced a gun which proved most successful in both the Civil and the Spanish wars. It is distinctly an infantry type gun. The ten barrels were set around an axis and fired in turn as the revolving mechanism operated by a crank brought them into position. Cartridges were arranged in a drum, and as one drum emptied another was put in its place. Experimental Gatlings were constructed which could give a thousand shots a minute. This gun had a long range and was used most effectively. But a grave disadvantage was the impossibility of avoiding frequent jams. Its weight and the necessity of operating the breech mechanism by hand were also serious objections.—"Scientific American."

RUMANIA IS READY TO JOIN THE ALLIES

Petrograd watches Balkan Situation With Growing Belief of Success

TURK ENMITY A BOOMERANG

GERMANS HAVE NOT PROFITED AS THEY HAD HOPED BY THE MOSLEM ALLIANCE.

By Montgomery Shuyler.

PETROGRAD, June 8.—The feelings of depression with which the news of the joining in the war on the side of the Germanic Powers of Turkey and Bulgaria was received in Russia have been gradually changing to a belief that things from now on are going much better in the Balkans for the cause of the Allies. The feeling had been current that the diplomacy of the Central Powers had been much more clever and far-reaching than that of the Allies since they had not only succeeded in drawing Turkey into the war but had been able to secure the active aid of Bulgaria as well.

It was felt that if the Foreign Office of the allied powers had been more wide awake there would not have been this result, and by so much the course of the war would have been shortened. This disappointment was keener as naturally the strong Slavonic tendency of the vast majority of the people of Bulgaria would have inclined them to the cause of Russia if only in gratitude for what that country had done in helping them in their long struggle against the Ottoman Empire.

On the other side, the failure of Russian diplomacy in not being able to induce Rumania to abandon her attitude of more or less strict neutrality and to throw the weight on her armed forces into the struggle on the allied side was only to be a continuation of that same deptitude. It has been hard for the Russian people to realize that their diplomacy could not have had better results, in Rumania at last, although it was more evident that the influence which the Germans had been gradually gaining among the Turks, or the Younk Turks at least, was the result of long years of careful and intelligent preparation for that very end on the part of the German Government.

German prestige and influence in Turkey could not be ascribed solely to chance or to the results of a sudden desire to win the favor of that country after the outbreak of the war, for it had to be admitted that for a long time their best efforts had been given to the development of consistent and intelligent propaganda to make themselves the chief factors in what Mr. Sasonoff, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, called in his recent address at the opening of the Imperial Duma the "German Caliphate."

MORE FAVOURABLE TO ALLIES

In the case of Bulgaria and Rumania, however, there had not been seen the results of such long-continued and systematic efforts, and the feeling was all the more strong that the German diplomatists had been able by their cleverness to cause results which they should really not have attained.

Latterly, and especially during the past month, the conviction has been growing that the entire situation in the Balkans with regard to Russia, and, in fact, all the Allies has been rapidly shifting and becoming more favourable for them. In the first place after a period of "watchful waiting" on the part of all the belligerent armies during the Winter, the Russian forces in the Caucasus, commanded by the Grand Duke Nicholas, started the operations long before the close of the Winter by the masterly storming of Erzerum, the most strongly fortified fortress of the Turks in Armenia or, indeed in all that part of Asiatic Turkey. This and the subsequent vigorous pushing of the offensive has caused the hasty withdrawal of large Turkish forces from Macedonia and the Balkans and perhaps from other parts of Turkey as well to reinforce the garrisons in places now threatened by the Russian armies. This again has caused the Turkish forces in Europe to be replaced by Bulgarian, German, or Austrian armies who could be spared from their former stations.

But it is not alone in a material sense that this defeat has had a remarkable effect on the people of the Balkans and the Turks themselves. For one reason or another the nations which joined the Germans and Austrians wanted something from them, and something must have been promised them in return for their active military support. What this something might have been is hard to say with definiteness, and it, of course, varied with the different countries.

But knowledge of the parties in power in Constantinople and Sofia and a cursory study of their policies during the recent wars in the Balkans, indicate the belief that they would not have given their armies and their best efforts to the Germanic cause without promises of adequate reward. Now it is thought, they are beginning to ask where their reward is coming from. It begins to look as if the boot were on the other foot, and that they would have done better to have looked to the other side for reward.

But the one great decisive factor of the season from the Russian point of view is the stubborn defense of the French around Verdun and the evident inability of the Germans to break through their lines even at the cost of uncounted thousands of lives, and with the aid of the most powerful and well-supplied artillery. Immense significance is attributed here to this attack and its repulse by the French.

It is generally considered here in well-informed circles that Verdun is, or will be, the turning point of the war, and that from now on it is merely a question of time, money and food supplies, all f which the Allies have.

It is stated here by high officials that the greatest possible change has been noticed in the last month in the attitude of Rumania, although the moment has not come, even if it ever comes, for her to abandon her neutrality and openly declare herself.

RUMANIA'S DILEMMA UNDERSTOOD.

It is recognised here and frankly admitted that for Rumania now to make the wrong choice would be practically her end as a Balkan power or even as an independent nation. Enormous pressure is being brought to bear on her to join the Central Powers, gold is running like water in the capital, and spies fill the streets and keep close watch on every stranger in Bucharest. But in spite of all this, or perhaps partly on account of it, Rumanian public and official opinion is moving steadily, and at present rapidly toward a definite espousal of the cause of the Allies.

It is recognised also that Rumania must make a selfish choice, that she must wait until she sees who is to be the winner before committing herself to any side, for the sake of her own future existence and national life. The strong Hohensollern leaning of King Ferdinand may be quite evenly balanced by the strong English bias of Queen Marie, herself an English Princess, but the leanings of the present Cabinet and Ministers are altogether away from the Central Powers. The Prime Minister, Mr. Bratiano, is said to have the situation wholly in hand and to be waitin, only for the moment. Whether he will so declare himself is, of course, impossible to forctell, but if he does it seems to be pretty certain on which side he will range the country.

Another factor in the delay of Rumania in joining one or the other side has doubtless been a hesitancy as to the comparative values of the territories which she might gain by successful participation in the war. Russia could well afford to offer her the whole of Bessarabia, which belonged to the united provinces of the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, (the modern Rumania,) from 1856 to 1878, when it was taken by Russia. The inhabitants of this region are altogether Rumanian in race, civilization and culture. On the other hand, Austro-Hungary might well offer to Rumania the valuable province of Transylvania now a part of Hungary, but which has been a constant source of trouble and conflict, owing to the fact that there are some 3,000,000 Rumanians living in it, the aspirations of whom all turn to Rumania for their future. They have been oppressed and annoyed in every possible way by the Hungarians in the general Magyarization which has been steadily going on in Hungary and their one idea is to amalgamate themselves with the Rumanian Kingdom as soon as possible.

They have been making all the trouble they could for the Hungarians in return for their treatment and it would not surprise anybody conversant with the situation there to hear at any time that they had revolted and thrown themselves into the arms of Rumania.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. E. W. Lear, Port Plasford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. A PAIN IN THE BACK

COMES FROM THE KIDNEYS.

When a pain asserts itself in the back you may rest assured that it comes from some derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back would be strong and well, and would be without a pain or an ache.

For backache, lame or weak back, there is no remedy to equal Doan's Kidney Pills.

They take out the stitches, twitches, and twinges, limber up the stiff back, and give perfect relief and comfort to all poor, suffering women who suffer so much from a weak, lame, aching back.

Miss Iva A. Perris, Mill Cove, N.B., writes: "I suffered for two years from pains in my back. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged until I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills. I thought it would not hurt to try them. I had only used two boxes before I noticed a great difference, and after I had taken four boxes I was completely cured. I would not be without them in the house. I can recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

RUSSIAN ADVANCE GAINS MOMENTUM

AUSTRIANS FALLING BACK ON WIDE FRONT

RUSSIANS BREAK AUSTRIAN LINES ON A 94 MILE FRONT

Advance Threatens to Envelope the Entire Austrian Army in the Region Affected---Austrians Are Being Attacked From Both East and North---Russians Have Pushed Forward Nearly Thirty Eight Miles at Places.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Examiner Special:

LONDON, June 9.—Information has reached the Russian Embassy in Rome that the Austrian front has been completely broken along a length of 94 miles to a depth of 37½ miles, according to a Central News despatch today from the Italian capital. The Russian advance, according to these advices, now threatens to envelope the entire Austrian army in the region affected, the Austrians finding themselves attacked from both east and north. Austrian Slav regiments are declared to have been seized with panic during the first attacks by the Russians, and to have surrendered without any real resistance.

Nineteen More Officers On Casualty Lists

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, June 9.—Nineteen new Canadian officer casualties have been added this morning to the 262 already received, bringing the total up to 281. To-day's list includes three killed in action, one missing and believed killed, ten wounded, and three missing. With the exception of Lt. G. K. B. MacKenzie, of Toronto, killed in action, all are apparently Western men, nine are Regina men or belong to regiments from that city, three are from Vancouver, two from Calgary, and one from Winnipeg.

Twelve Survivors of Hampshire Found

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 8.—Twelve sailors at least survive the sinking of the cruiser Hampshire, aboard which Lord Kitchener and his staff met death. The Admiralty announced the names of the survivors to-night, saying they were on a raft which was washed ashore on one of the Orkney Islands. They consist of one warrant officer and 11 men.

Although neither the name of Lord Kitchener nor of any of his party appears in the list, the news that there were survivors was received with expressions of relief, for now at least the story of the sinking of the cruiser and the loss of the Secretary of State for War will be told. Up to the present even the Admiralty has no information as to the cause of the disaster.

The news, too, has again suggested the possibility that other men on board the Hampshire—and in this connection the British public naturally thinks first of Lord Kitchener—may also have reached land on one of the rocky, uninhabited islands of the Orkney group, and, though unable to communicate with civilization, are safe. This hope, it is granted by those who mention it, is of the most meagre sort, with little probability that it will be fulfilled.

A vigorous search is being prosecuted for the bodies of Lord Kitchener and others aboard the Hampshire. Several bodies, including that of Lieut.-Col. O. A. Fitzgerald, Lord Kitchener's military secretary, are being brought to Thurso, Scotland, according to a despatch from that town to-day.

German Gains at Hooge Are Small

Special to the Examiner:

LONDON, June 8.—The situation at Hooge is unchanged, according to Sir Douglas Haig's report from headquarters to-night. There were no infantry actions to-day, but the artillery of both sides shelled intermittently both day and night. The principal activity in the past 24 hours has been in the sector between Vimy ridge and La Bassee Canal, where mine warfare has been, generally speaking, in favour of the British. Snipers near the Hohenzollern redoubt accounted for nine of the garrison. Just south of La Bassee Canal the British carried out a successful raid last night, inflicting losses on the Germans. The garrison of the raided trenches fled, leaving the dead on the ground.

GERMAN GAINS SMALL.

A despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Rotterdam says:

"Very violent fighting continues in and around the Ypres sector. On both sides the artillery actions are as fierce and sustained as any ever known on this part of the western front. Day and night the guns thunder without cessation, and shells are raining on the whole of the British lines near Boesleare, Zillebeke, Hooge and Gheluvelt.

"What slight advantage the Germans have so far gained is quite incommensurate not only with the scale of the efforts themselves, but also with the preparations. These indicate beyond a doubt that they planned, if not to break through the British lines, at least a reduction of the British salient with the possession of the ruins of Ypres as one of their objectives. Many days ago they brought to Flanders and mounted at points outside of the Ypres semi-circle a large number of new guns, mostly artillery of medium calibre. Last Monday or Tuesday also reinforcements came to Flanders. These consisted partly of blooded troops from Verdun, whose battalions were filled up with drafts of newly-trained young men.

"Nearly all the existing hospitals are full, while in Bruges, Ghent and other Belgian towns many private houses have been taken over to serve as lazarets.

"Another indication that the Germans expect big operations on this part of the western front is the removal of civilians from certain places, even in one or two cases where they had been employed in forced labour of a military character."

King's Prize Winner Likes Ross Rifle

Editor, Examiner:

TORONTO, June 9.—Sergeant Bill Hawkins, who in 1913 won the King's prize for Canada at Bisley, and was received here with great enthusiasm, and given a house and lot by admiring citizens, yesterday detrained among wounded soldiers unrecognized. He was wounded by German shrapnel at the front with the Nineteenth Battalion. Asked about the Ross rifle he said: "It is the best, finest and only rifle." He said all complaints came from men who did not know how to handle the rifle. He said he never saw one Ross heated up or jammed. "They say the Ross rifle is only good for target work," said Hawkins. "Don't Germans make good targets. They make the finest targets I have ever seen."

LONDON, June 9.—9 Reuter despatch from Amsterdam says that a statement has been issued from the Dutch Army General Headquarters stating that the army is thoroughly prepared and equipped for any possible war.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A SMITH TOWNSMITH FARMER

Mr. William Matthews Succumbed to an Attack of Heart Failure While Engaged in His Daily Tasks---Was well Known

FUNERAL TO-MORROW

Mr. William Matthews who resides on the first line of Smith township died yesterday afternoon about five o'clock as a result of an attack of heart failure. Deceased had been teaming during the afternoon and a few minutes prior to his death was returning to the barn on a waggon, when he was stricken with a weak spell. His son hurried to his assistance but his efforts to revive his father were of no avail and death resulted a few minutes later. Dr. Scott of Peterborough was summoned but the man was dead when he arrived. The late Mr. Matthews had been a sufferer from heart trouble for some months.

He is survived by one son William who resided with his father. His wife predeceased him about one year ago. The late Mr. Matthews has resided in Smith township for upwards of ten or twelve years. Prior to that he resided at Welcome near Port Hope. In religion he was a Presbyterian. He was well known and highly respected throughout the community and his death will be regretted by all who knew him.

The funeral will take place to-morrow.

Prospects of An Agreement

Latest Developments at the Chicago Convention

Examiner Special:

CHICAGO, June 9.—A further indication that prospects of an agreement were not completely shattered by the deadlock between the progressive and republican 'peace committees' last night was seen to-day when it was learned that conferences agreed upon practically identical reports to be submitted to their respective conventions. The Progressives submitted but one name, Roosevelt as their candidate for the Presidency, no meeting of the Republican conference committee was planned for to-day. The Republicans have not decided on name yet.

OYSTER BAY, June 9.—Col. Roosevelt to-day told newspaper correspondents, "I can see no chance in the situation which will call me to Chicago" he is still keeping in closest touch with the situation.

There was the usual demonstration following the Hughes nomination. Various States delegates raised their banners and paraded around the hall. The cheering was intense.

Senator Rolland, Governor Brumbraugh of Pennsylvania and perhaps a few others will be nominated before the day is out.

To-morrow the convention will likely get down to voting on nominees.

Progressive convention still strong for Roosevelt.

Dogs Must Have a License

Number of Owners Have Been Dealt With in Police Court

A number of dog owners have been before Magistrate Dumble lately, and in each case were fined two dollars for harbouring a dog without a license. It is the intention of the police department to enforce the dog by-law, and anyone owning a canine without a license may be under the disagreable necessity of appearing in police court. It has often been said that there are too many curs in Peterborough.

TWO MORE MOUNTED RIFLES MEN ON THE LIST OF CASUALTIES

Ptes. W. H. Rew and Ronald Rollo Are Reported Wounded --93rd Battalion Soccer and Baseball Teams to Play To-morrow--Battalion Orders--Gossip of Local Recruiting and General Military News.

Two more Peterborough men who left with B Squadron, 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, are officially reported wounded to-day in the persons of Ptes. Wm. H. Rew and Ronald Rollo.

Mr. H. Rew, 65 Crescent Street, was informed by a wire from Ottawa that his son, Pte. Wm. H. Rew, Mounted Rifles, was admitted to No. 2 Canadian Stationary Hospital, on June 3, wounded in the right thigh. Pte. Rew is one of the best known boys who left with B Squadron, having been prominent in Y.M.C.A. circles as a gymnasium class leader and basketball player. He was also known as a hockey player, figuring on the line-up of the Brinton team in the Mercantile League.

Pte. Ronald Rollo, whose name appears in to-day's list as wounded, lived in East City before enlisting. At the outbreak of war he joined the 24th Battery, but was rejected at Valcartier for some minor defect and returned to Peterborough, afterwards joining B Squadron of the 8th C. M. R. He was one of the biggest men in the squadron. His wife and children went to England last year when the 8th went overseas, and are now living in the Old Country.

Sergt. Wm. Theobald of the 93rd Battalion is home from Barriefield for a few days on leave.

The 93rd Battalion will open its sporting activity to-morrow afternoon at Barriefield Camp, when the 93rd ball team will tackle a team representing the 109th of Lindsay while the 93rd soccer team will meet the 130th of Smith's Falls. The 93rd expect to have two strong teams in action, although the soccer team will be weakened by the absence of two of its stars, in the person of Sergt. Geo. Coleman, who is on the hospital list, here, with an injured knee; and Lance Corp. Harry Norman, who is attending the Physical Training and Bayonet Fighting School at London.

J. E. R. MUNRO, Captain, Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

His Honour Judge Huycke has received a cablegram from Dr. Armour the celebrated physician, to the effect that he is attending Judge Huycke's son, Lieut. Douglas Huycke. The message states that Lieut. Huycke is severely wounded, but is progressing favourably. He is in hospital in London.

Gunner F. M. Eggleton of the Trench Mortar Battery, 1st Canadian Division, writing to his wife, Mrs. F. W. Eggleton, 539 Gilchrist street, has the following to say. A short time ago Gunner Eggleton was officially reported wounded. The letter follows:

"I am now in the best of health. It is very warm here now. I am glad your brothers have got into the game. We need all of them. If the slackers only knew what we are up against they would not hang back any longer. Tell the men to come over and help us.

"It was some experience I had in the hospital. Some awful cases came in from that hell of Ypres, where I got hit. I have lost some comrades there, too, and it makes me all the more anxious to get back there to avenge them. The Germans actually swept the ground with machine guns as we were being got out of the trenches after we were wounded. Some

Russian Successes Are Most Important

All Five Austrian Armies on the Eve of a General Retreat—Unprecedented Use of Artillery has Demoralized the Austrian Defences.

LEMBERG IS THREATENED

LONDON, Friday, June 9.—Special despatches from Petrograd express the belief that the Russian successes against the Austrians are far more important than appears from the official announcements.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent ventures the assertion on the authority of a prominent Russian expert that "all five Austrian armies are on the eve of a general retreat, and that Lemberg is in great strategic danger."

On the same authority it is asserted that " a strategic breach 100 miles wide has been blown in the Austrian front, involving the armies of General Count von Bothmer and General von Boehm-Ermolli, and part of that of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand."

According to other despatches, the Russian success is largely due to the unprecedented use of artillery, surpassing in intensity any previous efforts on either side on the east front. The retreat of many Austrian trench detachments was completely cut off by a curtain of shrapnel through which it was impossible for any living thing to pass, and the Austrians were thus compelled to surrender en masse.

The Times estimates the Austrian losse at 200,000.

The Valhynian fortress of Lutsk, 20 miles from the Galician frontier, fell into Rusisan hands last Tuesday, the first important capture by the Czar's forces since the great spring drive on the 250-mile front from the Pripet to the Roumanian border began.

The fall of Lutsk was announced by the Russian War Office to-night. Vienna does not yet admit the loss of the fortress, but stated officially to-night: "We reached to-night our new positions on the Styr. Lutsk is situated on the western bank of the river." The abandonment of the fortress was foreshadowed by yesterday's Austrian report that Emperor Francis Joseph's troops were compelled to retire into the plain of Lutsk.

New Invasion From North.

The capture of Lutsk threatens the Austrians with a new invasion of Galicia from the north. Vienna despatches express the fear that the abandonment of Dubno, the apex of the Volhynian fortress triangle, will become automatically necessary, and the fall of that stronghold would compel the Austro-Hungarians to retire within the Galician border.

The Russians, according to Petrograd, scored another notable success in the last 24 hours. Pushing forward in massed formation, with an unprecedented outpour of artillery, they pressed the Austro-Hungarian troops defending the "doors of the Bukowina" to the River Etrypa, taking strong positions on the Tribuchowice-Paslowice front. Both places lie a few miles from one another west of the Stripa and south of the important city of Buczac. This success, if followed up by further progress, menaces the Bukowina crown land with invasion and the whole Austro-Hungarian army defending it—estimated at from 250,000 to 300,000—with being cut off.

The Russian official report asserts that the total number of prisoners taken in the new offensive has been brought up to 54,000.

The Morning's Session.

There was an open meeting this morning, at which President Doughty of Guelph, presided, and welcomed the delegates and others who were present. The first speaker was Pres. Chas. Hammacott of the local union, who assured the delegates that No. 348 would see their stay here was a pleasant one.

Ald. Dobbin, representing the Mayor, who was absent from the city, gave the delegates a civic welcome and also spoke from the standpoint of the publisher, and his remarks were well received.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, spoke of the difficulties that would no doubt arise after the close of the war. He said there should be co-operation and harmony between capital and labour and that all should get together in an endeavour to solve problems amicably and take advantage of the situation when it arises, so that the masses of the people will be benefitted.

He hoped their deliberations would be productive of good and was greatly pleased to meet the delegates.

Messrs. Hugh K. Middleton and R. M. Glover gave a welcome from the employing printers of the city and an invitation to visit the printing plants of the city.

Safety First.

One important visitor was Chief Factory Inspector Burke, whose address was closely followed. Mr. Burke is chiefly interested so far as printing offices are concerned, in their sanitary conditions and their appointments so far as they prevent and diminish the probability of accidents. He consults both workmen and employer and his object at the meeting today is both to get and to give advice relative to his work and the work of the department. He will further address the meetings of the conference.

A vote of thanks was passed the speakers for their attendance and remarks.

The following composed the Credential committee, being appointed from the chair: Messrs. Campbell, Hammacott and Gallagher, and the Audit committee Messrs. Powell, Lavell and Elliott.

The delegates are being entertained to a trip over the Life-Lock in the government tug, the 'Bessie Butler.'

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1916

LET US PRAY.

If we have a real, a heart-and-soul belief in Almighty God as the supreme ruler and director of human affairs, we shall give heed to the call to assemble in the Murray street Baptist church at three o'clock to-morrow (Saturday) to pray for the country and empire in the hour of stress, for our soldiers in the field, for the wounded in body in France, and the wounded in heart at home. If we believe in God and that we are fighting in His cause, we must believe in prayer, as the only bond of our real relationship with Him, and the only expression of our desires for the cooperation and help of a Power, that is all powerful, whose goodness is over all his works, whose ear is always open to all who call upon him. If we have real and true belief we shall pray.

For, what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer?

COMING BACK.

In the matter of "coming back" the proverbial cat "is not in it" with the Russian bear. The bear has for some time been hybernating, as it were. A bag of some 50,000 Austrian prisoners and arsenals of guns and ammunition, show that Bruin is abroad again. Reports have been coming in for two, or three days, telling how the Russians have been smashing the Austro-German forces, and making notable advances; and this morning despatches record another bag of 14,000 Austrian prisoners, making a total of 61,000, in the last drive, and also state that five Austro-German armies are in general retreat before the advancing Russians. At the other end of the line the Italians are making strong progress against the Austrians, who are literally between two fires. Lemberg may soon again be in Russian hands. The course of the Russians is an illustration of the immense importance of munitions. There has been no lack of soldiers or great leadership. The lack of munitions compelled the retirement of the Russians from Gallicia by one of the most masterly of withdrawals. Now Russia is well provided with war material, and is making splendid use of it. Germany forced the war upon Europe when, after forty years of preparation, she was literally armed to the teeth and her opponents unprepared. If the Allies had been as well equipped as Germany was in the beginning, the war would have been over long ago. Now that, in respect of preparedness, the terms are more equal, Germany and Austria are in for a smashing, and the beginning of the end seems to have begun in the East, and will spread. The Austro-German armies are between the jaws of the nut-crackers formed by Russia, in the East, and Italy in the West. The steel ring is closing in. The Teutons are at bay; wherever they turn they see resistless forces facing inward.

WE HAVE ONLY TO DO IT.

The following, worth studying and heeding, article, appears in the Toronto World, under the heading, "Making History at New Glasgow":

Within a few weeks the keel of a new collier for its coasting trade will be laid by the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company. It is to be a steel vessel 220 feet long, and of about 2,000 tons dead weight capacity. The stem, stern post and rudder forgings, all propelling shafting, propeller and all fittings will be made by the "Scotia" Company at their New Glasgow plant. All the frame angles, floor plates, etc., will be rolled at this plant. In short, the bulk of the building material will be furnished by the "Scotia" Company.

Col. Thomas L. Cantley, the directing force of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, believes that the launching of this vessel may inaugurate an era of naval and merchant ship construction in Canada. He have all the raw material, highly equipped plants, and highly intelligent labour. Why, therefore, should we not be able to build ships?

Sixty years ago the little colony of Nova Scotia ranked fifth among the shipbuilding nations of the world. Then the Yankee clipper and Canadian sailing vessels were to be seen in every harbour of the world. That in both countries an industry in which they took pride and greatly excelled should have languished miserably and all but died, requires some explanation which it would be idle now to attempt. Suffice it to say that the wrongs of the past should be retrieved and our government should speedily extend the protecting wings of the national policy to a great national industry.

Our shipyards on the Great Lakes are successful in spite of great handicaps, but we have no shipbuilding on the Atlantic coast. Col. Cantley's collier will demonstrate the possibilities for the development of a great shipbuilding industry in this country, and the creation of a Canadian ocean marine. As she slips down the ways into the East River she may put a red letter day in the calendar of Canada. The material progress and realization of the richness of Canada's resources can never come except by development. It is self-evident that they never can come from importing what could be made at home, nor in exporting our raw material and refining our minerals and working up to commercial condition in a foreign country any or most of our raw resources. There is no earthly reason wh we should not refine our nickel in Canada. The smelting of zinc ores in Canada is a new industry, and if we have to thank Sir Sam Hughes for it, we have to thank him for an inspiration and demonstration of the ability of Canada to do things that are worth while. Of course war necessity drove us to utilising our zinc ores as one means of saving the country. Another and higher form of patriotism would be to save Canada to herself, industrially and commercially; to help her to find herself, to realize her strength and her ability to make the most of the tremendous resources we are dowered with. If we should in justice to ourselves refine our nickel and other ores in Canada; if we should in justice to ourselves and the highest material national interests, manufacture our pulpwood into the ultimate form—paper—in this country, it follows that a truly national policy would be to do everything by ourselves and within ourselves, that can be possibly so done.

Canada is a producing country in the largest sense. We produce things to be sent to all quarters of the globe. If we would get the largest benefit we should be in a position to do the transporting as well as producing. We have provided internal transportation facilities liberally, but we have stopped short at the sea shore. As the World points out above, we at one time did much shipbuilding in Canada; there was a time when Canada ranked third in the possession of shipping. We can take our old place in this regard; there is nothing to prevent us but government inaction and indifference. Canadian enterprise and capital are ready if they got a little needed help. We have all the raw materials for building a ship from truck to keelson. We have shown that we can build ships. We have plying our great lakes as fine steamers, in line, in moul, in staunchness and propulsive strength, in fitting and furnishing, as are afloat on any waters—built in our own lake shipyards. We can make, and have made, the most powerful and perfect dredging machines that can be demanded, in our home building plants; we have turned out in ship yards in Montreal, the biggest and strongest ice-breaking steamer in use—we build ice-breakers for Russia, why not freight steamers for Canada? We are building colliers in Nova Scotia. It is not a far cry from these forms of shipbuilding to ocean going freight ships. All we have to do to make shipbuilding a capital Canadian industry is to go into shipbuilding.

It is objected that we can't build ships as cheaply in Canada as can be done in the Mother country. Of course we can't do so. We can't spin and weave clothes and woollen as cheaply as can be done in England, but we spin and weave them all the same. If we do that in one line we can and should do it in another. If we had always listened to the cheap argument of cheapness as a guide, we should never have done anything. We only need to begin and the rest will come. Time was when we couldn't print a book, even our school books, in Canada, but we do it now. Time was when we didn't build our agricultural implements, our steam engines, our locomotives, etc., in Canada. We could not be doing these things now if we hadn't begun doing them. We can't do our shipbuilding, our home smelting of nickel unless we begin.

The conditions are favourable, or if not quite favourable they can be made so. The government must do its share; and should do it promptly. We have piled Pelion on Ossa, added millions on millions to help internal transportation, which stops at the water's edge—on the edge of the fullest profitable accomplishment. We have bonused railways in a millionaire way, our transcontinental and other railways are fairly ballasted with public money. Could we not, with half or a tenth of the help we have given railways, launch the shipbuilding industry in Canada and keep it afloat? Such an action would be the logical sequence of our action in aiding railways— building transcontinental railway terminals in the shape of shipping —to extend our railways to the ends of the earth?

A CONSERVATIVE JOURNAL APPEALS TO CANADIANS TO WAKE UP!

These are the most momentous days in the history of the world; they are the most momentous days in the history of Canada, of America.

Civilization is at stake; progressive government is at stake.

And yet we in Canada are thinking more of faction and of interests than we are thinking of the welfare of our nation, of humanity. Are we looking into these trenches in Europe, or are we looking in another direction?

We are making charges against Liberals in regard to the Borden government's proposal to build dreadnoughts; Liberals are making counter-charges against the doings of the shell committee, identified with the Conservative party, and the manufacture of munitions!

Both sides and two governments are silent about the sickening fact that the German metal trust, acting through American agents, control our nickel production and have controlled it for ten years; have used and relied on it for the strengthening of Germany's ships, cannons, munitions. Canadian nickel is the backbone of the assaults now being made with so much destruction of the lives of our soldiers and sailors. The nickel trust is all powerful at Ottawa and Toronto. No attempt is being made to break it.

And it would seem that Canadians, lawyers, politicians, ministers, are more concerned in the welfare of the nickel crowd and the Ross rifle crowd than they are unifying Canada for the defence of civilization, of our country, of our people; are more concerned about the interests and about faction than they are about our noble sons, falling in the trenches by thousands!

The time has come for a reorganization of the government at Ottawa and of the government at Toronto, and to free them from the men who are manipulating the situation to the advantage of the interests, and at times of interests that are centred in Germany. These interests dominate things because they can line up politicians and papers from both sides to accomplish nefarious and unpatriotic ends and can keep the politicians fighting over factional issues when a united policy on national and imperial issues would save the commonwealth, though it might be to the disadvantage of selfish ends.

How much longer have we to endure these things? Our appeal is to the people, not to the politicians.

Big measures and bigger men are needed; new and sweeping policies are called for; economic cancers must be treated in a heroic way; the lives of our people are at stake; yet most of us are willing to side-step the duties that press for settlement.—Toronto World.

THE STOCK MARKETS BELIEVE.

The persistent strength of the New York and London stock markets in face of the recent series of shocks, reveals undiminished faith in the supremacy of the British navy and the ultimate triumph of the Allies. —Toronto News.

UNEQUAL GIVING.

Millionaires are giving far less than the men who have a few thousands, and I know of one millionaire who is keeping back good, healthy sons and giving practically nothing to any fund, while his neighbour has crippled himself financially and given five sons to the Empire besides. —Mr. Justice Craig, Toronto.

GERMANS WILL HAVE TO FEED ON IMAGINATION

BERLIN, June 9.—One of the most important milestones in Berlin's food history was passed Wednesday, with the introduction of meat cards, closely modelled on the famous bread cards, which have proved so successful for the last sixty-eight weeks.

Family meat cards have coupons for four weeks, three coupons per week, while one-day meat cards, with only one coupon, are provided for hotel guests and other transients, who are not entitled to receive more than four cards during one week.

The Berlin magistrates have fixed the meat ration at 280 grams, slightly under twelve ounces per head, for the current week, each coupon therefore entitling bearer to draw 110 grams of raw meat, or its strunken cooked equivalent.

Wednesday's experience revealed undreamed of nuisances, lunching and dining under the meat-card system proving a fascinating game of chance and skill, and requiring also considerable knowledge of mathematics and zoology.

At the Berlin hotels and restaurants in many cases the gross raw weight of meat dishes is indicated on the bill of fare, in addition to the price, so that bargain hunters can convert their precious coupons to the greatest advantage by choosing the heaviest courses offered.

Difficult to Assimilate.

With one coupon to last you all day, and a limit of four a week, you study the new ordinances carefully. They contain a little joker, which opens brighter gastronomic prospects, for poultry and game are not meat within the meaning of the meat card ordinance.

Neither are heads and feet, and edible internal organs, which gives considerable latitude for choice after you have used up your meat coupon, for regular meat which, according to the Berlin magistrate, is lamb, beef, veal or pork.

Guests and waiters were putting their heads together Wednesday trying to figure out which dishes did or did not require the production of meat-cards, but while errors and misunderstandings were plentiful, the meat card complications were swallowed good-naturedly, and the new scheme promises to work well after a few days' experience.

In the populous sections the meat stores were besieged early by Berlin housewives, who preferred to play safe by buying at once all the meat to which the cards entitled them for the whole week. The rush had been foreseen, and policemen were on hand in every case to regulate the traffic.

The world is half full of people who have no interest in their work because they are not fitted for it.

She—"They say that an apple a day will keep the doctor away." He—"Why stop there? An onion a day will keep everybody away."

Proper Care of Shade Trees

Count Up the Points Your Trees Are Entitled To—Expert Instructions Simple to Follow

(By Carl Bannwart, of the Newark Shade Tree Commission.

Examine your tree for points every month and see what percentage it will have out of a possible one hundred. Each of the following, if answered unequivocally, "Yes," gives your tree 8 1-3 per cent. toward the one hundred. These questions are put in order of their importance:

1. Is the opening around your tree of standard size? Standard size is: 4 feet square for a tree of 6 inches (or less) diameter; for every 1 inch increase of such (6-inch) diameter, an increase of 1 square foot in area of opening.

2. Is the ground in this opening well-loosened to admit air and water?

3. If the tree is surrounded by grass, is the sod open around the trunk?

4. Does the tree get a good proportion of the rain which falls on the sidewalk, or does the water run over the curb into the gutter?

5. Is the tree protected with a tree-guard? Guard must be six feet high and not too tight. Tree must be protected from chafing by guard.

6. Is the tree free from borers? Borers can be detected by sawdust coming out of holes in the trunk. Watch for the borers from April to November.

7. Are the trunk and the branches cleared of all cocoons, egg-masses, larvae, caterpillars, bettles, scale?

8. (a) Is the head free from all deadwood, has it been pruned by an expert, and how do you know he is an expert? Find out how a tree should be pruned. Are all the cuts painted? (b) Does the tree stand perpendicular and is its present place intended to be its permanent home?

9. Have the scars from horse bites or other injuries been cleaned out and painted to prevent harbouring insects and to stop decay? If there are large cavities these should be filled with cement.

10. Does the tree remain green and in full leaf to the middle of October?

11. Have you put as much nourishment into the soil as the tree needs for the year? Give it a treat; dig in wood ashes, ground bone or well-rotted manure.

12. Are any wires interfering with your tree either by swaying or by electric current? Are there any gas leaks?

"Here are twelve points of a good street tree. The total percentage if below par reflects on the man, not on the tree. The tree always does its best. Man forgets that he has taken it out of the God-made forest where it could and did care for itself, and has placed it in a man-made city where it is dependent on man's care for thrifty growth."

INDIAN SOLDIERS KEEN AS SNIPERS

OTTAWA, June 8.—More than 800 Canadian Indians have enlisted for active service, and the number would be very much greater, says Lieut. Charles A. Cooke, of the Indian Department, who has been recruiting among the reserved for some months, had the Indians the full rights of citizenship. He found this his greatest stumbling block to enlistment.

Ontario heads the list with 667, composed of 323 Ojibways, 294 Iroquois and 50 Delawares; Quebec, 65 with 43 Iroquois in the lead; Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 98, composed of Sioux and Crees; British Columbia and Yukon, 5; Maritime Provinces, 32, all Micmacs.

Most of these Indians are with the 114th Battalion at Cayuga, Ont. All the officers except one are Indians, and Lieut. Cooke states that they would have found it comparatively easy to make up a full battalion of red men if the Indians had been left alone by other battalions. They like the idea of being in one regiment.

The Indians have also contributed $24,634 to the Patriotic Fund through the Indian Department. Indian recruits are much sought as they are magnificent shots and are used to great advantage as snipers.

Germany to Blame, Harden Charges

Should Have Aided Haldane to Avert War, Writes Journalist

PARIS, June 8.—The Imperial German Government has seised the latest number of Die Zukunft, in which Maximilian Harden writes:

"Germany is responsible for the war. She should have helped Lord Haldane and come to an agreement with England. The Chancellor is unreasonable to expect the Allies to make peace based on the situation on the map. They will not do that until convinced that their cause is lost, and such a moment cannot be foreseen.

"All the belligerents must agree to an organized peace, guaranteeing absolute sovereignity to every one, with an international agreement on military questions and the establishment of an international tribunal with the power to make unruly nations respect their decisions. Let Germany beware if she discontenances such a solution.

"The Allies continue the war only because they fear that if peace is made now the German armaments would force them to continue competition. Organized peace may be possible now, but the opportunity will soon go forever."

J. E. Roosevelt "A Wild Beast" Wife Testifies

NEW YORK, June 8.—Mrs. Edith H. Briscoe Roosevelt, society matron of this city and Washington, yesterday spoke of her husband, John Ellis Roosevelt, a cousin of the former President, as "a wild beast". She was testifying before Supreme Court Justice Clarke in her separation action. The trial will be resumed to-day.

Mrs. Roosevelt was a widow in Washington, when she married Mr. Roosevelt, a widower with several children, in January, 1914. She explained she became acquainted with him through her sister, Mrs. Robert B. Roosevelt, wife of his brother. After marriage they went to Egypt on their honeymoon.

Mrs. Roosevelt charges three acts of 'cruelty'. The first occurred in Naples the second in the Hotel Savoy, London, and the third in their country home at Sayville, L. I. She summoned Mr. and Mrs. Howard G. Meredith, of Detroit, their friends on the European trip, to bear witness to her charges.

After retiring one night in Naples, Mrs. Roosevelt said, her husband awoke her. "I asked him to please leave me alone," she said, "but he was in a terrible rage. He was like a wild beast."

Mr. Roosvelt, who sat in the court room in front of Pansy and Jean, two daughters by his first marriage, looked around at them reassuringly. They smiled at him and one of them wrote a note for him to read.

"In London," the plaintiff continued, "I had been shopping. We went to the theatre and then to supper. We got to the Savoy about midnight. Mr. Roosevelt had acted peculiarly and I told him his actions were rude. He flew into a rage. I went to my room. He followed me and I ordered him to leave. He grabbed me by the throat and said he was going to break every bone in my body.

"I was nervous and my gown was nearly torn off. I telephoned the Mereditha and they came over."

"The third quarrel was as on the verandah of the country home at Sayville. It arose because of differences between Mr. Roosevelt and myself as to our plans for the Winter. His manner of speaking was most objectionable. He applied epithets and used profanity.

On cross-examination, Mrs. Roosevelt admitted she and her husband had not been on speaking terms for six weeks at a time. She denied, however, that she told her chauffeur Mr. Roosevelt had been unkind to her.

Dr. Carroll Chase, of Brooklyn, left for Bordeaux and Paris under the auspices of the "American Relief of France and her Allies," for hospital work.

RESPECTABLE GIRLS WIN, SAYS AMELIE RIVES

"Respectibility never handicapped any girl. You cant' preach the gospel of cleverness versus respectability to girls, for they can't play their game that way and win out."

Princess Pierre Troubetskoy was very emphatic as she thus answered the charges President Charles Alexander Richmond of Union College had made in his baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of Vassar College.

"President Richmond said that to be perfectly respectable was a great handicap nowadays, especially for a woman who aspired to be a leader of her sex or of any social of economic movement," the Princess continued. He actually made that statement to a group of young women starting out in the world to make careers for themselves. With all my soul I disagree with him. He preached the wrong gospel.

"I know it's a smart, up-to-date idea of what a girl must do. It used to be that we would tell our girls: "Be good, sweet maid, and let wh will be clever." Now our college girls are told: "Be clever, and let who will be good." But it's all wrong. Respectability—self respect—is the cornerstone of everything a girl does if she makes good.

Strangely enough, the Princess declared that the city's big problem was the girl who earned good salary.

COLLEGE GIRLS CHALLENGED

"No one seems to think of the challenge the city makes to a college girl or a professional girl whose salary runs well into three figures every month." The Princess's voice was full of real understanding. "No one seems to remember that the girl who thinks and who starts out to win success with ideals to back her work fights the hardest fight of all. Respectability, for her is not so much a question of morals as it is of standards.

"First of all, she faces loneliness, she chooses her friends carefully, but there inevitably comes the day when loneliness makes her wonder how other girls have lowered their standards and 'gotten away with it'. And because she cares about what life really means she finds that cleverness is a mighty shabby substitute for respectability.

"All this is just a warning. Home life is slipping away from the average girl in New York who is earning her living. It's not a question now of calling it back, it's rather a problem of substitution.

"Every girl wants her freedom. She wants her independence. She has the God-given right to work out her own salvation. She must see life first-hand. No other person's experiences or advice will do. Life doesn't mean a thing if you can't translate it your own way.

FOLLIES OF CITY LIFE

"That isn't a question of respectability, it's simply feminine efficiency.

"Girls are beginning to understand that they can't live in stuffy cafes and subways and hall bedrooms without a bit of sunshine or free, wholesome exercise out of doors and keep up to their highest efficiency.

"They are working a newer kind of respectability out of existence as they find it in New York. And that doesn't mean tango teas and cocktails for recreation, either. Real cleverness can see the folly of that sort of city life.

"It's hard for a girl to wait. It's hard for her to stand by her ideals and see her youth slowly slipping away while she waits for the one big dream of her life to come true. Respectability than can do that takes real courage.

"If she can learn the sort of respectability that gives freedom and yet keeps up a true standard of living, the time will come when at last half gods will go and the gods arrive.

"Half gods, for too many girls mean just cleverness and living by their wits. Where do the little girls you see on Broadway get the gay clothes to wear? No style is too extreme or too changeable for them. Fashion is the only religion they know. They don't care about home, just so they get enough of the gay White Way.

"It isn't the amount of money a girl spends. It is how she spends her life that counts. No 'funny-minded' girl is ever going to make a big success of anything.

"You've got to think straight. You've got to realise that life is made up of relative values and you've got to absorb the things that count and let the rest go. Respectability counts most of all."

Miss Mabel Davidson, teacher of pottery making in Paris, and Miss Winifred Holt were also passengers. Miss Davidson had come here to raise funds to carry on her work. She said that she had met with success.

DECOMPOSED BODY CAST UP BY ERIE

Man's Identification Impossible Unless Someone May Recognize Clothes.

WINDSOR, June 9.—What is believed to be the body of a man who may have jumped or fallen from a passenger steamer last fall, was found by farmers on the shore of Lake Erie, about five miles below Amherstburg.

Dr. W. J. Park of Amherstburg, coroner for South Essex, declared that body had been washed ashore after being in the water several months. There was no possible chance of identifying the man owing to the condition of the body, and burial was made an hour after it was discovered on the sands of the shore.

The unknown man was about five feet six inches in height, weighed 130 pounds, dressed in a black suit, black buttoned shoes, and wore a pleated shirt and blue tie.

Yuan Shi Kai's Son Ends His Own Life

Former Head of Republic Said He Regretted Monarchical Movement and Was Misled

London, June 8.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegram Company, from Pekin states that the eldest son of Yuan Shi Kai committed suicide after the death of his father, who was President of the Republic.

REGRETTED THE MONARCHICAL MOVEMENT

Pekin, China, June 8.—The last words of President Yuan Shi Kai were an expression of regret for the monarchical movement, which had brought disaster to China, he said, and had hastened his end. Calling Hsu Shi Chang, former Premier, to his bedside, Yuan Shi Kai whispered: "I did not wish this end. I did not aspire to be Emperor. Those around me said the people desired a Sovereign and had named me for the Throne. I believed and was misled."

Yuan Shi Kai then begged Hsu Shi Chang to protect his wives and children.

NO MORE JAP TROOPS.

Tokio, June 8.—A special session of the cabinet was summoned to-day to consider the situation in China resulting from the death of President Yuan Shi Kai. At the conclusion of the meeting the Foreign Office made a statement to the effect that Japan had decided not to make any new political move in regard to China.

The statement follows:

"As Li Yuan Hung has succeeded to the presidency in accordance to the Chinese constitution, Japan has decided not to make any new political move in China. Japan will adhere to its past policy which is based on the desire to have the contending factions come to terms and bring about restoration of peace and order."

In view of this statement and of the fact that Pekin is quiet it is understood Japan will send no additional troops to China. For the present Japan will await developments.

LONGBOAT IN HURRY TO GET TO THE FRONT

IS APPREHENDED AT QUEBEC, AND WILL RETURN TO THE SPORTSMEN'S BATT.

Quebec, June 8.—Tom Longboat, the famous Onondaga Indian runner, who ran from Brantford to Toronto, to join the Sportsmen's Battalion, was taken into custody here this afternoon on the advice of military authorities in Toronto. A guard is expected here from the Queen City to take the Indian back to the 180th (Sportsmen's) Battalion.

Longboat was found in the ranks of the 97th Battalion, (American Legion) which he joined while in the uniform of the 180th, and without the formality of being transferred. The redskin is anxious to get to the front as soon as possible, and appears to be unaware that he has committed a breach of military discipline.

Motorboat Struck: Men Made Unconscious

CYRIL AND BENJ. WEESE HAD NARROW ESCAPE—ENGINE TORN OUT.

Belleville, June 8.—Monday afternoon while going through the Murray canal in a motor boat, Cyril and Benj Weese of Rossmore, were struck by lightning and rendered unconscious. The engine was torn out of the boat. No one witnessed the accident. A Mrs. Richardson who lives along the canal, saw the boat against the bank, and on investigation she found it occupied by two men who were unconscious. The alarm was given and the men were brought to Belleville. Cyril Weese was sent to the hospital, and it was feared that he would not recover, but Benj. was able to return to Rossmore.

Another Appointment But Not For a Soldier

Windsor, June 8.—That returned soldiers have little chance of being appointed to government positions is shown by a statement made here this evening by Dr. W. J. Park, of Amherstburg, who was the Conservative parliamentary candidate for South Essex at the last Federal election.

It is the intention said Dr. Park, to recommend a Leamington man for a vacancy in the immigration staff at Windsor, caused by the resignation of Eccles Gott last week. The name of Dr. Park's choice is not divulged.

Asked why a returned soldier was not going to be appointed, Dr. Park declared that the majority of them could not qualify.

This is the second appointment made to the immigration service within two weeks and neither of the successful applicants is a returned soldier although the government promised that returned heroes would be considered first.

COLLECTION OF RAGS TO-NIGHT

The rags will be collected to-night between 6.30 and 8.30 from all the side streets from Aylmer to Water Sts. between McDonnell and Townsend Sts.

FRENCH MAY TAKE KITCHENER'S POST

LONDON, June 8.—The choice of a successor to Lord Kitchener as Secretary for War is touched on only lightly by the London morning papers. A news agency despatch published without comment by several of the papers, says.

"There is reason to believe that an offer has already been conveyed to Field Marshal Viscount French, who had a long conference with Premier Asquith yesterday."

The Graphic declares that the new War minister should be a civilian and expresses the opinion that the man whose appointment would give the most satisfaction is Lord Derby, former director of recruiting.

The Morning Post sticks to its nomination of yesterday of Lord Milner as the most suitable man.

The Times thinks that Earl Kitchener's successor should be a civilian, and says that the names most prominently mentioned are David Lloyd George and Lord Milner. It adds:

"It would be a misfortune to put Mr Lloyd George in a position where departmental routine would take up such a large part of his time. Lord Milner would probably make make the best War Minister of all but we can hardly picture his inclusion in the present Cabinet of party men."

The Daily Chronicle and The Daily Telegraph endorse David Lloyd George.

A Wonderful Feat By Italian Engineers

Blow Up a Mountain Top by Tunnelling—One Hundred Tons of Explosive Was Used

BLOWING UP AUSTRALIA

The explosives of the present war are far more powerful and terrifying than of any other war ever known, and their uses have been more fatal and enormously destructive than can be imagined. Single large calibre high explosive shells make craters twenty feet deep and more than forty feet in diameter in soft ground. In the present war many hundreds of thousands of such shells have already been scattered broadcast over great sections of Europe.

But the really destructive and terrifying uses of explosives have been along a different line—that of literally blowing up the enemy. Each belligerant has a great number of engineers and sappers who are engaged all the time in steadily digging tunnels from their trenches to points beneath the enemy trenches, placing explosive beneath the enemy and touching it off. Every time an explosion is successful a number of the enemy is blown to pieces.

Recently in the Trentino region the Italian forces seemed to be stopped by an Austrian force which had occupied and very strongly fortified a high mountain top which dominated a large section of the Italian front and rendered practically impossible of capture. A. Garibaldi, a son of Italy's famous patriot and greatest general, is an officer on that particular section. He suggested a plan which was adopted by the Italian engineers. The idea was to tunnel through the mountain rock from the nearest sheltered point, to a point directly under the Austrian forces, and dynamite them. It was quite an engineering feat to make the tunnel successfully. When the calculations of the engineers showed that they had reached a point directly beneath the large Austrian fortress, a number of branch tunnels were run out, like spokes from a hub. Very heavy charges of high explosive were placed in every branch tunnel and at the centre. All together, about one hundred tons of explosive were used. This enormous charge was set off from a safe distance after the Italian forces had left the tunnel. The whole mountain top with its entire Austrian force was blown into the air and Italy had no further difficulty with that point. It is doubtful if anything less than a volcano could have so completely obliterated that mountain top and it is probable that the Austrian forces imagine that it was a volcano an not the Italians, if there is any of them alive to-day.

MAY RELEASE KIDDIES FROM AMUSEMENT TAX

Toronto, June 8.—It is not likely that the juveniles will pay much longer the amusement tax. Some weeks ago representations were made that the children might be exempt from giving their "mite" and it is stated on good authority that the Ontario government has decided, if practicable, to allow children into the amusement places without a tax.

HORSE SWAM TO McDONALD'S POINT

One of the Peterborough Fuel and Transfer Company's teams, unloading wood from a scow at Wolfe Street wharf yesterday afternoon afforded a slight divertissment when one of the horses backed into the river. The other was saved from a similar experience by the harness being cut. His mate swam down the river and drew up on shore at McDonald's Point. Naturally the occurrence created considerable excitement besides apprehension concerning its safety.

Girl Hired Brother's Slayers, She Admits

Chicago, June 9.—With amazing calmness, Mary Figolio, twenty-one, told a Supreme Court jury in White Plains yesterday, how she had planned the murder of Gregorio George, husband of her sister-in-law. George was murdered at Dobbs Ferry, January 15. William McNamara is on trial charged with killing George. The girl's husband, Michael Figolio, is one of six persons who have been arrested for the murder.

Mary said she went to the home of a girl friend, where she arranged with two men, William McNamara and another named Clifford, to kill George. Each of the men was to receive $250 for his work, she said.

THE DEATH OF MR. ANDREW PATERSON

Funeral Will Take Place on Saturday Afternoon to Little Lake Cemetery

Andrew Wooler Paterson whose death occurred was born in Richmond Mills, Megantic County, P.Q., in 1862, where he lived and received his education and laid the foundation for the thorough careful and capable common sense in mechanical problems which distinguished his whole career. He 'served his time' at Hanover, N. H.

He first ventured on the treachrous seas of commercial life as a sawmill owner at Richmond, and after being burned out twice, took charge as stationary engineer at Crompton Copper Mines. He was attached to the Edison Electric Co., by the fascination of the complex and micrometric requirements of electrical design, and manufacture and served in the works as machinist and after removing with them to Peterborough. He left Peterborough for a short time, holding the position of general foreman of an extensive machine shop at the "Soo" Returning to Peterborough, he again ventured into commercial life, taking the old "White's Foundry" on McDonnel Street for several years. He then returned to the Canadian General Electric Co., as inspector in which capacity he served for four years, being transferred to the position of Production manager for one year, and then to the position of Chief Inspector in which position he served for the remainder of his life.

His administration of this important position will remain a monument to his memory for many years.

HOME INTERESTS

Mr. Patterson's human interests were gardening and angling. His utopia which he strove manfully to realise against heavy odds, were a cottage and garden near the waters edge where his two hobbies could have free swing. He was a member and officer of the Anglers Club and was one of the mainstays of the club, and his genial, quiet wit and humor will be missed by all who had the rare privilege of an intimacy with him.

He was as thorough in his gardening as in all his interests, and it was a treat indeed to have him open to one the gate into this phase of his life. A true lover of nature in all her many moods.

Mr. Patterson's life has run in those quiet channels of service which is the lot of the majority of men. He was not of those who live in king's houses and sit the public eye, but his life was emphatically a call to all of his associates to a patient bearing of burdens, an uncomplaining fronting of fate with the calm steadfastness which knows no defeat.

He was married in Hanover, N.H. in 1889. He is survived by his wife and four children: Mrs. Agnes Paterson Mowry, Peterborough; Leonard, Toronto; Norman, Peterborough, 93rd Bugle Corps; Max, Peterborough, 93rd Bugle Corps.

His friends and associates will meet at Crescent and Lock steets Saturday afternoon, June 10th, at 2.15 and walk to the cemetery for the funeral services.

Arrests Halt Plot To Smuggle Aliens

New York, June 9—A wholesale conspiracy to smuggle aliens into this country was revealed yesterday when Federal authorities swooped down upon the steamship Vesteris at Pier No. 9, Brooklyn, and arrested nine sailors. United States District Attorney France in Brooklyn intimated more than a score of arrests would be made.

Alcibiades Seraphic, an immigration inspector, said $40 is the usual amount paid by immigrants to sailors.

Mr. France said that the practice had been confined to vessels from the South American ports.

ELECTRICAL MACHINERY CONTRACT LET TO C. G. E.

ORILLIA, June 8. — The Water, Light and Power Commission have awarded the contracts for the electrical machinery for the new power plant at the Swift Rapids to the Canadian General Electric Company. The contract price for two units, with a capacity of 3,000 h.p., is $68,000; for three units, with a capacity of 5,400 h.p., $81,000. The decision as to whether two or three units shall be installed has been deferred until the negotiations with the Hydro-Electric Commission for supplying them with the additional power required by their Severn system have been completed. There seems reason to expect that an agreement will be reached, as the two Commissions have agreed on the general terms, and the Hydro is to submit a draft of the details as soon as possible. The total extra cost of the third unit will be about $25,000, but the anticipated revenue from the Hydro will warrant this additional outlay. It is felt that it will now be impossible to have the plant ready for operation next winter, but very effort will be made to get the machinery delivered before the navigation closes, so that the work can go on, and the plant be ready to put into operation next spring.

The contract for the hydraulic machinery has not yet been awarded.

Alfred Binns, Realty Promoter, Ends Life

Chicago, June 8. — Alfred Binns, a prosperous New York building contractor and realty promoter, left his home on Sagamore road, Bronxville, early last evening, walked three miles to the entrance of St. Eleanor's Home on Central ave., Yonkers, and shot himself dead. Policeman Michael Gilmartin found his body.

He committed suicide the police allege, through worry over business troubles. He was 42 years old and leaves a widow and four children.

On Deathbed Sees His Daughter Married

New York, June 9.—Believing that he had only a few more hours to live, Aaron Kaplan, No. 1709 Pitkin ave., Brooklyn, told his daughter Tilly yesterday his last wish was to see her married. She was to marry Dr. A. S. Katzenbogen next month, but the ceremony was performed yesterday.

Kaplin was taken to the Post-Graduate Hospital immediately after the ceremony. He was still alive last night although his physicians held out no hope for him.

Bobbie—"May Johnny Shocker come in and play with me, Mother." "No; you make too much noise. You can go and play in his house instead."

MINISTERS TO TAKE UP RECRUITING WORK

TORONTO, June 8.—A formidable array of ministers representing a majority of the denominations in Toronto approached Premier Hearst to-day asking a donation of $5,000 from the funds of the province in connection with a new recruiting scheme in the hands of an organization known as the Ministerial Recruiting League.

Major Rev. T. Crawford Brown 48th Highlanders, introduced the deputation, and the Premier, after hearing their case, gave an encouraging reply, asking for a memorandum of the request to lay before the Cabinet.

As Major Brown explained it, there are many communities throughout the country where the war does not bulk nearly so large in the minds of the people as it should. The ministers feel that by undertaking a campaign from the pulpits much good could be done.

PAY THEIR EXPENSES

Many ministers in the city have expressed a willingness to speak in these outside places, but are not always able to pay their own expenses. It was felt therefore that the organization should bear this, and for the cost, as well as to bear the initial office expenses, etc., the Government is asked to provide the nucleus of a fund, which the minister hopes to augment later by private subscription.

Premier Hearst, while favouring a centralization of recruiting undertakings, admitted that perhaps there was a field for the ministers through the pulpits, which was not open to anyone else.

"It is doubtful if the hearts and consciences of the people are as fully touched as they ought to be," he said. He pointed out how well the Canadian troops in France had done, but thought that there was a great many people at home who were not doing all they could. Too much money was still being spent in luxuries. People were often carrying on their affairs as if there were no war.

MORE THRIFT AND INDUSTRY.

"On our own part," he continued, "there is room for more economy, more thrift, more industry. If we cannot go to the front, there are fields of labour in which we all may be usefully employed. And if the Church does not play its part, in my opinion it will have fallen down in the greatest opportunity in ages."

HORTICULTURAL MEN TEMPORARY CARETAKERS OF VICTORIA PARK

Members and directors of the Horticultural Society provided something of a spectacle in Victoria Park last night when five or six of them manned that number of lawn mowers, and others were busily planting flowers. From all accounts the caretaker had turned his clock back an hour or two as far as the morning was concerned and there was considerable complaint that he was slowing up the work. So he was turned loose and the Horticultural members were called up in the pinch. Rollie Denne, Bill Lytle, Frank Wise, Cecil Williamson, these and various others gave a real exhibition of men going to work.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

This "call to prayer" for Saturday afternoon is a lead in the right direction. I know that in all of our churches special prayer is offered each week in view of war conditions, but there is a decided advantage in our "coming together" for this one purpose.

Many of the people of Peterborough are in the deepest kind of sorrow. We should pray unitedly for them.

The surprises of recent days have shown us that the "arm of flesh fails us." We believe in the righteousness of our cause, but we also believe in the authority and power of the God of Righteousness and He has commanded us to "not forsake the assembling of ourselves together," and He has promised that "if we lack wisdom and ask of Him he will give it liberally and without upbraiding."

We have not turned as we should to the King of Kings and the Lord of Lords. An hour of confession and prayer will do the entire city good and will mean much of comfort to those who are tense with anxiety and burdened with bereavement.

I cannot but feel that all Christian people will want to drop everything else for that one hour on Saturday and find their way to the church selected for the Union gathering. I hope that a thousand people will show that they believe in the efficacy of prayer and the power of God to send us the help that is so sorely needed.

WILL ERECT A LARGE ROUNDHOUSE IN LINDSAY

Twenty Stall Smoke Factory For Scugogville and an Eight Thousand Gallon Water Tank---Big Doings in the Northern Metropolis

LINDSAY, June 9. — Lindsay, which at the present time is known as a "Grand Trunk Town," is shortly to become a terminal point, and at the present time plans are under way for the erection of a large new roundhouse, a big machine shop, a mechanical coal house, an 8,000 gallon water tank and other extensive improvements. All of which means that Lindsay will shortly be placed prominently on the map as a railroad town; that this town is to become one of the main distributing centres of the Grand Trunk Railway Co.; that the increased traffic on the lines radiating through and out of Lindsay demand heavier rails, an up-to-date house with 20 stalls for locomotives a huge turn-table, a machine shop where all the engines on the line can be repaired, four additional tracks and last of all but not least a considerable increase of population in Lindsay and a bulging pay roll for Lindsay employees and business men.

Mr. J. D. McMillan, acting superintendent of the Belleville division Mr. W. J. Fee, road foreman, Mr. R E. Orr, trainmaster at Lindsay, and Mr. W. H. Towler, general foreman (Belleville), waited on the Town Council, at a special meeting held last night asking for certain concessions from the town. Mr. McMillan stated in part that the Fire Underwriters' Association objected to the lack of fire protection given to the present shops in Lindsay. "We hope you will extend the mains and I hope you will comply as I expect the new roundhouse plant will be erected in Lindsay. We purpose building in Lindsay a 20-stall roundhouse, mechanical coal house and machine shop on our property between Adelaide and Angeline streets. We had intended building the roundhouse so as to face Angeline street, but we find that our strip of land between the present railroad tracks and the line fence is too narrow to face Angeline street, so we must face south. We would require a frontage of 325 feet on Angeline street, but we only have 220 feet, and so will have to put the new roundhouse in length wise. We have to cross Adelaide street with four tracks. We also want permission to close Albert street at our present roundhouse.

FIRE PROTECTION.

The Town Councillors expressed their willingness to meet the demands of the Grand Trunk fairly. It would be an easy matter to give ample fire protection and also to allow the Company to build four tracks across Adelaide Street, but it was deemed best not to close Albert street, south, owing to the fact that if any other industry locates in the vicinity (south of Albert street) an opening street would be required for their employees to go to and from work.

Mr. McMillan: "We will have to build another water tank and will have to use more water. Peterborough are after us strong, but this is the proper place. You have a main to the house of refuge, but the nearest hydrant now is considerably north of the round house. If we could get the four tracks across Adelaide street I could go to Montreal and could say to the head officials "We can put them across, but must build the plant as stated."

Ald. Annis: "Where would you cross the street?"

Mr. McMillan: "Just north of the present tracks on Adelaide stret."

Ald. Annis: "What size will the new roundhouse be"

Mr. McMillan: "20 stalls and a turn-table. The engine house will hold 20 engines and will be built on a circle. There will be a track for going on, another for going out and two cinder tracks. The machine shop will be 100 ft. x 150 ft. We will require a new water tank so that the engines can take water before going out. We are not allowed to take water from your mains as this would reduce the water pressure in town, so we must build a new tank. We are also looking for the time when toy engines will be discarded and the big moguls will be running through the town. We will also build a mechanical hoist that will hold 200 tons of coal.

Reeve Babcock: "How about putting an overhead bridge on Albert street?"

A FOOT-BRIDGE.

Mr. McMillan: "A foot-bridge would not cost so very much, but an overhead roadway would be out of the question. We want the street closed on account of the increased danger from engines shunting to and fro. However, we want to be fair and would not ask the Council to close the street but for the fact that we understood it was to be closed south of the present roundhouse anyway."

In this Mr. McMillan was assured that the Town Council had no previous idea of closing the south end of Albert street.

A resolution was passed setting forth that the councillors were unanimous in the matter of proper fire protection for the roundhouse and also allowing additional tracks over Adelaide street. The resolution will be brought up at the next regular meeting of the Town Council.

Mr. W. J. Fee informed a Warder man that an 85-ft. turntable would be installed with 20 stalls inside the roundhouse and room for 20 engines outside. Work would commence probably inside of a month and would be rushed to a rapid completion.—Lindsay Warder.

NO GOOD IN CANADA

American divorce papers are not taken seriously by Magistrate Jelfs of Hamilton, for on Saturday, when George Hurd, of Detroit, but formerly of Hamilton, presented divorce papers, thinking that they would release him from supporting his wife that he married in Canada seven years ago, he received a disagreeable surprise. He was informed that he would either have to support his wife and furnish a bond of his good faith to do so, or else go to jail. He was re manded to make a decision.

The true sex antagonism is that between a woman and the other woman.

Serious Accident To Well Known and Venerable Lady

There will be very general regret at the sad accident to Mrs. T W. Allan, who resides at Millbrook, the house of her son, Mr. John deacon Allan, in his life the best known clergyman in Eastern Ontario. Mrs. Allan, a day or two ago, fell in the house of her son, Mr. John Allan, and sustained, what the surgeons describe as an intercapsular fracture of the thigh bone. This form of fracture, most serious in itself, is made more so by the advanced age of the sufferer—92 years—who, up to the time of the accident, was extremely well and active in both mind and body. Dr. D. C King, city, reduced the fracture, and Mrs. Allan is in charge of her granddaughter, Mrs. King; and the venerable patient will have done for her all that professional capability, joined to filial love and an atmosphere of family love and devotion, can do. Her hosts of friends join to their loving and respectful sympathy, the hope that they may hear good news of her progress to recovery.

General Joffre at London Conference

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, June 9.—General Joffre, the French Commander-in-Chief, is in London attending an important conference at the Foreign Office today, with Paul Cambon, the French Ambassador, Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary, and members of the British War Council.

Entire Austrian Division Captured

Special to the Examiner:

sion including 185 officers and nearly 14,000 men and twenty-three guns, sixty-two machine guns, and heavy stores, is officially reported by the Russian War Office to-day. This makes about sixty-five thousand Austrians captured by the Russians in the present drive.

The capture of a division in its entirety seem to indicate that the Russians have succeeded in enveloping one end of the Austrian line.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SOCCER IN THE OLD COUNTRY

The people "over home," like the Canadians, must have their play time and despite the war conditions and the consequent falling off in attendance at the Scotish League soccer contests, the Glasgow Rangers finished the season with a balance on hand of over $12,000, which enabled them to place $8,000 to reserve fund and pay a dividend to its shareholders of 5 per cent.

The famous club has since the start of the war sent across the Channel the large number of 346 footballs to soccer team on active service, and all the playing members have now joined the colours.

The English Football Association held a conference in London yesterday to discuss the prospects of the game.

The meeting considered various matters in relation to the new taxation, and when arrangements have been made with the Board of Customs and Excise the clubs will be communicated with.

It was also considered that until there was some material change in the present position, the regulations and restrictions now in force should be continued.

The delegates present were, Messrs. J. C. Clegg, who occupied the chair; C. Crump, W. Pickford, and F. J. Wall (representing the F. A.); J. McKenna, W. Hall and T. Charnley, of the Football League), and S. Bourne (of the Southern League).

GOLF BRIDGE POSTPONED.

Owing to the intercessory service Saturday afternoon and the depressing war news, the Bridge at the Golf Club will not be held to-morrow afternoon. Tea will be served at 4:30.

GLASGOW RANGERS PAY BIG DIVIDEND

DESPITE WAR CONDITIONS CLUB MAKES $12,165—SEND 300 BALLS TO FRONT.

London, June 8.—In spite of reduced attendances at the Scottish League games, which were robbed of many attractive features owing to several crack players being called to the colors, the Glasgow Rangers Soccer Club finished the season with a balance in hand of $12,165, which enables it to place $8,000 to the reserve fund, and pay a dividend to its shareholders of 5 per cent.

The famous club has since the start of the war sent across the channel the large number of 346 footballs to soccer men on active service, and all the playing men have now joined the colors.

SOCCER IN ENGLAND STILL UNDER WAR RESTRICTIONS

London, June 8.—Upon the invitation of the Football Association, a conference was held respecting the prospects of the game in the future. The delegates present were: Messrs. J. C. Clegg, who occupied the chair; C. Crump, W. Pickford and F. J. Wall (representing the F. A.); J. McKenna, W. Hall and T. Charnley (of the Football League), and S. Bourne (of the Southern League).

The meeting considered various matters in relation to the new taxation, and when arrangements have been made with the Board of Customs and Excise the clubs will be communicated with.

It was also considered that until there was some material change in the present position the regulations and restrictions now in force should be continued.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BASEBALL LEAGUE

A very close and exciting game of baseball took place last evening to decide the championship of the junior series of the P. S. Baseball League. The contending teams represented King George and Central schools, and the former won by the score of 3-2.

The score by innings was as follows:

King George ..... 200001x—3
Central ..... 0000200—2

The battery for the former team was Lipsett and Anderson, and for the latter McGill and Dutton. Mr Harold Long umpired satisfactorily.

This game ends the series and King George school has won the shield.

DOING THEIR BIT

The great little combination of hockey players from Varsity that won everything in the junior series of the O.H.A. in 1914, defeating the Berlin Union Jacks in the final for the O H. A. honours, has suffered its first casualty in the great war by the death of Lieut. M. E. Malone, who was killed in action at Ypres in the latest big battle in which the Canadians again made a name for themselves. "Mike" as he was called by his team-mates, was the captain and goaler of the famous blue and white aggregation, and his coolness and clever work in the nets made a big hit with the local hockey fans. Several attempts were made in the winter of 1914-15 to get him away from the junior squad to help out the senior team, and at one time his decision to stick with the juniors nearly caused trouble in the Varsity Athletic Association. As a net-guardian he was rated as good as the great and only Gilbert of the Argonauts. Ramsay, the point player; 'Gamey' Stratton, and 'Len' Saunders, the crack wing players, are also "somewhere in France," while 'Connie' Smythe, the crack centre player, was the big noise with the 40th Battery, who made such a hit in the Senior O. H. A. series he past winter until they were ordered overseas. Manager Daley is also on the firing line, and was reported as slightly wounded nearly a year ago.—Toronto News.

of the wounded had to crawl on their hands and knees to the ambulance wagon. They tried to shell the waggon, but we got away at top speed. There is no limit to their cruelty. They don't even respect the Red Cross. I expect to go into action again in a few days, with better luck this time, I hope. Don't worry about us. Keep on praying for our success and we will get there all right."

Capt. E. D. O'Flynn, of Belleville, reported to be suffering from shell shock, is a son of Mr. F. R. O'Flynn, who presented the financial report of Albert College at the recent Bay of Quinte Conference. He practised law in partnership with his father in Belleville.

The following notes about the 93rd Battalion appear in the Kingston Standard:

All the tents of the 93rd battalion are now floored.

Bandsman Hughes of the 93rd battalion has 42 players in his band. The band had a good practice yesterday morning.

The ladies of Peterborough are going to present the 93rd Battalion with a large messing and recreation tent. The gift will be very much appreciated by Lieut.-Col. Johnson, and the entire battalion.

Drains are being dug and tile pipes laid by the 93rd Battalion, so as to give the battalion the minimum inconveniences following a heavy rain.

The Kingston Standard says: There is one question on every tongue, and one great big interrogation standing out on every lip, and that is "Will Barriefield keep the present nine battalions until they are sent overseas? The answer is easy when facts are looked in the face. In the first place the Government has spent a lot of money to prepare for the training of such a large force at Barriefield camp, and this has been done with a thorough knowledge of all things connected with the training of overseas troops this summer. In the next place every battalion is spending from $1,200 to $1,500 on improvements for its own comfort and safety and if moved would have to leave these improvements behind. This would be an outrage. Then draining is being constructed on an elaborate and extensive basis for each unit, the work being done by the unit itself, and there is a general appearance of permanency about everything in camp, and the only one who keeps asking the question, "Will we keep the troops in Barriefield until they go overseas?" is spilling a lot of ink over sunshine, and crossing the bridge before it is reached. The troops will be in camp as long as it is necessary to train them here and conditions demand that they go elsewhere. Quit worrying and start doing something to help keep the camp here.

THE ORIGINAL 93RD.

The following letter will be of great interest to the 93rd Battalion and all their friends.

The Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—The history of the old 93rd regiment might be interesting to your readers, since our own battalion has been given the same number.

The old 93rd regiment was organized in 1800 and was the successor to the "Sutherland Fencibles".

The 93rd first saw service in Ireland, then at the Cape of Good Hope where it distinguished itself. In 1838 it was sent to Canada to aid in suppressing the rebellion.

The regiment gained its greatest honours in the Crimean War and in the Indian Mutiny. In the Crimean War the 93rd formed part of the famous Highland brigade under Sir Colin Campbell. At Alma this brigade made the famous charge which won the heights. At Balaklava it was the 93rd that formed the "thin red streak, topped with a line of steel" that did so much to win this memorable battle.

In the Indian Mutiny the 93rd played a conspicious part. It formed part of the force which, again under Sir Colin Campbell marched to the relief of Lucknow, and had a part in all the stirring events of that great struggle.

The 93rd returned to England in 1869. In 1881 it was incorporated with the 91st to form the Princess Louise's Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, the 93rd forming the second battalion of this regiment.

I have been unable to find out the part this regiment played in the South African War, and some other interested reader may furnish this omission.

As the old 93rd is a Highland regiment and wears the kilts, it will be interesting to see whether our Canadian 93rd will don the kilts when it reaches the Old Land.

READER

The 93rd Battalion has been having another medical examination at Barriefield Camp. A board of three doctors will examine every man in camp and the 93rd as the senior battalion at Barriefield, was the first to be examined. The board started work on Wednesday afternoon. The examination of the Peterborough battalion will not be completed until next week. It is understood that men who may be rejected as unfit for service overseas will be given an opportunity for home service.

So far the routine of drill carried on by the 93rd Battalion at Barriefield Camp has been about the same as here, platoon and company drill, with physical exercise and bayonet fighting. The battalion is further ahead along these lines than other units in camp and it is expected that more advanced training will shortly be commenced.

Arrangements are being made to have the bugle band of the 93rd equipped with the crook attachment for their bugles. With these it is possible to play any easy air like "Keep the Home Fires Burning," etc., and nearly all the bugle bands in camp are supplied with them. The 93rd Band will soon be on a footing with the rest in this respect.

Mr. Jas. Campbell of J. J. Turner and Sons, has returned from Valcartier camp, where he was superintending the erection of four large marquee for the use of the Y.M.C.A. as the headquarters of their work among the troops. Two of these tents were 30 by 60 and the other two 50 by 100. On the way home Mr. Campbell stopped at Barriefield Camp, where he erected a 50 by 125 marque for one of the battalions there. Similar big tents have been shipped to the London camp and others have been ordered for the new Borden camp at Angus.

Another well known barber, in the person of Harry Kingdon, the George street tonsorial artist, joined the colours last night. Mr. Kingdon has signed up with the 255th Battalion at Bowmanville and will report for duty in a short time.

Peterborough is already well represented in the 255th at Bowmanville. Lieut. Bruce Mills is one of the officers, Sergt-Major Oxley of Peterborough, is the battalion sergeant-major, and a number of Peterborough recruits have signed up with the new unit.

Souvenir Booklet Brings Two Families

Two families recently removed to Peterborough from Valleyfield, Que., as the result of consulting the souvenir booklet the Salvation Army Band distributed on their trip to the Old Country several years ago. Both women are working in the C.G.E., the husband of one has been engaged by J. J. Turner & Sons, the husband of the other is at the front. One of the families had received a copy of the booklet in the Old Country, and coming to Valleyfield, retained it in their collection of books. Desiring to make a move from Valleyfield they recalled the Peterborough souvenir, read it over carefully, and decided to come to this city. Their glowing impressions were caught by the other woman and now all three are working here.

Painters So Scarce Bosses Go To Work

So scarce are painters that Ald. G. H. Duncan is not only taking contracts, but is himself one of his staff of active workers. When they were more numerous, Alderman Duncan confined his attentions to the contract end of the business, giving estimates and that sort of thing, but the painters are well represented in khaki, and bosses are now taking their places behind the brushes. One feature of this condition is doubtless the fact that the quality of work done will be, if anything, better than before.

CASE TO GO TO PRIVY COUNCIL

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, Ont., June 9.—Divisional Court here to-day held that famous Judge Morson income tax case should go to the Privy Council owing to its far reaching importance. It affects the liabilities of all civil servants drawing salaries "from his Majesty's treasury," to pay income tax.

NEW LACROSSE PLAYERS OUT

At a meeting held after the practice on Wednesday night, Mr. Carl Smuck was elected president. New players at the practice who showed good form were Strickland, McAvoy, McAvey and Tudhott. Nichol and Hatton are expected out to-night. The management are in touch with a number of other new men of ability at the game and Peterborough may count on having the best team that represented this city for years.

The club invites boys 17 and under to their practice as they have an excellent district in Havelock, Hastings, Peterborough and Campbellford.

THEATRE CROWD'S TRIBUTE.

New Yorkers Stood Up When Picture of Kitchener Was Shown.

NEW YORK, June 8.—A silent but intensely impressive tribute to the memory of Lord Kitchener was paid by a large and representative audience at a theatre in West Forty-fifth street Tuesday night.

A film entitled "How Britain Prepared" was being exhibited as an object lesson in preparedness. The first part of the picture dealt with the process evolved by Kitchener for the transformation of his millions of recruits into an efficient and well-organized force of fighting men in the brief time of eighteen months.

Suddenly an excellent portrait of the dead field marshal was flashed upon the screen. The orchestra leader tapped his baton, and as the opening bars of the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," were heard, the entire audience rose and stood in silence until the strains had died away. Not a sound of applause was heard, but the genuineness of the tribute was more marked by the very silence in which it was paid.

THE LAW OF MOSES.

The so-called 'Law of Moses,' as set forth in the Pentateuch, is twofold, partly religious and partly sanitary. Moses was one of the greatest and wisest men of whom we have any knowledge and along with other things he insisted upon what is perhaps the most important of all—health. Many of the laws of the Pentateuch are found dealing, therefore with sanitation. The great non-Jewish world would be a great deal better off to adopt some of the ideas of the great Jewish legislator and statesman, Moses.

GERMANS WITH BULGARS.

For Training Purposes Only — Bulgars Do Not Plan an Offensive.

General Headquarters of the Bulgarian Army at Kuestendil, May 25 (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Gen. Nicolai Jekoff, commander-in-chief of the Bulgarian army, intimated to-day that he had no present intention of engaging in an offensive campaign against the allies in Greece. "If the Greek Government," he said, "can stand the Anglo-French forces on its territory, I am sure we can." The correspondent, who was permitted to make a tour of the Bulgar-German front, found the Bulgarian troops well equipped and in fine physical condition. Attached to the various divisional staffs were German officers. Their duties are entirely confined to instructing the Bulgarians in trench building and other technical details of modern warfare.

The Bulgarian officers are unanimous in their opinion that the Anglo-French forces now in Salonika are entirely inadequate to undertake a successful offensive. Some of them went so far as to say that the Entente would need 2,000,000 men to reconquer Serbia.

After the wedding supper the happy couple left for Toronto, the bride travelling in a charming navy blue suit and white hat.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Clysdale, who will reside at 'Elm Shade Farm,' Dummer, have the most sincere wishes of their friends and acquaintances for a happy and prosperous future.

ESCAPES TORPEDO, BUT NOT FAMILY

NEW YORK, June 10.—Convicted of wife abandonment before Judge Humphrey in the Queens County Court yesterday, William Zeigler, thirty-three years old, unfolded a story of how he was rescued from a vessel that was torpedoed by a German submarine off the coast of Wales.

After having passed two months in a Wales hospital, recovering from his injuries, he related he left aboard the steamship St. Louis and a few days later fell from the rigging of that vessel, fracturing two of the vertebra.

Zeigler was found guilty of having deserted his wife, Mrs. Margaret Zeigler, and his two daughters aged five and six, who live at No. 286 Eighth avenue, Long Island City.

As he told his story to the Court Zeigler wept and at times showed signs of utter collapse.

He said he was married in 1909. He denied having abandoned his family, declaring his brother-in-law "simply took me by the back of the neck and threw me out."

He said he was told not to return until he could view matters in the proper light. This took place in 1913, and not knowing what to do Zeigler said, he went to sea and the war found him aboard an English vessel carrying munitions.

When the vessel was torpedoed he was rescued with five others after floating about on a capsized lifeboat for several hours. Then he spent two months in a hospital in Cardiff, Wales.

He then went to sea again, and, he said the fall aboard the St. Louis apparently has crippled him for life, and he is unable to use his arms to any degree.

He then returned to the home of his parents, No. 158 Linden avenue, Flushing, where he was arrested. The jury coupled a recommendation of mercy with their verdict, and Zeigler was remanded for sentence.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses in eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by overcoming the action of the liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

Russians Continue To Smash Austrian Front With Increasing Success

Czar's Armies Have Taken Four Thousand Square Miles in Two Weeks--Lemberg is the Objective of the Russians --Austrian Line Seems Unable to Re-organize in the Face of the Russian Onslaught.

THE DISTRICTS INVOLVED

PETROGRAD, June 10.—The Russian victory continues. The Austrian line seems unable to reorganize. Lemberg is objective of Czar's big armies. Russians have taken four thousand square miles in two weeks.

The great Russian advance which began last Saturday, under the direction of General Brusiloff has passed through the fortress town of Lusk, which was recaptured on Wednesday, has cleared the territory in front of Tarnopol up to the Strypa River and has resulted in the taking of more than 65,000 Austrian prisoners. The recapture of Lusk, which thus changes hands for the fourth time since last September, and the movement up to the Strypa were announced officially in Petrograd Thursday.

The secrecy with which General Brusiloff has conducted his offensive has led to all sorts of conjectures here, and there has been some criticism of the Petrograd War Office for its failure to indicate just where its blow was being struck and where the immense numbers of prisoners made by the army were taken. It was generally understood the Styr and Strypa regions were closely involved in the offensive, since they were regarded as the logical points of attack in any general campaign against the Austrians. Thursday's communique, however, was the first confirmation of this opinion.

It is regarded as probable that the fortress of Rovno, the only one of the Volhynian fortress triangle, comprising Lusk, Rovno and Dubno, has remained in Russian hands, was used as a base by General Brusiloff for his advance against Lusk. The Rovno-Brest-Litovsk Railway cut the battle line just north of Lusk ,with a branch down to that town. Along this he could move troops and artillery right to his front, and reports from Petrograd show that the attacks are being made in great strength of both men and guns.

Verdun Fight Exerts Great Moral Effect

The battle of Verdun appears to have had a great moral effect in France. It has turned attention from irritating discussions over details of the conduct of the war and has cut short an incipient revival of partisan spirit in parliament and in the press, which had been favored by relative stagnation at the front. Also it seems to have diminished the number of pessimists and hence increased French confidence in the final outcome.

"They have shot their bolt" is a frequent commentary heard in places where two months ago there were nervous complaints as to the prolongation of hostilities. "They can do no more than they have done, which is far from enough ever to shake the French army."

Shortly before the Germans attacked Verdun some radical and Socialist papers attacked the priests, the clericals and the "easy" class, charging them with shirking arduous and dangerous mission. No priest or aristocrat, they said, had ever been seen in a trench. They also accused them of aiding and abetting the Germans after having helped to bring on the war in the hope that a disaster to France would overthrow the republican or parliamentary regime. They accused them of sending money to Germany to subscribe to the German war loans. A wineshop keeper of the Department of Lot who repeated these accusations was prosecuted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, and was fined 1000 francs.

STOP CAMPAIGN.

The campaign against the priests and clericals was even taken up by such a conspicuous writer as Monsieur Paul Adams, who made similar charges in the leading radical newspaper of the South of France, the Depeche de Toulouse, and drew upon himself a storm of protest. The battle of Verdun did more to stop the campaign than the conviction of the wineshop man of the Lot and the protests against the articles of Monsieur Paul Adams. It has perhaps accomplished even more than the letter of the premier, Monsieur Briand, declaring that all such calumnies should be punished. To-day all parties including the Socialists, who have just renewed their declaration in favor of a war to the bitter end, are working in harmony.

About two months ago it was possible to witness such incidents as that which took place in a little cafe in the centre of Paris. Two soldiers in stained uniforms, smacking of the front, were taking their morning coffee in a retired corner—modestly and inconspicuously as is the way with the men who have seen real service. They were concealed from two civilians who were discussing the war, "I've had my fill of it," said one of the civilians. "It's time it was brought to a finish. If the generals in command can not do it they ought to be replaced."

One of the soldiers rose to his feet, and confronted the pessimist. "My good friend," he said, "you must have had a hard time of it. When were you mustered out? Tell us what you have done in the war and what the war's done to you to give you such a tired feeling?" The civilian gulped down the rest of the coffee and rushed out of the cafe without replying.

To-day the same cafe conversations are all about some exploit around Verdun and what will happen to the Germans if they persist in their effort to take the ancient stronghold.

There is also less discussion of the high cost of living than two months ago although there has been no appreciable easing of prices. This too is accounted for by the heroic resistance of the army.

RECOVERING FROM PARALYTIC STROKE

Senator Derbyshire, of Brockville, is Improving

BROCKVILLE, June 10.—Senator Derbyshire, who has been a patient at the General Hospital for several days suffering from the effects of a stroke of paralysis, is reported to be considerably improved, having recovered sufficiently from the shock as to be able to take nourishment. Previous to the attack he had been in poor health, and much alarm was felt when he was stricken. Doctors now hold out some hope that he will be around again. Senator Derbyshire was given a seat in the Upper Chamber when he was M.P. for Brockville, resigning his seat to make room for Hon. G. P. Graham when the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals was taken into the Laurier Cabinet. He is well known in dairy circles throughout the Dominion

Your Heart Flutters Seriously If Neglected

The heart is an unfailing index of strength. Bodily vigour and a strong heart go hand in hand.

A slight fluttering and shortness of breath is a sign of failing strength, arising from weakened digestive power, or from weakness of the nervous system.

The organic and dangerous affections of the heart seldom manifest themselves until a climax is reached.

Even a small variation in strength renders the heart susceptible on the emotional side, and a little fright, anxiety or haste will set it going at a frightful rate.

You ought to know that when your heart flutters easily, when your breath comes in gasps, when you tire quickly upon exertion, and rest does not recuperate, you have allowed yourself to run down.

Under these conditions Ferrozone acts like magic in its strength-giving power. Thousands of Canadians can testify to the marvelous curative power of Ferrozone.

When it's remembered that Ferrozone has the power of making rich, red blood, of giving tone to the system, of vitalizing all the functional powers of the body, it will be seen in cases such as yours, in which these fluttering sensations are present, Ferrozone will speedily restore you to health.

Ferrozone makes you strong because it enables you to digest your food, because it makes rich, red blood—because it tones, strengthens, reinforces the whole system.

"I was so overcome with heart fluttering and acute indigestion I could scarcely walk upstairs without panting and catching for my breath," writes E. K. Young, a well-known merchant in Augusta. "After using one box of Ferrozone I improved, and after two months I was cured, and am sound and healthy as ever to-day."

The best proof of Ferrozone's merit is the enormous good it will do you in your own case; try it, 50c. per box or six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers

Goes To War To Win His Bride

FATHER OF THE GIRL PROMISES TO SETTLE DOWRY OF $50,000.

Vancouver, B. C., June 9.—George Winterbotham, who has just joined the American legion here, was a successful cigar salesman. Now he is a private in the 211th battalion, American legion, with an ordeal ahead of him such as St. George never dreamed of and few young men have had to face to win the hand of the girl they loved.

He has to go through the war to prove his merit. It is not the hard heart of the young lady that is responsible for the conditions, for she is quite willing to accept him as he is without any military record. It is the prospective father-in-law, who demanded that George do some fighting before he secured the prize. In addition to the hand of the young lady, her father has also promised to endow the young couple with the modest sum of $50,000 when that day arrives.

Russian Army On Galician Front Well Equipped

Peasant of the District Either Smothers His Hatred of the Conqueror, or Feels None at All —Soldiers Are Friendly With Natives

There appears to the civilian observers at Strunoff, Galicia, no immediate prospect of a Russian offensive on the Galician front. Meanwhile the Russians have made good use of the several months which have passed since they occupied their present advanced positions. Trench work has been accomplished and wire entanglements constructed. An aeroplane flight which the Associated Press correspondent made over a section of the Russian front disclosed an amazing network of trenches and wire.

Several Russian generals declared that never before since the beginning of the war has their army been so well equipped with munitions and that the army is ready to a man to advance when the orders come.

Across the flats the Austrian trenches can be seen with the aid of field glasses. Now and then an Austrian soldier climbs out of a trench and strolls back to a strip of woods in which white smoke patches suggest camp fires. In the immediate foreground Russian soldiers expose themselves with seeming disregard for the proximity of their enemies who are well within rifle range. An officer explained that because it was their lunch hour the troops relaxed their precaution to some extent. A sort of truce, it appears, has become a feature of operations and it was he said quite certain that until after 2 o'clock no shot would be fired by either side.

Only the artillery failed to observe the truce but that activity was limited to the firing of an occasional shell. On all sides however were caverns blown in the soft earth deep enough to hide a mounted horseman—showing what might be expected after lunch.

Back through the muddy fields to regimental headquarters extend for miles roads which resemble rivulets of ink. The ruts in these trails are hub-deep, revealing why the Russian offensive was brought to a standstill.

A journey of 50 miles from the Russian frontier at Husatin carried the correspondent through a fertile and highly cultivated prairie country. Tilled fields already turning green with the sprouting grain stretched away to the skylines in every direction. Women and old men were performing the labors of cultivation but there was no sign of neglect.

Here and there were villages where dozens of wrecked cottages showed where the tide of battle had ebbed and flowed but in most instances these structured were being rebuilt to some extent.

The Galician peasant either smothers his hatred of the Russians conqueror or feels none at all. Directions are given cheerfully and freely when asked for. Provisions are readily offered and the Russian soldiers quartered in Galician villages appear to be on the most friendly terms with the people. One reason for this attitude it was explained may be found in the kindness with which the Russians have treated the population. For example in a field hospital not far from the front a pale little girl of perhaps ten years occupies one of the cots surrounded by wounded soldiers. Other civilians are similarly given required medical attention. It is the common practice of the Russian army surgeons to take these people in for treatment free of charge.

Iron with Phosphorus is the Greatest Nerve Tonic Known to Medical Science

Bestoned Iron and Phosphorous is a new discovery in nerve tonics.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to tighten and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes weakened, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, dizzy your heads, head and legs begin to shake through loss of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poisonous spring tonics, some can't sleep for twitching nerves and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all these medicines for something that never ailed you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start at once by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of ... Elite Corps of the French Army Again at the Front

General Nivelle, who was a colonel of artillery when the war began, and who although sixty years old has the vigor of the youngest men of twenty, has been assigned to the command of the operations on the French side at Verdun for the purpose, it is hinted by the French military experts, of starting the great "push" which is regarded as imminent in that section. General Petain having accomplished the task which was interrupted by him on February 25 last, of holding at Verdun, "coute que coute" ("cost what may"), to quote the phrase used in the order sent to Verdun by General Joffre, has been promoted to the command of a group armies and has received the very highest honour which the Republic officially can confer on him.

Interesting and significant at this moment is the announcement that with the appointment of General Nivelle the heroic Twentieth army corps has been re-constituted and sent to Verdun. The Reuter's despatch drawn from this announcement the inference that important active operations are impending on the French side at the scene of its tremendous conflict which is still in progress.

In connection with previous important battles reports have become current which the military authorities have not considered it important to deny. With regard to Verdun however, as it is unquestionably the greatest battle ever fought in the world's history, the army chiefs are showing a disposition to have the historical side of it pronounced with all accuracy, so that there may be no basis in the future for incorrect statements regarding it or for disputes concerning features and details of the strategy and tactics.

Retirement Not Intended.

On this account an official statement has been published denying the rumors that in the early days of the battle the French commander in chief had practically decided to abandon the fortress and to withdraw his troops from the right bank of the Meuse; it is being asserted in this connection also that facts and details regarding the personality of the commanders at Verdun are being furnished with a freedom which was not shown in any of the previous great battles.

General Petain, it is mentioned, will have command of the troops of armies immediately to the east of Verdun, in succession to General de Langle de Cary and his promotion is declared to be a reward for his brilliant success in holding at Verdun and in opening the way on the Germans an all important position. He has been honored by the investiture of the Spanish Isle of Alhucemas of the Legion of Honour with the following mention.

"Petain, general of division, commanding an army, a general officer of the highest merit. Since the beginning of the campaign he has not ceased to command of a brigade, of a division of an army, and of an army corps to give proof of the most remarkable military qualities. Thanks to his coolness, to his fitness and to the skilfulness of his dispositions, he was able to re-establish, a delicate situation and to inspire confidence in all. Has rendered to the country the most eminent services."

The war cross also was conferred upon him at the same time.

General Nivelle, like his predecessor as commander of the Verdun army, began his career as a soldier in the artillery. He was colonel in command of a French regiment of artillery, and he distinguished himself from the very beginning. General Joffre described him as possessing the qualities of a natural leader of men and he furnished him with opportunities which allowed him to win several brilliant successes and to earn mention on more than one occasion in army orders.

Was Artillery Officer

On October 24, 1914 he was named general of brigade and in February, 1915, he was put in command temporarily of the Sixty-first infantry division. On December 31 last he received the three stars which mark the rank of commander of an army corps and was entrusted with the leadership of the Third corps. On April 19 he was made commander of the Legion of Honour.

His expert knowledge of the handling of artillery, combined with the fact that for more than a year he has been in charge of large bodies of infantry, makes his selection for the commandership of Verdun seem peculiarly appropriate at a moment when it was believed that energetic offensive operations are being prepared for the purpose of putting the finishing touches to the defeat which the armies of the Crown Prince have suffered in that quarter and all the more so as General Nivelle is regarded as one of the most energetic and inspiring fighters when the opportunity for an offensive is furnished him. He is a native of Tulle, in Correze, and is of remarkable physical strength.

While the honors are already being distributed among the military chiefs who have had the principal share in turning the tide of battle at Verdun, the very unusual spectacle has been afforded to the French nation of seeing a whole army corps singled out as a separate unit for honors. The Twentieth Army Corps has endeared itself to the French people as has no other body of troops since the beginning of the war.

To this corps is credited the salvation of Nancy during the battle of the Marne the chief work in the great effort in Artois in September of last year and now finally the saving of the fortress of Verdun. This corps is from Lorraine. Under the patronage of President Poincare, who is himself from Lorraine, a great festival was held at the Comedie Francoise for the benefit of the refugees from Lorraine, and the occasion was turned into a glorification of the Twentieth Army Corps, a great many of whose officers and men were present.

During the ceremonies, Mr. Maurice Barres, member of the French Academy delivered and address, in which he said:—

An Elite Corps.

"There is one corps in the French army which is crowned with gratitude and reverence, an elite corps whose men, officers and soldiers, are decorated with the colors of the war cross and with many wounds, and in whose hearts is the memory of many loss of companies. This is the Twentieth corps, composed of Lorraine, who when they die transmit their heroic frontier soul to those who succeed them.

"At all times Parisians h ... been numerous in the Twentieth Corps, and now that it has returned here, bleeding and decimated from battle, all the provinces of France are competing for the honor of filling up the empty spaces. THE EDITOR'S BABY

The editor of the Dayton News has a baby. We judge this by the following article on croup, which we publish in full, and we congratulate the fond father that he pulled the child through safely. There are thousands of other fond fathers who have felt the same way but have not the finest pen with which to picture their woes:

CROUP.

Days of dread and nights of terror mark the time when baby has the croup.

Who has not gone through the period of the little one's life when comes this thing of suffering knows not the full gamut of emotion.

—We do not seem to be able to guard against the attack of croup and when it comes we know not what to do. We pace the floor listening to the labored breathing, hoping, praying that soon relief will come.

Maybe we have been thanking our lucky stars that our own baby has escaped. As we watch little Jack playing with his blocks on the floor in the warmth and protected from the cold, damp wind, we think how well he has been all winter. We are careful that no chance is given him to catch a cold. Then one evening as we sit down to dinner we note that his little voice has grown hoarse and we grow nervous.

When dinner is over and little Jack gets ready for his bed we console ourselves that it is nothing. But when he says his little "Now I lay me down to sleep," we note that the hoarseness has grown worse. And yes, there is a faint flush on his face, and its breathing is difficult. But he soon falls to sleep and we breathe in relief. Then he wakes up crying, clutching at the coverings, fighting for breath. What shall we do? We call the doctor. He is not in. Will he never return? And the breathing of the little one becomes labored and more difficult.

Visions of our childhood come, when mother worried over us, feeding us vinegar and syrup from a big tin spoon which she heated over the lamp, and we seem to smell the tar that was burned in the room.

Again we call the doctor. Yes! he is on the way. Oh, why don't' he hurry! We know that baby is getting diphtheria and will choke before the doctor arrives. We moan in anguish. We think of the mean things we have done.

Comes thought of the cross words we used to baby, and our impatience. O, God, spare the child, and we will be forbearing evermore!

Then comes the doctor. He looks at the baby and feels his pulse. He packs a bag of ice around that little throat. It looks like cruel treatment, and we shudder, but we question not, for all our hopes and all our fears are in the doctor. How careless he seems, as if this baby did not count, and how rough and uncouth he looks! But in a little while the breathing that had been so loud is no longer heard, and we have another fear. But the doctor reassures us. Yes, baby is sleeping quietly now and the flush has gone from his cheeks. The fever is vanished. We are told that the danger is over for the time being. How good and kind that doctor looks. And why should he not appear all personification of goodness and kindness? Has he not saved to us all we hold on earth most dear?

And, leaving, the doctor tells us what we should do. He tells us how to look after baby to guard against future attacks, and how we shall act if the attack comes again. No!! Indeed, no! We are told under any circumstances that we must never give any medicine guaranteed to cure the croup unless we want to put the baby beyond the help of the doctors. Just be sensible and careful! That is all. We know we will be careful to call this doctor the minute there is another sign of croup. We promise to be sensible, and we mean to be sensible if we can.

When we are alone again, just the fearful parents of a little baby that has been near to death, we lose all restraint. We are very foolish, but we are very thankful. And before we close our eyes in sleep after that terrible time we are not ashamed to fall on our knees by that little bed and say aloud our thanks to Him who holds the lives of our little croupy children in His hands.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S THREE GORED SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

Just looking at this model will create a strong desire to have a walking skirt on the same modest lines. For all its simplicity, this smart looking garment, in three gores, has some degree of style with side panels, a pocket in each front and buttons that ornament and close the skirt down the front. The pocket lap of material and in tab effect gives a nutty finish. In serge, gabardine, whipcord, linen or pique this model will develop with substantial satisfaction. Its folds just ripple into fulness and in fulness we have the extreme in style to-day. If striped goods be employed in the making of the garment and you desire a bit more "dash" expressed it would be a novelty to use plain material for the pocket lap and to cover the buttons. Whatever the material used to make the garment this same scheme may be followed to give a note of contrast.

The pattern is cut in sizes 22 to 30 inches waist measure. To make in size 24 will require 3¾ yards of 36 inch material, including an outside belt.

The pattern may be obtained by sending ... cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. KEEVER

School Lunches: (Continued) — In the last two articles, mainly quoted from a bulletin by the Department of Agriculture, the subject of bread and milk as principal foods for children was discussed. We will now direct your attention to Green Vegetables and Fruits in the child's diet. Before doing it may be stated that other protein — rich feeds besides milk should be used, such as eggs which contain much iron, in which milk is lacking. Gradually as the child develops, fish, chicken, other meats, cheese, dried beans, peas, etc., may be added.

Vegetables and fruits are now considered a necessary part of the diet of the child. The reasons are many, but most of them may be summed up by saying that they furnish material needed to form bone and tissue, and to regulate body processes. The mild acids which some of them contain help to prevent constipation; so, too, does the cellulose or fibre, especially when it is raw, though its value for this purpose may have been exaggerated in popular literature. Green vegetables are also a valuable means of introducing into the diet mineral matters, particularly iron, in a form in which the body can utilize them. Even at city prices green vegetables have been shown to be an economical source of iron. Like the protein-rich foods, therefore, they should be looked upon as a separate and important group of foods to be drawn upon regularly.

The uses of fruits in the diet are much the same as those of green vegetables, though unlike most vegetables, they have a considerable percentage of sugar, especially when they are dried, and sugar is a quickly absorbed fuel food. Like vegetables, they have value because they contribute some of the nitrogen required for tissue building and repair, and some energy. However, they are valuable chiefly because they supply growth-stimulating and body-regulating substances and also mineral matter needed for bone and for many other purposes. The quantity of these materials in fruits and vegetables is small, it is true, but large in comparison with the amount in many other common foods.

Fresh vegetables and fruits must be prepared with care, for there is danger of transmission of disease by means of foods that are served raw. Most people will agree that apples, pears, etc., as picked from the tree in an orchard far enough from the road to escape dust, are clean. If they drop to the ground upon clean grass they may still be eaten without much risk, although there would then be more chance for dirt, with its attendant disease-producing bacteria.

All fresh fruits and vegetables which come from the market should be thoroughly washed in several waters. Most fruits may be safely dipped in boiling water and many can be kept there for several seconds without injuring their flavour. This kills many, if not all, of the bacteria and other organisms that are likely to cling to the fruit. A convenient way to do this is to place the fruit in a wire frying basket. Grapes, apples, pears, peaches and plums are not injured by this treatment, and unripe strawberries are often improved by it. Large fruits such as bananas, apples, oranges and others with unbroken skins may be safely washed with soap. Dried fruits should be particularly well washed. If they are then put into a warm oven to dry they are likely to absorb the water which clings to them and thus to be softened and improved in taste.

The dessert for any meal usually consists of fruit, either raw or cooked, of sweets, or of pastry. Most children like fruits, raw, cooked or dried and so they are very useful for dessert for them. Even here, however, variety should be considered and the less common uses for fruits are worth noting. For example, in a certain boarding school finely chopped dried fruits and nuts mixed together, rolled out and cut into squares like caramels, resembling candy, are given daily to the children. These are very palatable and nutritious and are believed to prevent constipation.

Pies and other kinds of pastry add much fat to the diet, the amount of fat in many kinds of pie (taking crust and filling together, being more in proportion to weight than in any meat but the very fattest. Most authorities on food believe that it is better to serve fat to children in the form of butter, milk, cream, egg yolks, or uncooked salad oils than in the form of rich pastry or rich sweets —i.e., desserts that are heavily sweetened and also very fat.

Experience has shown that fruits, fresh or served in simpler forms (baked, stewed or raw), and simple sweets are better forms of dessert for children than preserves or rich pastry. Sweets may be given in the form of cake (not too rich or it comes into the class of pastry), cookies, sweet sandwiches, simple candy, honey, dried or preserved fruits, maple sugar, and loaf sugar, and in many other ways. Highly flavoured and spiced foods should be avoided because they spoil the appetite for simple flavours.

CLUB NOTES.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5999 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

Dear Doctor— I am a farmer 63 years of age and am troubled with a burning sensation in one foot. The fore part of the foot and the leg are burning hot night and day, but the foot does not swell. Sometimes the burning sensation extends up my leg. One doctor told me it was a disturbance of the nerves and he gave me some medicine. It did no good. I have also bathed the foot in hot water, salt water and alum water, without benefit. My foot was hurt by a horse stepping on it. I am perfectly well otherwise.

J. M.

Answer.—The burning in the foot, while it is possible that it has been aggravated by the horse stepping upon it, I believe is caused from the spine, and if you were to go to a thoroughly reliable and skilled osteopath he could probably relieve you in a few treatments. If it were due to the injury from the horse having stepped upon it the local application would have relieved it. The fact that they did not inclines me to think the trouble originates in the spine, from which all the nerves of the body centre. The burning is not a disease, but a symptom and it should be given attention at this time, so that it will not develop nto anything more serious, as it is liable to do if not properly treated.

MACKENSEN A FIGURE OF MYSTERY

Field Marshal Von Mackensen With Brilliant Record, is Little Understood

BOON COMPANION OF KAISER

BERLIN, June 9.—It is doubtful whether any popular national hero in Germany is in general so little known, either in Germany or abroad, as Gen. Field Marshal August von Mackensen, he who was instrumental in driving the Russians out of Galicia and to whose credit the conquest of Serbia lies.

Hindenburg, when the war began, was an unknown, but the public quickly familiarized itself with every detail of life when his victories of Tannenburg and the Masurian Lakes make him an idol of all Germany. Rival for public affections at present was only a name until the Summer of 1915, and, despite his great reputation, is little more now.

Countless streets all over Germany have been named after Hindenburg; statues already have been erected to him; he is weekly in receipt of requests to allow the use of his name in this or that connection. Mackensen, however, though certainly a rival of Hindenburg insofar as military achievements are concerned, is still far behind him when it comes to popular esteem or idolatry.

Mackensen's pictures, however, are to be seen everywhere. They perhaps are responsible for an impression that seems to be almost universal than the Field Marshal is stern and unapproachable whereas the opposite in the case. Scarcely any of his innate personal characteristics except that of unusual ability seem to be depicted on his strenuous features.

When Mackensen began too tower above the other German Army leaders by his achievements against the Russians, and the Kaiser in frequent telegraphic messages conferred honor after honor on him, it was a matter of surprise to Germans unfamiliar with Mackensen's career that a warm personal note should manifest itself, which had been lacking in earlier messages to Hindenburg.

The surprise came largely from the fact that the general public did not, and to a great extent still does not, know how long-standing and cordial are the relations between the Emperor and Mackensen. The latter surrendering the command of his bodyguard Hussars years ago, served for a long period as the Kaiser's personal adjutant, and in this position accompanied his chief on the noted trip to the Holy Land.

LIFE WAS FOR CIVIL LIFE ON FARM.

Few know either how narrowly Germany missed having Mackensen as a great military leader. He is the son of a man who in America would be rated as a gentleman farmer and himself was trained to take his father's place. Though he emerged from the Franco-Prussian war as a reserve Lieutenant, he immediately went back to civil life in deference to his parent's wishes.

For years he resisted the impulse to go back into the army, and fought with himself a battle which his most enthusiastic biographer describes as a conflict between ideal and reality. His university education, belated because of the war with France, was almost concluded, and he was fast becoming in theory at least, a farmer when the opportunity to go back as a line officer into the "Death's Head Hussar" regiment, with which he had served in France, arrived once more, and his father reluctantly withdrew his objections to this career.

A number of characteristics possessed by Mackensen stand out prominently, and have stood out ever since he joined the Second Bodyguard Hussars on May 13, 1873. Some of them obviously have contributed to his military success; others belong to those peculiarities which successful men in general have.

In the former category comes, first of all, an astonishing memory, which enables him oftentimes to direct operations without the aid of a map, provided, of course, that he has at some earlier time studied the territory in question. Incidentally it might be remarked that he generally has done the studying, for he is a prodigious worker at all times.

Mackensen rarely forgets a name or a face, and years after meeting junior officers astonishes them by calling them by name when meeting them again. Few know it, but Mackensen rivals Hindenburg in his intimate knowledge of his native land, and has traveled and studied so extensively that he instantly recognizes any great place from its physical characteristics.

Contrary to general belief, Mackensen is the best sort of a comrade and lacks the repelling sternness with which lesser men barricade themselves.

Off and on since 1870 he has been connected with the Death's Head Hussars, and to-day is their General al suite. No officer ever has been more popular, and few more approachable. There are countless cases on record of financial and other aid that he has rendered, though not a man of wealth to men of his company, brigade or regiment.

Mackensen's early training on a farm or country estate instilled in him a love of the open and for hunting that has always stayed by him. Though almost 67 years old, he never has been ill a day and is so strenuous a worker that his younger officers often have hard work in keeping up to the pace that he sets.

His principal aversion is the shirker, including the man who, though not actually dodging work, likes to take things easy and perhaps overindulge in the pleasure comforts of life. The officer of his staff who is too prone to lose over his after-dinner cigar or liqueur has not an easy time of it.

Mackensen himself does not smoke, because, according to report of an occurrence in the Franco-Prussian war. He was at the time a non-commissioned officer in one of the famous Black Hussar regiments, and was intrusted with important communications that had to be carried to a neighboring staff. The trip was long, hard and dangerous, but important in proportion.

He arrived in time to find the staff at the conclusion of a dinner, and in a very peevish mood because there were no cigars on hand. Though Mackensen tried to impress on the officers the importance of his message, their primary thought as for something to smoke, and they simply ignored the dispatches in asking him whether he had any cigars with him.

As a matter of fact, Mackensen did happen to have a number, but he was so angry at the action of his superior officers in putting personal comfort above military matters that he not only did not give away his smokes but never thereafter smoked himself, or tolerated undue waste of time in this way by his later subordinates.

Another anecdote of Mackensen's early career is equally characteristic of the determination and the chivalry which his intimates know so well. He was a student of the University of Halle and the leader of his "set". He and his fellow-students came to know a talented young actress and her mother, and learned from the latter that the daughter was severely handicapped by the chicanery of the theatre manager, who not only repressed her every effort to advance, but insulted and bothered her as well.

Instead of making the matter a personal issue between himself and the manager, as most other hot-blooded young student might have done, Mackensen was far more diplomatic. He assembled the entire student body which, flower-laden, went to the theatre and overwhelmed the actress with applause and bouquets. There ensued so much favorable publicity that the manager had to recede from his position and give the actress the opportunity she had sought.

Hardly an ex-comrade of Mackensen but can testify to some personal act of kindness—some help in an emergency that the latter has rendered. It is these seldom-told stories of officers which the public hardly ever hears that most of all dispel the impression that the Field Marshal is stern and forbidding and unapproachable.

Mackensen's most prominent trait, perhaps had been his unusually strong filial devotion and loyalty. It has been his custom for years to write his aged mother the first thing each Sunday morning and on New Year's Day. So far as it is known, he has never neglected this self-imposed task as much as once, regardless of where he has been or under what circumstances he has had to write.

SWISS SPOIL GERMAN GAME.

Westminster Gazette: "Engrossing and forestalling" were practices frequently complained of during the Napoleonic wars and Switzerland has just frustrated a German effort to revive them. Germans and other foreigners, including a least one Bulgarian, have recently been purchasing groceries in small quantities, so as to avoid suspicion, from retailers —also mostly foreigners—in Western Switzerland, and sending the goods to a German trading company established at the beginning of the war at Zurich. It has stored them in hope of a rise in prices, which is highly probable, owing to the inevitable difficulties set up by the precautions taken against re-export to Germany of supplies allowed by the Allied Governments to reach Switzerland from overseas. The scheme was carried out with German thoroughness and patience. One lot of coffee stored amounted to 700 sacks, all bought and delivered a few pounds at a time. However, the Swiss Government has confiscated the goods and expelled the purchasers, and is now on its guard against any repetition of the device.

HER TELEPATHIC PLEAS HIS REPLY TO "CRUELTY"

New York, June .—To refute his wife's charges of cruelty Ernest Albert Fleischer produced yesterday before Justice Callaghan in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn several letters from Mrs. Annette Ewart Schwartz Fleischer, well known as a lecturer and a traveller. Mrs. Fleischer also is a teacher in the public schools and her husband is employed in an executive position by a brewing corporation.

Mrs. Fleischer has applied for alimony pending trial of her action for separation, and the letters, some of them the fervid outpourings of an overflowing heart and other soliloquies on the part her automobile and telephone played in her life, were produced by her husband as a reply.

The couple married in 1904, separated in 1909, but after her return from a trip around the world Mrs. Fleischer went back to live with her husband. They separated again soon afterwards. In a letter written in Dresden, August 15, 1908, Mrs. Fleischer said:

"I want you to study both German and French, and read good books. I will try and become interested in the lectures you care for, but for a while I am bound to care for other things—public masquerades, flattery and attention from others.

"That is the reason I ask you to be as lenient as possible this year that I may not become discouraged. I may decide that it is impossible and throw the whole thing up."

THE AMOROUS ALHAMBRA.

Another letter, written at Grenada, Spain, July 17, 1908, ran:

"My dearly Ernest: Oh, it is wunderschoon here. I just wanted you this afternoon. I haven't longed for you so much in ages. I wonder if you felt my spirit cry out to yours. It was about 4 o'clock this afternoon. See if you can remember any such sensation at the corresponding time at home.

"I was wandering alone in the gardens and corridors of the beautiful, deserted Alhambra, and came upon a balcony just built for lovers. I thought of the scenes that balcony had portrayed, of the lovers it had held—all gone, cold, forgotten. But it still remains a mute appeal to the lovers of the present and will still appeal when we too are cold and forgotten.

"If I could have had you this afternoon and have thrown my arms around your neck, I would have been so sorry for the past and would have yearned for that perfect love so much that I would have looked the future confidently in the face. Forgive me, dearest for all the sorrow I have caused you. Forgive me, and I will try and make you happy."

Other letters produced by Mr. Fleischer bore the postmarks of Hawaii, and other distant points.

In a letter dated April 11, 1915, Mrs. Fleischer, who drives her 60-horse power coupe automobile, writes:

"My coupe has been such a comfort. I have a chauffeur for night of course, but I love to run it myself. I adore reckless, transcendant flight through the streets, plunging into sudden openings; grinding, sudden, hairbreadth stops; rounding abrupt corners, tossed and buffeted, skimming into new perils. It all seems something of myself—yes, my reckless, daring, danger-loving self.

"Then there is my telephone, which calls me twenty times a day. I never go to it without a little thrill of anticipation. I adore it as a gambler the rolling ball. This mysterious instrument which with its startling jangle can change the complexion of a dull day and send me swiftly out on some new dare throbbing with excitement.

"I appreciate it too for its mocking moments of conversation laughting excesses or new traps to set. But it is its quality of the unexpected I adore—the possibility at the last moment after a day of calculated planning to throw everything to the winds and to rush off on the hazards of the unexpected."

Mrs. Fleischer added that part of her letter was taken from her book, "L'Anette" which she was writing at that time.

Justice Callaghan reserved decision on her application.

STARVATION IN VIENNA.

Misery Suffered May Lead to Revolution, Is Report.

London, June 8.— A correspondent of The London Times, who has unusual opportunities of ascertaining the state of feeling and actual position in Austria-Hungaria," says that last week an important member of a neutral legation in Vienna wrote: "Here existence is no longer possible. We have no bread to eat, no milk, no butter, no fat, nothing—absolutely nothing.

"The general misery is indescribable. Everybody talks of an awful revolution if the war lasts much longer. The offensive against Italy has been undertaken in order to keep up the public spirits and because it is hoped that success in that quarter will end the war. Woe betide us if this hope should also fail."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Beauty and The Beast

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

A scientist has made the statement that, while beauty in women is highly prized by men, beauty in men is not prized by women. Whether or no this is true, the fact remains that a great many very pretty women have married painfully ugly men. It does seem to be the case that women are captured by men in an entirely different way from what men are captured by women. Perhaps if the subject were followed out scientifically it would be found in the fact that the man is snared by weakness, while the woman is snared by strength.

Rosalind Thurber was a very pretty country girl at the age (eighteen) when most girls are at their prettiest and was a great favorite with the young farmer boys, who were her natural associates. She was about to please her father and mother by accepting Gus Walker, the son of one of the most prominent farmers in the neighborhood and commonly considered rich. Young Walker was as handsome as Rosa was pretty. Indeed, he was considered the best looking young fellow in all that region.

Farmer Gordon, about that time having crops to get in, hired a hand, Joe Green, a man about thirty years old, who was a sight to behold. He had a birthmark on his neck and when a baby had fallen into a fire which had scarred his whole face. Added to this, he was freckled, and his hair was a sort of red sorrel. One night at a barn dance this scarecrow was present. The girls would not dance with him. He invited Rosa among the first, and she turned her back on him without even deigning him an answer. That ended his invitations for partners. One of the young men asked him why he didn't go through the whole list, and he replied that since Rosa Thurber would not dance with him he would never dance with any other girl. Of course this was repeated to Miss Thurber, who said that she was pleased to save the other girls the pain of being invited to dance by such a scarecrow.

The next thing that Rosa heard about Joe Green was that when twitted about finding, or rather not finding, girl to marry him he had said that the only girl in the world he would care to marry was Rosalind Thurber. On hearing it she said that he had as much chance of marrying her as he had of marrying the empress of Germany.

One day when Rosa was walking on the road she met Joe. Her only notice of his presence was to make a face at him. He lifted his hat politely.

Joe used to hang around the Thurber farm in hopes of getting a sight of Rosa. All the family noticed this and used to twit her about it. One day when Joe had been sitting on a fence for an hour, looking up at the house where she lived, she astonished all present by going out on the porch and throwing some feed to the chickens.

Even then no one suspected that the girl had been touched by Joe's devotion and had gone out to reward him with a sight of her. But under Joe's homeliness was a keen insight into a woman's nature, and with great satisfaction he got down from the fence and went away.

The next time she met Green was in the evening when he was taking the horses to water.

"When are you going to stop making a guy of yourself about me?" she asked.

"I'm not making a fool of myself," he replied. "Of all the men hereabouts I'm the only one that appreciates you. You can't stop me from loving you, no matter what you do."

"What do you love me for?"

"'Cause you're the only girl in the world worth loving."

"How long have you loved me?"

"Since the first night I ever saw you at the barn dance."

"How long are you going to love me?"

"Till the day of judgment."

There being no more information on the subject to be derived, Rosa passed on, leaving Joe to attend to the rest of his chores.

After awhile Joe Green and Rosa Thurber were seen occasionally walking together. Then they began to be spoken of as beauty and the beast. Gus Walker, who had been expecting soon to be engaged to her, met her one evening on the road with Joe. Joe attempted to smile and made such a horrible face of it that Gus forgot to bow to Rosa. The next time Gus and Rosa met he asked her where was her scarecrow lover and received a reply that some persons were scarecrows on the outside and some persons were scarecrows on the inside. Then she turned on her heel, and that was the last there was of courtship between the two.

One day it became reported that the pretty Rosa Thurber was going to marry that homely Joe Green. No one would believe it at first, but after several of Rosa's friends had asked her about it and she had admitted it it was accepted as a fact. They were married, and the most astonishing part of the matter followed in a crop of beautiful children. Most of them resembled the mother, with her raven tresses and rosy complexion, and the "red headed ones," as those who inherited from the father were called, fortunately did not fall in the fire as he had done and were therefore without his blemish in this respect and without his birthmark.

DOCTORS DESCRIBE CRUELTY OF BULGARS

English and French Prisoners Stripped of Clothing by Captors in Winter

FIND HATRED OF AMERICANS

After Sixteen Months With Armies of Central Powers, Two American Doctors Return

NEW YORK, June 8.—Two young American physicians, Dr. B. F. Morowitz, of 130 West 113th street and Dr. Charles S. Pancoast of Philadelphia, have just returned after sixteen months of service in the Hungarian Army and in Bulgar hospitals treating prisoners of war. Yesterday Dr. Morowitz told of his experiences and said that the Bulgars treat their prisoners, particularly the French and English, with unspeakable cruelty; that when he left Budapest a few weeks ago it was known that one-third of the soldiers fighting on the Italian front were Germans in Austrian uniforms, and that every man in Austria-Hungary between the ages of 17 and 60 who is physically able to carry a gun has been called to the colours.

The Germans and the Austrians, Dr. Morowitz said, are still confident that victory will ultimately be with the Central Powers, but in Hungary the people are beginning to realize that after all the war may end in triumph for the Entente nations.

The Germans, said Dr. Morowitz, hate the Americans even more than they do the English, and about the only subject they can talk about when they meet Americans is the American supply of munitions to the Allies. Both President Wilson and Colonel Roosevelt, he added, are hated by the Germans, the Colonel perhaps a little more than the President. In Hungary the feeling on the part of the people is one of resentment rather than of hate so far as Americans are concerned.

Drs. Morowitz and Pancoast were in Hungary about eleven months and in Bulgaria about five months. They were also in Austria and Germany a few weeks on their way to the United States.

Conditions in Central Powers.

Here is the story of the sixteen months these two young Americans spent in Hungaria and Bulgaria, as well as of their limited observations in Austria and Germany on their way back to the United States. Dr. Morowitz is the narrator, and this is what he said yesterday:

"When we arrived in Hungary about seventeen months ago things were in pretty good shape, when everything was taken into consideration. Then it was possible to get a fairly good meal for two or three crowns, and the people generally had enough to eat. To-day everything is changed. You never see young men in the cities and towns any more unless they happen to be physically unfit or maimed as a result of previous war service. All the work is done by old men, children and women, the latter of all ages. The street car conductors are all women, and in numerous instances they have had to take the place of the motormen because there were not enough old men left to do that work.

"I do not believe that there is a family in Hungary which is not in mourning; at least I did not come in contact with any whose family circle had not been saddened by some tragedy due to the war. Coffee was almost unknown nd there is hardly any milk left in he country. And he beggars, infirm, and old men and women who can neither fight nor work are everywhere. In Budapest the beggars average about four to every corner in the city.

"Now I want to make it plain that I have only the deepest sympathy for the Hungarians. They are a fine people and their men are as good soldiers as here are fighting anywhere in Europe to-day. They are generous folk, too, a fact that is proved by their treatment of thousands of prisoners in their country. For instance, you will see Russian prisoner s going about Budapest and other Hungarian cities unguarded and everywhere treated with kindness and consideration.

"As a matter of fact, it sometimes struck me that the Hungarians had a much more kindly feeling for those big, good-natured Russian prisoners than they did for the Germans. Down deep in his heart the Hungarian does not like the German.

Recent German Seizure of Food.

Last year the Germans managed to get a large part of the Hungarian harvest for the use of their own people, and the result was a condition approaching half starvation in Hungary. But this will not happen again, and, as a Hungarian officer expressed it to me, 'We won't ever be such fools again as to let our people face starvation in order to feed Germans in Germany.'

"When the Germans came to Bulgaria following the jump of Bulgaria to the side of the Central Powers, they forthwith proceeded to make an inventory of everything in the country in the way of food. As a result thousands of cattle and pigs were shipped out of the country to Germany, the Germans fixing a price and the Bulgarians being forced to take it.

"The hotels in Bulgaria are filled up with German merchants and buyers, and the German soldiers live in good style while the poor Bulgar soldier gets along as best he can.

"Bulgaria's treatment of her prisoners of war will, when the story is fully told, prove to be one of the blackest pages in the history of this frightful war. The treatment accorded to the French and British prisoners is so horrible as to be almost indescribable. When they take prisoners they made them take off their shoes and socks and whatever else in the way of clothing they want. I have known them to strip prisoners naked and leave them in the cold of winter. Likewise they take everything the prisoner may have in the way of rings, watches, money, or anything else.

"During the past winter the Bulgars compelled British and French prisoners to work on roads and in other exposed places barefooted and with little clothing. Case after case of frozen feet came under my care. I call to my mind now two poor young Englishmen, one 19 and the other 21 years of age, who lost both their feet as a result of the inhuman treatment by the Bulgars. I simply cite this as a case among scores of the same kind.

"You ask me about the treatment of Americans. In Bulgaria they have come to hate us just as they do in Germany and Austria. The Bulgars are as a rule ignorant and easily impressed by the tale bearer, and the story taken to them is that all Americans in Bulgaria are spies. Shortly after the invasion of Serbia some seventy American physicians who had been working in Serbia came to Bulgaria. They were given forty-eight hours to quit the country and were forbidden to travel through Austria or Germany.

In Hungaria Americans are not hated so much as in the other countries of the central combination. The people feel a resentment, so to speak, because of our supposed attitude in the war, but nowhere do you see the unmistakable signs of deep-seated hatred so common in Austria, Germany and Bulgaria.

"As a matter of fact the Germans hate Americans more than they do the English, and so do the Austrians. All that is necessary to prove this is for an American to go into a coffee house or other public place and listen to the sneering remarks that will be uttered for his or her benefit at the other tables.

"As for the President and Colonel Roosevelt, the less said about them the better when you are in Germany and Austria. They are both hated to the limit, with the limit stretched a little on the side of Colonel Roosevelt."

Both Dr. Morowitz and Dr. Pancoast were with the Hungarian Army during the last Teutonic drive in the Carpathians. Both spoke in the highest terms of the gallantry of the troops of the Central Powers in that campaign.

WIDOWS

According to the census of 1910 there were 3,167,232 widows in the United States; 2,826,684 were between fifteen and sixty-four years of age; 702,000 were below age forty-five. Can you picture the struggle of the thousands thrown upon their own resources and fighting for an existance for themselves and their children? How many of the 2,465,3% above the age of forty-five are dependent upon relatives and the public for support? Among all these hundreds of thousands there is not one single inmate of a poor house, home for the aged, or friendless who was provided with a monthly income under a life insurance policy. What a splendid opportunity right now for husbands to protect widows of this land.

Any husband can do so by purchasing a Guaranteed Income policy from THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA. The Company guarantees payment to wife at your death of any sum you choose followed by a like amount on the same day of every month as long as she shall live.

Get the particulars of this valuable policy as it should be in every home.

Overland

Six $1600

45 horsepower 125 in. wheelbase f. o. b. Toronto 7 passenger 30" x 4½" tires

Production and Price

Do the great variety of Sixes and the fluctuating prices seem confusing and perplexing?

Let's reason it out.

What controls price? Production.

As a manufacturer's production increases, his production cost, per car, decreases.

Therefore the plant with the largest production is in a position to give more of everything and charge less for it.

We are the world's largest producers of Six and Four Cylinder Automobiles.

Consequently you get in the Overland Six a larger and more powerful motor—a longer wheelbase—the convenience of electric control buttons on the steering column and an almost endless list of other comforts and refinements.

—yet what is the price?

Not $1700 or $1850 but $1600.

And when it comes to a Six Cylinder performance, remember the Overland Six is the star of them all.

One ride will convince you.

FOUND MARK OF VIOLENCE ON THE BODY

CANANDAIGA, June 9.—A jury to hear the case of Mrs. Florence Walborn, aged 28 years, of Geneva, indicted of manslaughter, was obtained in County Court and District-Attorney Nathan D. Lapham of Geneva, presented four witnesses for the prosecution before the adjournment.

Mrs. Walborn is charged with having caused the death of an infant known as Alice Pyke, who was obtained by her from the Geneva Shelter, an institution operated by Mr and Mrs. A. Reynolds. It is alleged that while washing the infant the woman worked herself into a frenzy because the child cried continually and threw the little one upon a couch. Its head struck a hard substance and an injury was caused which caused a cerebral hemorrhage.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds were the first witnesses for the prosecution. They testified that at the time Mrs. Walborn asked permission to take the baby the latter was less than two weeks old. Within a short time after the child had been given in her charge Mrs. Walborn, according to the testimony of these witnesses, told them that the child was ill in a Sayre hospital. Later she informed the Reynolds that the child had died in Pennsylvania.

District-Attorney Lapham next called Dr. E. G. Padgham of Geneva who testified that the child died in Geneva, March 24th. He said the symptoms during the last hours of the child's illness were of a nature to indicate a brain injury. Dr. Padgham said he did not find any abrasions on the scalp, but that he noticed some scratches on the neck and a mark resembling a blood blister on the fore head. Dr. Chauncey W. Grove of Geneva, who performed the autopsy on the child's body on March 25th described that examination. He said the cause of death was cerebral hemorrhage, the injury being caused by violence. Dr. Grove admitted under cross-examination by Myron D Short, a former district-attorney who is defending the woman, that he made no notes of normal conditions of the body and was not in a position to state whether there were any marks on the child's forehead or neck He said he found no indications of disease.

Mutual Suggestion.—The other day the wife of a Glasgow riveter, who is doing very well, bought in a Sauchiehall Street milliner's a three-guinea hat. She had a younger woman with her, and the milliner lady, to improve the shining hour, asked, "Would you not like a nice 'sailor' for your daughter?" "Oh, nay," said the mother, "wid ye no like a nice sodger fur yersel'?"

DUMA CHEERS ADVANCE.

PETROGRAD, June 9.—The news of the beginning of General Brussiloff's offensive on the southwestern front was greeted in the Duma with ringing cheers. The general feeling is one of hopeful anticipation.

The moment chosen is singularly opportune. The Central Powers have thrown all the emphasis of their offensive to the west. The Germans engaged at Verdun had left their section of the Russian front heavily fortified and were with their allies boasting that, with the help of their artillery and machine guns, they would be able to hold the Russians behind their forests of barbed wire. The Austrians were engaged on the Italian campaign and had left the Russian Southwestern front forces not exceeding 700,000, supported by not more than two German divisions.

The long spell of warm weather having dried up the roads the Russians have not now to contend with those serious transport difficulties that hampered the advance in December. The swamps behind them during the winter were made passable by the construction of a remarkable net work of timber roadways. The whole technical organization of General Brussiloff's armies has made amazing progress. The men are in splendid form, and their accumulation of energy is such that for some time the whole front has been restlessly waiting for the command to advance.

HOW SWISS HANDLE MAIL FOR SOLDIERS

Stupendous Task Shouldered by the Little Republic at No Cost to Belligerents

BERNE, Switzerland, June 9.—There is one small postage stamp with a black border and the single word: "decede," (dead,) which represents a greater tragedy than any battle in the present war. It is the stamp used by the international mail service, conduced by the Swiss Government, between the prisoners of war of all nations and their families, on letters directed to soldiers who have fallen at the front or died in hospital.

A large table is piled high with these letters, each bearing the fatal stamp 'decede'. This is but one mail and each day's mail piles the table again. They are to families in England, Germany, France, Turkey, Austria, Japan—the entire range of the fighting countries—for Switzerland has taken over the entire work of administering this mail service between families and their men at the front.

For a small country it is an enormous work that Switzerland has thus assumed, bearing the entire expense without a penny's charge to any one. Located right in the heart of the carnage, with the fighting nations on every side, Switzerland is peculiarly placed for effectively carrying on this humanitarian work. It is like the diplomatic work which the United States assumed for the different countries, but the magnitude of the work is probabaly greater owing to the vastness of these daily mails between all the fighting countries. And yet Switzerland does this work simply and without noise, and few know of the extent of the undertaking.

Accompanied by Secretary Breny of the Post Office Department, who is in direct charge of the work, the Associated Press representative saw its many branches of activity in full operation. Even the big General Post Office of Switzerland was not adequate to carry on this international work, and the huge gymnasium was brought into service. Here the trapezes and flying rings have been looped to the side walls, along with rows of Indian clubs and dumb-bells, giving a free open space for the enormous influx of soldier mail. Long trains of mail vans are at the door and some thirty to fifty wagon loads of this mail are handled daily.

MAIL IN PAPER BAGS.

A great pile of German mail had just come in, and the bags were stacked up on the floor.

"Here is something odd," said one of the officials, turning to the German mailbags, "you will notice they are made of paper; yes, paper mailbags. Usualy mailbags are very stout of leather or heavy canvas. But lately we have noticed the Germans are using paper for their bags. It means a big saving on their hemp, and the bags are strong and serviceable."

It appeared to be a new quality of paper, with fibre almost like the mesh of cloth, but unmistakably paper.

"It is remarkable," said an onlooker, 'how the Germans get up a serviceable substitute as soon as they run out of any article."

"Here is another significant fact," said the official in charge of the gymnasium mails. He held up a large card, a foot square, on which he had placed twenty-one samples of rope and twine.

"Those show the ingenious substitutes the Germans are now using for ordinary rope and twine," said he.

The samples were from various mail bundles from Germany. They ranged in size from a small-size rope about 1-8 inch thick, to ordinary string. None of the twenty-one samples had any hemp. Most of the small strings and twines had a fine inner wire. It give tensile strength wound with paper to give an outer finish and flexibility. The heavier ropes were of paper, with strands wound together into a stout material. But the little inner wire seemed the basis of strength in these strange German substitutes for hemp rope and cord, required so enormously in ordinary business and commerce.

All about, long lines of postal employees were at work sorting the soldier mail — letters, packages, and money orders—going to various countries. Many poor people mail a loaf of bread daily to the son or father away at the front or in prison. One of the wrappings of a loaf of bread had broken open, and disclosed that the sender had ingeniously inserted a copy of the Paris Matin inside the bread. It was doubtless done without malice, the official said, by some mother who wanted her son to get a glimpse of the home paper. One package contained a small remnant of a Christmas tree, with some of the trinklets adhering. Others were packages neatly divided into small sections of chocolate, tobacco, soap and other needs, and small luxuries for the men away from home.

But the most poignant branch of this busy bureau was the table heaped with letters and packages which could never be delivered, each bearing the stamp 'decede.' One employe was binding these letters in packages of a hundred, and there were many of these hundreds, with the incoming vans adding to them constantly. When the letters are first received every effort is made to deliver them, but when the official record or other authoritative information shows the soldier is dead the fatal black-bordered stamp 'decede' goes on the letter and it is returned to the sender. And so this stamp carries into countless homes daily the news which is a tragedy to each of these households.

"There was a strange incident about one of those letters," said the official. "The letter was sent by a mother in Germany to her son in France. Finding he was dead, the letter was returned to the mother with the stamp 'decede'. But the mother, not understanding the word 'decede,' thought it meant the name of the town to which her son had been transferred. And so she wrote him again, and this time all the children joined in the letter, and it was addressed with his name at 'Decede, France.' Of course there is no such place, and so agin the letter went back with an explanation why it could not be delivered."

In other near-by rooms scores of employees were at work on postal orders. It needed nice calculation in each case, making the exchange between French francs, German marks, English shillings, Russian rubles, Italian lira, Austrian kroners, etc. The records kept by Mr. Breny showed France was sending about five times as much to Germany as was sent the other way, indicating more French prisoners than Germans or else more generosity. In October, for example, France sent 153,000 postal orders to French soldiers in Germany, totaling 1,681,000 francs ($336,000) while Germany sent 34,000 orders to German soldiers in France, totaling 546,000 francs. ($110,000). Russia is also sending an exceptionally large number of money orders to her soldiers in Austria, Hungary, and Germany. Since the war began over 35,000,000 francs $7,000,000) has been transmitted from families to soldiers imprisoned in various countries.

Mr. Breny summed up the magnitude of this work in all classes of soldier mail as follows: "Each day the Swiss Post Office receives and forwards an average of 219,084 letters and postals, 16,912 small unregistered packages, 51,897 registered packages, and 8,328 postsol orders—this is the daily average, on the special service of soldier mail."

And yet Switzerland is doing this work without charge and doing it gladly; its State railways carry all this mail free of charge; all postage stmps and duties are waived; hundreds of extra postal employees are engaged in the administration, and expenditures of 20,000,000 francs, ($4,000,000) of various kinds are waived —that is the way a small country is obeying a large impulse to do its share in the better part of the war's work.

NO STOP TO THE RUSSIAN DRIVE

1,328 Officers and 78,548 Men Captured

RUSSIANS HAVE ADVANCED FORTY MILES TOWARDS STANISLAU IN TWO DAYS

Smashed Through Austrian Front From the Pripet Marshes to the Pruth, Destroying Defences Which the Austrians Have Been Building For Months and Which They Deemed Impregnable---Support of the Russian Artillery is Perfect.

GERMANS ARE BOMBARDING VERDUN FORTS

PETROGRAD, June 10.—The Russian bear is now a tiger, that is the characterization of men who have been at the front and have seen the legions of General Brussiloff shoot threugh the Austrian front from the Pripet marshes to the Pruth, destroying the most complicated defenses, defenses which the Austrians have ben building for months, and which they deemed impregnable.

Petrograd to-day places the Austrian casualties in the drive conservatively at 150,000, and by actual count 78,548 men and 1,328 officers have been made prisoners. Many of these were taken when the Russians exploded shrapnel in such density behind the Austrian lines that the men could not retreat through it. Frequently the Russians went through gaining 300 yards in a single effort. In places they have encountered as many as twenty lines of wire entanglements. In all charges their support from the Russian artillery is perfect. As the infantry whirls through, engineers follow building corduroy roads to facilitate the advance of the artillery.

The offensive is directed almost entirely against the Austrians, it being estimated that about 700,000 of them are defending the line the Russians are attacking. A few German divisions have been encountered on the north tip of the offensive. The Russian success in the Kovel region, however, has threatened the Germans from the rear of the positions near Pinsk. In their smash against the Austrians on the Olyka the Russians advanced twenty-two miles in two days, and toward Stanislau forty miles in the same time.

Tavennes is about a mile southeast of Souville. Fort St. Michell stands between them and Verdun.

There were no infantry attacks on either the east or west bank of the Meuse yesterday, says the statement.

Artillery actions of greatest violence are in progress practically all along the Verdun front, with the greatest concentrations at Avocourt, Fumin and Champtre.

Building Operations In Peterborough

Contractors Find It Difficult to Secure Help—Additions to Local Industries

Building operations in Peterborough have been handicapped of late by the shortage of labour and the wet weather. Contractors say that it is extremely difficult to obtain skilled help. This combined with the continual rains delay the work of construction which practically means an increase in the cost. At the present time there is considerable building going on in Peterborough. This includes substantial additions to the Quaker Oats Company's plant, the Bonner-Worth and a number of minor operations.

RESENTMENT IN IRELAND APPEARS TO BE INCREASING

Military Rule is Not Popular But Sanity of the Irish People is Expected to Assert Itself in Time and Prevent Chaos

CARSON'S PROPOSAL

By T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, June 10.—News from Ireland is not good. Resentment over military rule, instead of diminishing, seems to be increasing, at least in Dublin. Such stories as were told at Skeffington's inquest do not help to calm things. This state of the Irish atmosphere has immense importance even though it may be changed some time from now; for in that atmosphere negotiations for the settlement of the Irish problem have to be conducted.

The settlement suggested by Sir Edward Carson is the exclusion of six Ulster counties from immediate Home Rule in the other twenty-six counties, with a Home Rule ministry coming almost immediately into existence. Orangemen have made some hesitation about acceptance of this, as they always demanded the exclusion of all Ulster and they have no more fanatical followers than the small minorities in Donegal, Cavan, and Monaghan Counties which are to come under the Irish Parliament.

I have little doubt Sir Edward Carson will be able to bring these men, ultimately, to reason, and that so far as Ulster is concerned, such a settlement would be acceptable.

Ulster Nationalists are very sane business people, but the exasperation created by military rule is working there, too, while the same exasperation in the South, though willing to allow Nationalist Ulster to have a potent voice, makes them at this moment indisposed to accept any settlement involving even for a short time a break-up of Irish national unity.

FORCES OF FACTION.

Meantime the forces of faction, which have been trying for years to break down the constitutional movement and the Irish party, are trying to produce chaos, thinking the hour to destroy both, has come. This is the situation for the moment, frankly, but I retain the conviction that the sanity of the Irish people will assert itself in time, and that their final decision will be to choose immediate Home Rule, with but temporary exclusion, for it can only be temporary, in a small portion of the country, instead of throwing Ireland back another generation on a division of the futile insurrection and progressive depopulatio. These, I should add, are personal opinions; neither Mr. Redmond, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Devlin nor the Irish Party are pledged to the acceptance of any proposals.

THE ENGLISHMAN.

One of the most outstanding things to an Irishman who lives in England as I do is the absolute irreconcilability of the English and the Irish point of view. I don't mean only that the two peoples do not understand each other. I doubt if they ever will. Indeed the Englishman is one of the most difficult national characters to understand. The curious reserve of his character; his hatred of any display of emotion as bad manners as well as sentimentality; his brusqueness; all these things give an altogether false impression of his character to those who are not able to

93rd BATTALION TO BE MOVED TO BORDEN OR VALCARTIER SOON

Sir Sam Hughes Announces That Some of the Troops at Barriefield Are to Be Shifted as There is Not Room There For Adequate Training---Review Yesterday Was Successful---93rd Battalion Standing Medical Test Well ---To-day's General Military News.

That the 93rd Battalion will shortly be moved from Barriefield Camp, either to the new Bordon Camp near Barrie, or to Valcartier, is now practically certain. The odds favour the Borden Camp which will be ready in a short time. At Barriefield yesterday Sir Sam Hughes announced that some of the battalions now at the Kingston Camp will be shifted, and it is known that the battalions from the districts west of Kingston are the ones to be moved. Barriefield is not large enough to give advanced training to the big body of troops now there, while the new Borden Camp will afford every facility.

A despatch from Kingston says:

Kingston, Ont., June 9.—As soon as Camp Borden and Valcartier are ready, some of the troops at Barriefield Camp will be moved away. This was announced by Major-General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, today when he visited the camp. Between 3,000 and 5,000 will be retained here.

About lighting the camp, the Minister said that the Government would do this, and the city will not be put to this expense. Sir Sam explained that Barriefield Camp ground was not nearly large enough for ten battalions. Sir Sam expressed himself as well pleased with the progress of the battalions in camp.

Private Henry Joseph Kelly, of the Mounted Rifles, who was recently reported dangerously ill, has died of a gunshot wound in the head, according to an official telegram which has been received by his father in Norwood, and the contents of which have been communicated to friends in Toronto.

Private Kelly was 27 years of age and was formerly in the employ of the Union Bank of Canada, first at Norwood and later at Orillia. While he was in the latter place, he enlisted with the Canadian Mounted Rifles for active service. He has many friends in Peterborough. His father resides in Norwood. His mother lost her life several years ago in the collapse of the Turnbull building. He has six brothers, one of whom is also a soldier in the expeditionary forces.

Pte Spencer Symonds, son of the Rev. Dr. Herbert Symonds, of Christ Church Cathedral Montreal, formerly pastor of St. Luke's church Peterborough is reported as having been taken a prisoner, the vicar having received a cable from the Rev. A. McGreer, chaplain stating that Spencer is suffering from shell shock and has been made a prisoner. Pte. Symonds was in the 1st University Company that was raised by Capt. Gregor Barclay and was later transferred to the Princess Patricias. He is twenty years of age and was a first year student in Arts at McGill. He was educated at Lower Canada College where he was captain of the college footba lteam in his last year. He held the record there for the half mile under fifteen years of age. Doctor Symonds has three sons on active service. Lance-Corpl. Boyd Symonds being with the 14th Battalion ever since the outbreak of war, now being attached to the headquarters staff. while Gunner Kingsley Symonds is in No. 6 McGill Siege Battery. he being also a first year student at McGill.

The 93rd Recruiting Staff here is composed of Lieut. J. Ketchum, in charge Sergt W. Mitchell, Lance Corp F. Degen, Lance Corp. Livingstone, Pte. R. Mitchell, Pte. T. Haley, Pte. J. Cadd, Pte. J. Morrow, Pte. A. Walker, Pte. Laws, Pte .Wegg, Pte. McIntosh.

The 74th Battery has already secured twelve recruits in Peterborough and Lieut. Thompson the recruiting officer is very well pleased especially in view of the fact that Belleville in a week failed to yield a man. Frank Patterson, son of Mr. E. G. Patterson of the C. G. E. and who attended the last Royal School of Artillery at Kingston is among the Peterborough men who are going with the 74th. He will be Sergeant-Major of the new battery. It is expected that as in the case of the 4th, 26th, 33nd, and 52nd batteries Peterborough will contribute a big share of the strength of the 74th.

Peterborough has already contributed ten officers and over 900 men to the Canadian Field Artillery for overseas service. Two of the officers have recently appeared on the casualty list. Lieut. Harold Matthews as missing and Lieut. Douglas Huycke seriously wounded.

Sergt G. T. Toone of the Orderly Room staff of the 93rd battalion is home on leave from Barriefield.

A squad of new recruits for the 93rd Battalion will leave for Barriefield camp on Tuesday morning.

Two recruits who joined the 93rd Battalion yesterday were Messrs. Geo Holliday and Edward King, both residents of Peterborough.

Some of the local baseball enthusiasts have been lamenting the absence of baseball here this year. The 93rd Battalion wishes to remind these young men that there is plenty of baseball at Barriefield and that the 93rd Ball team which is entered in the camp league would like their services. The 33rd have Gus Rose, Stan Anderson, Herb O'Heron, A. Frost and other city league players in their ranks and would welcome a few more as they are anxious to follow the example of the Peterborough boys in the 33rd Battery last year by cleaning up the camp. Incidentally it may be mentioned that a number of the boys who were starring in the City League last season are now on the firing line, playing a much bigger game than baseball.

HEAVY BOMBARDMENT

LONDON, June 9.—The following British communication was issued early this morning:

"Last night (Thursday) a party belonging to the Gloucester Regiment entered the enemy trenches south of Neuve Chapelle, and after successfully attaking the garrison captured a machine gun. Otherwise there were no infantry actions.

"Yesterday (Thursday) afternoon our heavy artillery destroyed the railway station of Salome, east of La Bassee, setting a train afire and damaging the track. Good results also were obtained against strong points behind the enemy lines north of Hulluch. To-day (Friday) there was much artillery fighting east of Ypres, our guns engaging various enemy positions sucessfully, while the enemy carried out short bombardments at numerous points behind our front line between the Ypres-Comines Canal and the Ypres-Roulers road. South of Armentieres we effectively bombarded the enemy's trenches east of Laventie. South of La Bassees Canal there was little activity. Near Souches we destroyed an enemy trench mortar which was bombarding our lines.

"Mine warfare continues in the areas of the Hohenzollern redoubt, near Hulluch, south of Souville-St. Vaast and northeast of Albert. In the last twenty-four hours we have exploded successfully six mines. The enemy sprung a mine without damage or casualties to us, and a small defensive mine with trifling damage.

"There was aerial activity yesterday (Thursday), but no combats, our machines doing sucessful work without interference."

AN APPEAL FOR ASSISTANCE FOR COMFORTS FOR SICK

Mrs. E. B. Clegg of Peterboro' Membe of Canadian Women's war Work Committee Tells of the Work Being Done in England

A CHANCE TO HELP

To the Editor of The Examiner.

You will no doubt be interested in reading extracts from letters which from time to time I have received from Mrs. Clegg, wife of Lt.-Col. Clegg of Peterborough), who has made her home in Folkestone ever since she went to England.

Soon after Mrs. Clegg went there she became a member of the "Canadian Women's War Work Committee." Women visit hospitals, which in the Eastern District number seventy-five, and are under the command of (Dr.) Col. Renne, formerly of Hamilton, Ontario. Fifteen of the hospitals are in Folkestone and Shorncliffe. They leave from eight hundred to one thousand beds in each. Some are entirely filled with Canadians, while others have both Canadian and Imperial wounded. The committee have two sewing mornings a week when they make shirts, etc., and knit socks for the Field Comforts Commission. They also take turns in presiding at the recreation room where young girls can take their soldier friends and are also helping with the canteen work at the harbour. Once a week five of the committee escort twenty-five wounded soldiers to the theatre and also give them tea. In the work room last year they undertook to knit thumbs on to over five thousand wristlets that had been sent from Canada without the necessary addition. Last December they were very busy helping Miss Plummer, of the Field Comforts Commission, get the Christmas parcels ready and they had to do up about five thousand a day for three weeks to get them off in time.

In speaking of the hospitals Mrs Clegg tells me that the voluntary aid hospitals are with a few exceptions well provided for, as in many cases they are lovely homes given up for the work, and the owners are interested and help to look after them. They cannot take in a great number at a time, so there is a good deal of the home life about them, but in every case they are better off than the poor military hospitals. The government provides for these military hospitals all necessities, but not many comforts, and they are not supposed to ask for anything, but are very glad to accept whatever is offered, which can be sent through Miss Plummer.

Moore Barracks is one of the hospitals that Mrs. Clegg visits, and she asked the matron what she would like to have our clubs send to them, so we received a list and forwarded our last bales there and they ought soon to arrive. Mrs Clegg is very much interested in one ward, number 32, as it is a tubercular ward, and, of course, isolated. They have few visitors and are often in need of comforts and so begged of me to put a parcel in our bale for them which I did, but I am sorry to say it was very small, but we will try and have a larger one next time.

Some of the ladies on the committee have friends who send them money to spend on comforts for the soldiers. As I said before the men are supplied with necessities, but there is many a little thing a sick man would like when he is lying in bed suffering which is not supplied by the hospitals, and I am appealing to the men and women of Peterborough to do what they can towards sending a good sized cheque to Mrs Clegg to lay out for us for comforts for our men. No one knows better than she does how to supply the need, as she is on the visiting committee and part of her time is spent at the different hospitals. The people of Peterborough always seem to be able to help on a good work, and will they not help with this? Any money given either to Miss Large or to me, or left at Mr. Kent's drug store, (which is our depository), will be greatly received and acknowledged. Please do not forget this appeal, as our help means so much to those of our men who are away from home, and not only suffering, but are often very lonely, and our help will I am sure be much appreciated by them.

Yours truly
Henrietta Stuart Peck.

Normal Students and Teachers Enjoyed Outing Despite Rain

Another class of Normal students is dispersing to-day. Their final examinations were concluded on Thursday at noon, and yesterday they were together for probably the last time, the occasion being the annual outing to Stoney Lake. The reserve of the class room was lifted and students and teachers met on the common ground of a friendship which associations of the past year have developed. Hence, though the weather was unfavourable, the excursion was greatly enjoyed, and was really one of the feature events of the year. The steamer Stoney Lake took the party of two hundred to Buckhorn for dinner, and the trip was continued to the head of the lake. Home again, there were the usual farewells as the members of '15-'16 class separated.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1916

ENCOURAGING.

A notice signed by City Engineer Parsons, and published in the papers, requesting the public to care for the boulevards the city is levelling and seeding on paved streets, is a momentous thing. It is the first time in the history of the town that we have had official evidence of official interest in the beautification of our streets.

The notice requests the cooperation of the citizens, which in respect of those directly concerned, will be readily given.

It is, of course, a good thing for the city to do this work; it is moreover, its duty. The city is in charge of the streets, and by undertaking the work in question, can do the work with regard to the uniformity that is necessary.

In pointing out that the citizens generally can "also help by respecting the work done on these streets, and by preventing its destruction either carelessly or wantonly," Mr. Parsons has touched the quick of the question.

The public need educating as to respect for the public places of the city —and for that matter of private places too. Already, in part, the work done on Charlotte street has been undone. Some lad, with the spirit of mischief in him as big as a wolf, after city workmen had carefully levelled, graded and seeded the boulevard on the north side, started at Park street and apparently deliberately made tracks—literally—on the newly treated boulevard as far west as it was completed. And delivery boys jump from their vans upon the fresh boulevard sinking ankle deep in the soft soil, and many persons alighting from the street car stopping near St. Joseph street, tramp across the boulevard and, of course, destroy it.

The proverb says that "one good turn deserves another." The city has done well in dealing with the boulevards. It can and should help to protect and preserve the work done. It is too late, perhaps, to apply immediate education in the rudiments of civilization. We have neglected to educate our children in the duty of respecting the beauty of public and private places adjoining, so that we have a generation of vandals. This is a hard word, but what other name will fittingly apply to people who utterly disregard the rights and feelings, of fellow-citizens, and destroy created beauty of public places, and property of others.

But it is not too late to try some emergency remedy. We must try to teach the young people who are offenders, as much through thoughtlessness as malice, though in far too many cases there is evidence of more than enough malice.

It may seem fanciful, but why might not the city fathers take the logical step of trying to protect the public beauty they are creating on the paved street—a beauty that is only in keeping with the beauty and quality of the roadways, enclosed by the boulevards.. Why should not the City Council pass a resolution calling upon our city boards of education, to enjoin upon the teachers, as a duty, to give the children under their charge special instruction upon the duty of children to avoid injuring boulevards, and enacting pledges from the children individually to respect the rights and property of others—never to set foot upon a boulevard or open lawn. If this action were taken the lesson might be impressed before the schools close for the summer.

Then we might have a "golden rule" Sunday in all our churches, when the preachers would be asked to give sermons upon the fundamental fact of the Christian religion so far as human relations are concerned. The text — "Do unto others as ye would that others do unto you," might be used.. The preachers might implore children and implore the parents to implore their children, to observe one of the highest claims of the Christian religion, the religion of altruism—respect for the feelings and rights of others, and respect for public and private beauty—with specific reference to boulevards newly seeded.

These suggestions may seem fanciful and frivolous. But are they so? We must and should do something for Christian civilization. Canada is spending about half a billion of dollars and giving her sons in thousands to the Moloch of war, for the sole purpose of defeating the devilish spirit of destruction and disregard of others' rights, that possesses the Huns. It is a local manifestation of the same essential spirit that destroys our boulevards and flower plots and public beauty places.

These suggestions apply to the children, and the young and thoughtless. The adult sinner against public beauty and public rights, will be little affected by sentimental appeals, and he should have the discipline of law. Why should not the City Council draft and pass a drastic by-law making a misdemeanour—of what is really a crime—trespass upon boulevards.

A few years ago a city council passed a by-law forbidding trespassing upon boulevards—outside the tree line. It is probable that that by-law has been broken a million times. Yet nobody has thought to get it out of its pigeon-hole. The passing of another such by-law and its enforcement is a logical duty following the Council's work of beautifying our streets with boulevards. We are spending about $10 a day on this the worw is not protected.

RECRUITING AND REGISTRATION

Sir Sam Hughes may claim that recruiting has been, and is still, satisfactory. But everybody else is not inclined to be enthusiastic over the recruiting results. That recruiting is less active than could be wished is not to be denied and there may legitimate or other causes for it. One thing to be remembered is that there is not the same supply of patriotic public-minded young men available. This class has entered the ranks largely long ago. Those of military eligibility, in the physical and age sense, come, many of them, with the ranks of the "slackers," and the duty of the government to adopt and apply a policy of registration so that eligibles may be recorded, their residence ascertained, so that appeal, if not pressure, could be applied to them, is attracting attention. It is the general opinion of the civil element that takes a real interest in recruiting, that the first fruitful step to the mobilization of contingents is the mobilization of the portion of our population eligible to serve. The members of the Patriotic Leagues, who have been the backbone of recruiting, feel this; and even church synods and church conferences have declared the same opinion. That such a self-evidently necessary procedure as registration has not long since been adopted by the government, is an astonishing thing; and if we are to fill our quota of 500,000 recruited soldiers, something like this will have to be adopted.

In the province of Quebec recruiting has not been as satisfactory as could be wished; and there are reasons for this. The Liberal leader, Sir Wilfred Laurier and his associates, have done much to stimulate recruiting recently in Quebec, and some Conservative leaders have also been active, but they have found their efforts largely neutralised by the malignant influence of Nationalism. The leaders of this disloyal cult, like Bourassa, et. al., have been for years preaching sedition and sowing the seeds of hostility and antipathy to the loyal sentiments that should help recruiting. Their work has been helped by the cachet of approval set upon Nationalism by the party in power, which for party purposes not only encouraged its beginning and made its existence in the present proportions possible, but gave it official approval by the inclusion of Nationalist ministers in the Cabinet—making advisers of the King of men whose advice and the sentiment of the seditious movement they represent, would be to advise the King that it is not the duty of his French-Canadian subjects to fight for the King and the tremendous interests he and the triumph of his army represent. But it is no time to insist upon these things; the mischief has been done; and it seems reasonable that the government which has been more or less responsible, should make reparation by taking an active and official interest in recruiting. We don't want conscription, but the occasion demands system in recruiting—system with government authority behind it. The people have stood nobly behind the government and have consented willingly to be taxed by hundreds of millions for war purposes; but they want more done. They want to see enlisted the soldiers to spend to advantage the money voted. If registration, as demanded by level-headed civilians who have studied and take a deep and real interest in recruiting, will help recruiting, let us have it.

British Official Tendency To Underate Canadian Capacity For Doing Things

One fact has been made clear, before our Royal Commission investigating munitions orders—Canadians have lost, and United States manufacturers secured, $25,000,000 orders that we know of; and perhaps several times that amount that we have not yet heard of.

This seems to be due to the unfortunate theory that prevails in English official circles, that Colonials have not the ability for doing important things. Colonel Carnegie, the English expert employed by our Shell Committee, has sworn very positively that he believed Canadians had not the capacity to fill these orders. Therefore, he placed them with American manufacturers. Results have shown that Canadian manufacturers were able to turn out these goods more promptly and more satisfactorily than the Americans. Ever since the war began orders have gone to the States because English officials believed the goods could not be made in Canada.

This is a very live topic among readers of The Financial Post. There are few of them who have not part, or all, of their savings invested, directly or indirectly in Canadian industry, and our Government, particularly our Department of Trade and Commerce, should take steps to right that misconception.

Canada has lost much, not only in business, but in political, military, and social prestige, because English officials persist in regarding us as children. They have much greater respect and give more consideration to the Americans. The Americans have been noisily assertive; the Canadians have been modestly submissive. To secure and hold our proper place in the Empire we must asert ourselves more. We must insist upon our rights.

In our 1885 North-West campaign, the British commander decided he could not win with Canadian troops, and sent Lord Minto with a cable to England for real soldiers. The three senior Canadian officers on the spot heard of it, and one day when the British General and his staff were away in the rear at luncheon they took things into their own hands, attacked, and completely routed the enemy, and had practically ended the rebellion before General Middleton had finished his luncheon and got up to the fighting line.

The plans prepared in 1909 by General Hutton, Lord Minto and the British War Office for sending our troops to South Africa, provided that native Canadians might fill Lieutenants places, but the Captains and those of higher rank were to be Imperial officers—just as they do with ignorant Indian troops. Also they were to go by companies; each company to be attached to a different Imperial Regiment. We objected so vigorously that Canadians went and fought, as complete regiments, under their own officers. None of them surrendered. All of them did so well that a new era opened for Canada in the United Kingdom. We began to be treated with greater respect by the official class.

In 1877 a young Canadian militia officer, G. T. Denison, who had studied cavalry, decided to compete for the Russian Government prize for the best book on this subject. Sir Selby Smythe, the British officer commanding in Canada, sneered at his presumption, and refused to give him a letter to the War Office. Denison arrived at Petrograd with only an unofficial introduction from Lord Salisbury, but he won the prize against the world. His work has been translated into and is the text book of nearly every foreign country. But it was not until the War Office had it pounded into them by their failures in South Africa that they adopted the principles pointed out in Denison's book. Canadians knew these principles and urged that the troops going from here be all mounted infantry. The British War Office replied that no mounted troops were needed. They put 8,000 cavalry with swords and lances into the field at the start. They finished the war with over 105,000 horsemen with rifles, and begged Canada for nothing but mounted infantry.

But these lessons have been lost upon the War Office. In this war, in spite of protests, they placed the Canadians under an English officer. In the Canadian Cavalry Brigade were some of the most capable, experienced, professional officers in the entire Imperial service. — Generals Lessard, Steele, Macdonnell, for example. Yet it was thought that they could not be trusted, and an English amateur, Major Seeley, ex-Minister of War, a barrister by profession, a failure as an executive, was foisted upon them.

The entire Canadian force at the front has been under an English officer with a good record, but he does not seem to have had the capacity to command satisfactorily the Colonial army. There has been much friction, and he was recently retired. It is now proposed to appoint a titled English officer over the heads of Canadians who have shown a capacity to understand and handle the troops under them in this war, as well as in South Africa, quite as successfully as any of the Imperial officers.

The senior Canadian officer in France is apparently General Turner, of Quebec, who not only distinguished himself as a brave officer by winning the V.C. in South Africa, but if private correspondence from senior officers at the front is to be relied on, he has shown a superior order of administrative ability and the resourcefulness necessary to cope with a wily enemy. This was to be expected, because General Turner had shown these characteristics in his successful handling of a big business in Canada.

By Canadians we do not mean men of Canadian birth only, but men with Canadian training and inspirations. The British and Irish educational system is vastly superior to anything we have in Canada, but there is something in our system or climate that develops the average man. Thackray wrote of this many years ago: he attributed it to the climate of America. The influence of heriditary wealth on ambition has no doubt much to do with it. It happens that most of our senior officers are Canadian by birth, but some of the best work has been done by men of English, Irish and Scotch birth and Canadian training; and as the war goes on no doubt these men will deserve and will be promoted to higher positions.

It is in the best interests of Canadian business, the future of the official and sentimental relations between Canada and the Mother Country, that Sir Robert Borden and the Minister of Militia should insist very strongly that Canadians, who have shown the capacity to do so, should, not only have the supreme command of their own troops, but if they are the best men, that they be given still higher positions. South Africa has set an example in this respect. It is common gossip that when the War Office tried to force upon them a favourite Imperial officer, who had not been a brilliant success in France, the African Premier told them very decidedly that he would have none of it. If our Government permit any more favourites of the War Office to be put over capable officers in the Canadian troops, the impression will prevail that Canadians have not the ability for higher commands. — Financial Post.

German Masses Groan Under War Tyranny of Prussian Militarism

Graphic Story of May Day Riots When Herr Liebnecht's Brave Indictment of Prussian War Lords Brought His Arrest on Treason Charge---The War Based and Continued on a Lie He Said.

Boston, June 7. — The first full account of the German Bread Riots in Berlin on May Day, and of the arrest of Herr Liebknecht, the Socialist Leader, now on trial for treason, has reached here in a private letter from a German journalist on the staff of a Socialist paper in Berlin. Dr. Liebknecht's speech was forbidden publication by the German censors and this letter had to be smuggled out of Germany.

The letter is in the form of a diary, as follows:

SCARCITY OF FOOD.

April 24, 1916. I have returned to the local committee our complete report resulting from our interrogation of 825 families. I am the chairman of this committee. Out of the 825 families whom we have questioned we find 97 of them had not been able to buy meat of any kind since December last. These 97 households represent 487 persons. The rest of the 825 households whom we have questioned can only buy meat at the rate of 1 mark (20 cents) per person per week. Of the 825 families, 72 could buy no milk. The rest could obtain milk only 4 pfennings' worth (5 pfennings are equal to 1 cent) of milk per week per head. Nearly one half of the families whom we have questioned had a weekly income of less than 24 marks (five marks are equal to one dollar.) Families of five persons have only 12 marks to spend for food and clothing; and the price of food is so high.

Out of the 825 households interrogated, we find 67, representing 324 souls, had an income of only a little less than 5 marks per week; and we find this group had sent from one to two soldiers to the front ,and yet their families of from four to seven persons had to subsist on less than 5 marks per week.

This is only a partial investigation. Other locals have made other like investigations, and the result of their house-to-house interrogation is similar to that of ours, if not worse. Is there, therefore, any futher need of writing about the condition of the poor German workingman? Is it not possible to imagine what grim tragedies are being enacted behind the curtain of the all-powerful censor? And this misery is increasing day by day. Every hour sees the price of food going up higher and higher and will soon become beyond the reach of even the middle-class Germans. Yet not only our officials and military masters but many of our well nourished Pharisees, have the effrontery to ask where want and scarcity of food is to be located.

April 30.—I received word from my editor that there is to be a May Day demonstration near the Imperial Palace. "Keep your mouth shut," is the whisper. I go on the street, and every person I meet whom I know to be Socialists, I greet with the words, "May Day demonstration near the palace grounds. Pass it to the comrades. Keep your mouth shut!"

THE MAY DAY RIOTS.

May 1.—Very early in the morning, with three other comrades, I reach Tortensienstrasse, where Comrade Liebknecht lives. We enter No. 14, climb up the stairs, ring his bell. Comrade Liebknecht opens the door himself. I am surprised, also my companions. He is thin, his hair looks unusually black and his face is deathly pale. He walks like a dead man, walking with grim steps. He leaves us and very soon returns with his wife. She is a Russian. She nods welcome to us all. Suddenly a terrible fear comes to me. It takes hold of me. I watch my companions and observe that they also share it with me. No one has spoken a word, yet we all feel that we are all in the presence of a supreme moment.

From Comrade Liebknecht's grim silence we judge that he is about to hurl prudence to the four winds and defy the government. He has defied the government before in parliament but that is different. What he had said in parliament was not given to the public. The almighty censor is the faithful ally of the government. Now he would hurl the unpleasant truths which he had repeatedly spoken on the floor of the parliament at the people from the street corners! He hands out one to each of us, a copy of the speech which he will deliver. So far not one word is spoken. While we are hurriedly reading his speech, which is to be delivered in a few hours he remarks: "I have several thousand of these printed."

We have finished reading the prospectus which will make history and send him to prison. Then we go into conference . . . .

We have been with him just an hour. We leave him.

Shortly after 2 p.m., same afternoon, May Day—have taken a hasty lunch at the Central Hotel. As I near the door I hear the footsteps of great multitudes. I rush to the street and find my passage blocked by a moving crowd that fills the wide street from sidewalk to sidewalk. Suddenly it becomes apparent to me that there are more children in the crowd than men and women together. As they march I notice that I cannot see one in the crowd whoo has a smile on his or her face. Along the route no one is cheering them. I say to myself, "Perhaps no one who is not in that crowd knows where the multitude is marching." I had never seen such immense crowds in the streets of Berlin. Not even during the Aghadir crises had the streets of Berlin held such multitudes. The crowds move as if they were a part of a funeral procession. They are all sad—very sad.

IN THE PALACE GROUNDS

On reaching the palace grounds I see in the distance five persons; from their elbows up they tower over the heads of the multitude surrounding them. I leave my fiends and elbow my way through the thick crowd. On my right and on my left, behind me and ahead of me, everyone is reminding me of gross rudeness. I justify my impolite advance on the ground that I am a reporter on a party (Socialist) paper. I finally reach near the spot where Comrade Liebknecht and other comrades are standing. The crowds are close where they are standing, and I cannot make out whether they are standing on a raised platform or in a motor car. I am about 20 or 25 feet from the doctor.

Suddenly one of the comrades near Doctor Liebknecht raises his hand and at once proceeds to speak. I have not heard one word of what he has said. The multitudes are anxious to hear him. Everyone is sounding "hush" in order to obtain silence and thus making more noise. The speaker is silent. Perhaps he has announced the real speaker of the day, very likely. Doctor Liebknecht uncovers his head; someone nearby offers to relieve him of his hat. Deathly silence reigns all about the grounds. The interior of a cathedral cannot be more silent. The doctor begins:

DR. LIEBKNECHT'S SPEECH.

"Comrades and friends." They start to cheer him. He holds up his hand forbiddingly, then he resumes:

"Some years ago a witty Socialist has observed that in Prussia we Germans have three great rights, which are: We can be soldiers, we can pay taxes and we can keep our mouths shut. The Socialist who made this observation has made it with a grim humor, but to-day the humor of it must be disconnected from it, it is all too grim. Espeially in these days this observation is too true. To-day we are sharing these three great Prussian state privileges in full. Every German citizen is given the full privilege to carry a rifle in any manner.

"Even the boy scout has been incited to play the ridiculous role of a soldier. They have thus planted the spirit of hate deep in his youthful soul. Meanwhile the old Landsturmer is forced to perform forced labor in invaded countries in spite of the fact that under the laws of the Imperial constitution he cannot be called out for any other purpose than for the defence of the fatherland.

"As for the second privilege — his right to pay taxes—in this respect the German citizen is up to the present time, far ahead of his brothers in foreign lands whom he is engaged in exterminating. And yet more privileges of this kind are awaiting him in the days to come—after the end of this war. The high taxes which the German people have so far paid are insignificant compared to the great burden which he must carry after the war, and for which his masters are daily preparing him with such touching delicacy of patriotic sentiment through the medium of the official press.

"The new Germany has the unquestionable right of maul halten (holding his tongue.) Recently our official press has been flooded by authoritative and pharisaic exhortations to soldiers' wives, that they must for God's sake, not complain so much about the scarcity of food. Keep your mouth shut tight when hungry: keep your mouth shut when your children are hungry; keep your mouth shut when your children want milk; keep your mouth shut and write no letters to the front!"

"FEW DRY EYES."

Outside of Germany these remarks might sound like the stock phases of a professional agitator but not so in Germany, at least not so in these days. I carefully watched for the effect of these remarks all about me, and I saw no pair of dry eyes.

Amid tense silence the doctor continued:

"In a recent issue the mouthpiece of the Pharisee, the Munchener Neueste Nachrichten, complains thus (reading from a clipping:)

"'Our soldiers do not always receive from their dear ones at home the best encouragement to hold on. A soldier on furlough who before obtaining his leave, had performed his duty to his fatherland unflinchingly, and went through many hardships with good humor, but however after a brief visit home returned to the front with a sad face, worrying day and night about his loved ones and the pretended scarcity at home.'

"Pretended scarcity certainly is palatable, especially when one is reminded of the fact that our police is weighing the bread ,that the butter is out of the market, that fat, meat and margarine have reached a price that is beyond the probable reach of the working man!

"The old proverb says, 'The mouth speaketh out of the fullness of the heart.' And, if her children's stomachs are empty it is hard for the wife not to mention the fact to her far away soldier husband that it is hard to provide his children with food while he is offering his life for his country. But if it is not found possible for your masters to prevail upon you to 'Keep your mouths shut' then they resort to a more practical means. They have a very simple means of stopping these annoying complaints. The Prussian censor is now supervising these letters of wives at home to their husbands at the front. They simply do not allow this objectionable correspondence to go through. Poor and unfortunate German soldier! He deserves pity! At the command of the militarist govenrment he has gone into the enemy country and at the command of the government, he must steal from other nations. He is required to perform difficult services. The sufferings that he endures are past description."

SILENT SUFFERING

"About his everywhere shells and bombs sow death and destruction. His wife and children at home are suffering want and hardship; she looks about her and finds her children crying for bread. She is desperate, but she must not appeal nor complain to anyone. She must hold her tongue and suffer inwardly. But how can she silence her children? She must not even share the sympathy of her husband at the front, because that cripples her soldier-husband's fighting powers. Her soldier-husband must hold on and steal in the land of her neighbors. He must hold on and 'suffer' because the capitalists, the hurrah patriots, and the armor-plate kings have willed it so. Everyone must keep his or her mouth shut, for the war-profiteers must make money out of the want and misery of the wives and their husband-soldiers at the front.

"By a lie the German working men were forced into the war, and by like lies they expect to induce him to go on with the war!"

Doctor Liebnecht had scarcely finished this last sentence when, as if by magic, a sudden excitement broke out. Near the spot where the doctor and his friends had been standing the crowds surged back and forth. The great multitudes in the palace grounds had the appearance of an immense sea, whose surface was every inch covered with human heads, those of men and women. The shouts of the grown-ups and the terrified shrieks of the children added vehemence to the scene. Th next moment I see Comrade Liebknecht pulled down from the stand. His friends also follow. Then I see fists raised. I suddenly discover that the jostling of the crowds about me has carried me farther away from the spot where a riot is in progress. I again elbow my way toward where the doctor and his companions have been pulled down from the stand. I had made some progress when suddenly I find myself being swept backwards by a huge human wave.

In spite of my wish to see what is going on behind me, I am being carried away further and further. Several hundred thousand panic-stricken souls are rushing towards the streets and the avenues that lead to the grounds. The scene is frightful. Everyone is shouting. I steal a glimpse of the spot which is now the centre of the sudden panic. I gasp my fright. I see numberless mounted soldiers with large black whips, in their hands, lashing the crowds. Their mounts are so close to the struggling and frightened men and women, yea, even children, that it is a miracle that thousands are not pinned to the ground. I see many people whether they are killed or fainted. But there are many of them. I myself was forced to step over several persons. I tried to life up the body, but in the next moment was carried away.

GERMAN DREAM LOST IN NORTH SEA FIGHT

Hope of Invading England Dissipated By Heavy Naval Losses

FLEET MOVEMENTS IMPOSSIBLE FOR MANY MONTHS TO COME

London, June 8.—One result of the North Sea battle of last week is that for many months it will be impossible for the Germans to attempt naval movements which they might have undertaken before the battle was fought, said A. J. Balfour, First Lord of the Admiralty, in his address which he delivered to-day.

In his speech made before the British Imperial Council of Commerce, Mr. Balfour said it was impossible, at the present, to go into details of the battle as he had no connected view of the whole action from any authentic source. Admiral Jellicoe's despatch, giving his views had not been received. British losses had been stated accurately while no value could be placed on the German reports, which, Mr. Balfour stated, were tainted from the first. He said that the battleship which the Germans still insist was sunk (evidently referring to the Warspite) had been safe in port since Thursday.

Dealing with the broad issue of the result of the battle, Mr. Balfour declared the German losses were greater than the British, and asked why, if the Germans had defeated the British they had not pressed their advantage. German headquarters, he said, never was under the delusion that the German fleet was superior to the British, and the Germans therefore were not to blame if they ran away. It would be bad strategy for the German commander to become involved in a decisive fight. Neither in the North Sea nor in the Baltic, he asserted, could the Germans attempt for many months any kind of an organized fleet effort, such as might have been within their reach before the battle.

As a result of the battle, Mr. Balfour declared the German dream of an invasion of England had been dissipated, and regarding the blockade and control of the seas, the German position was worse.

"LE MORT HOMME."

Since the beginning of the battle north of Verdun, on the 21st of February, the name of a certain place has often appeared in the despatches from the seat of war. I mean "Le Mort Homme" (the Dead Man). Several correspondents of your contemporaries have tried to explain why that spot bore that appellation. I have myself attempted to find in the geographical dictionaries an explanation, but in vain. I had given up that task when by accident I came across the following passage in L'Illustration of [illegible]:

"At the crossroad leading from Bethincourt to Chattancourt, and of the roadway which brings one by a bend fro Cumieres to Esnes, there stood formerly a Calvary. Its cross was there to mark the place where the body of an unknown man had been found. Whether he had been murdered or had died suddenly the chronicle of the day could not unravel the mystery, which is of such little interest to-day. From that fact is derived the name of Mort Homme, which now holds a place in the greater history.

I think the above solves the mystery.—A.D.D., Ottawa Citizen.

A Loss of Froth and Very Dry.—At a meeting presided over by a burly country squire the chief speaker was a budding orator with a seat in the Upper House. Said the chairman, grasping the nervous speaker by the arm on the conclusion of his lordship's address: "Your speech was like a glass of champagne" [illegible] the noble lord smiled pleasantly — "free of froth and very dry."

Suffered From Nerves
Could Not Sleep

To the thousands of people who are tossing on sleepless beds night after night, or who pace the floor with nerves unhinged, and to whose eyes sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound refreshing slumber.

They restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres, thereby producing peaceful, undisturbed, refreshing sleep, and will cause you to get up in the morning feeling that you have the strength and vitality to go through your day's work.

Mrs. Hollas Knox, St. John, N.B. writes: "I suffered greatly with my nerves, I could not sleep at night, nor work, and the least little thing worked on my mind and bothered me. Last winter I thought I would go out of my mind, I would screech out, and my mother really thought I was going crazy with my nerves. It was so terrible I would hold my head and cry. I tried two doctors, but they did not do me any good. I thought I would tell you that to-day I am perfectly cured by using three boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I can recommend them to all sufferers from nervous troubles. You can tell everyone that they are the only thing that did me any good."

A Special - - Gossard Corset - - For Motoring

Since every woman rides in an Auto sometime or other, this Summer Gossard Model is almost a necessity.

It was designed to give you comfort on the longest Auto ride you might ever take. It will not slip up on the body, because it has just enough waist line to keep it where it belongs. The skirt is not long---the elastics (there are six of them), are stout and filled with fine rubber.

The top of the Corset lets the flesh above the waist line rest in the Corset, the bust line is rather low.

Only a long ride in an Auto can make you fully appreciate the comfort and coolness of this special. You would never know you had a Corset on if your figure did not appear so graceful and well-proportioned.

This model is here in all sizes and we can send yours to you at once, or you may be fitted if you like..... $3.00

Bouck White Gets 30 Days, Fine and "Tip" To "Get Out"

New York, June 6.—The Rev. Bouck White, pastor of the Church of the Social Revolution, for the second time in his Socialistic career, is behind the bars. This time he is serving 30 days for desecrating the American flag by drawing cartoons of it.

When he finishes his sentence he stands a fair chance to be rearrested on the same charge as a result of a "melting pot party" in the rear of his church, at No. 125 West Twenty-first street, on Thursday night, when American and other flags were burned by a band of White's followers.

White told a Herald reporter yesterday that the burning of the flag was a religious celebration and was prompted solely by spiritual motives and "high mindedness." There will be a John Doe hearing on Monday morning before Chief Magistrate McAdoo when evidence of the "melting pot party" will be introduced and District Attorney Swann will ask that warrants be issued for those guilty of burning the Stars and Stripes.

White refused to have a lawyer and conducted his own defence in Special Sessions yesterday before Chief Justice Russell and Justices McInerney and Moss. Frank Urban was the witness against White and he declared that on March 19 at Byron Hall he had seen White distribute circulars containing cartoons of the flag, showing dollar marks where the stars should be, and splotches representing blood.

White did no cross-examining and took the stand. He said that his arrest was a violation of his constitutional right—the right to criticise the government. He said that it was a political cartoon White was asked if he had not once said, "That flag no longer represents idealism, but stands for the greediest and the vulgarest set of profit grabbers since history began." He admitteed it.

CALLS SENTENCE INSUFFICIENT

In reply to questions, White said he was born in New York, and educated in Harvard. White objected to reference to the burning of the flag Thursday night, and Justice Moss sustained his objection. The Socialist admitted that he had been previously convicted of crime before Magistrate Campbell, when he went to the church of John D. Rockefeller and caused a disturbance. He was sentenced to two years in the workhouse then, he said.

Without leaving the bench, the three Justices found White guilty. Justice Moss asked him to stand up.

"You were born here and educated here," he said, "and you owe all that you have to the United States. The Court prescribes a fine of $100 and 30 days' imprisonment. We expose this sentence and regret that the term specified in the statute is insufficient to fit the crime."

Then Justice McInerney said—"There is no room in America for men who think and act as you do. The best thing for fellows like you is to get out of the country."

In the Tombs yesterday White told a Herald reporter that a committee was arranging to appeal his case if necessary to the Supreme Court of the United States. On the committee, he said, were Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes, Upton Sinclair, Art Young, Max Eastman, Lincoln Steffens, Chester M. Wright, John Spargo and Miss Mary Allen Stuart, of No. 27 West Thirty-sixth street, who is the chairman.

"This is the first time in the history of the United States," White said, "that a man has been jailed for drawing a political cartoon. The whole question of the freedom of the press is at stake and it means that this country has taken an awful step toward militarism. Therefore, I believe that this case should be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States."

"STRICTLY RELIGIOUS" AFFAIR

The prisoner said that $60 had been subscribed toward the purpose of appeal. White was eager to talk about the alleged desecration of the flag on Thursday night, when Albert Henkel, an artist, burned the American flag with others in a melting pot.

"The entire affair has been misrepresented and misunderstood," White said. "The meeting took the place of the regular weekly prayer meeting, usually held on Friday night, because my trial came up to-day. I didn't know anything about the flag and the melting pot until the day before and then I was very keen about it. The whole affair was conducted on the level of spiritual highmindedness and was strictly religious. Just as ore burns and the pure gold is left, so the pure gold of brotherhood is left when the flags of nationalism are burned. That is true and that was the symbolism intended by the melting pot."

White was asked about the presence of the Rev. Mercer G. Johnston, recently rector of Trinity Church, Newark, at the burning and the clergyman's statement that the affair was "damnable."

"Johnston is a conscientious man," White said, "but he has not come over to our way of thinking."

White said that the Justice who reminded him that he owed all to America, made a "stupid remark." "It is all the more reason why I should give my heart and brain and soul to keep this country from plunging downward," he said.

Arthur Woods, Police Commissioner, said yesterday that the burning of the flag was an outrage that should not be tolerated and he promised the District Attorney the fullest co-operation of the police in collecting evidence. Through Frank A. Lord, Second Deputy, the Commissioner instructed that detectives be employed to assist the District Attorney. Mr. Woods said that the maximum punishment permitted by the statute was insufficient and that it should be attended to by the next Legislature.

SOUGHT TO PREVENT THE FLAG BURNING, MR. JOHNSTON DECLARES.

The Rev. Mercer G. Johnston, of Newark, said that he did not believe the motive of White and his followers in burning the flag was to insult the Stars and Stripes but rather to purify the flags and merge them into one for universal brotherhood.

"I told those present," he said, "I agreed with them on two of their three principles: social regeneration, and universal brotherhood. I referred to the cartoon that figured in White's arrest and said that when it came to the flag there was a question in my mind if I agreed with him. If there was any thought of doing anything to dishonor the flag or disparage it, there we disagreed. When I learned what it was intended to do I sought to prevent it, failed and then left.

Mr. Johnston informed the District Attorney that he would be glad to do anything he could to help him, according to the latter. The clergyman recently resigned from Trinity church, Newark, giving as his reason that the members of the vestry sought to restrict his pulpit utterances.

AUTOISTS WHO DON'T KNOW A WINDSHIELD FROM A PLUG.

In regard to the widespread mechanical ignorance among autoists a writer in Farm and Fireside, says:

"The number of person who have no practical knowledge of mechanics, and yet run their own automobiles, is so amazing that I have often been asked: 'How do they do it? How can a young girl who does not know a crank shaft from a carburetor run an auto with such grace and skill? How can a professional man with his head stuffed with medicines or law have the nerve to venture miles away from a repair shop?'

"A small town merchant who has run a large touring car for three years admitted to me the other day that he didn't know the principle of the gas engine except that it responded to his control. He said that some day he hoped to study it all out, although he didn't see how that would help him to get any more service out of the car. This case is not exceptional but simply helps to show that automobiles are very nearly 'fool-proof.'"

Girl A Nervous Wreck At Eleven Years of Age

Was Tired Out, Pale and Sallow—Would Tremble Till the Bed Would Shake—Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Cured Her

In the school of to-day there is found an alarming proportion of weak, nervous children, who have little chance of developing into healthy, useful men and women. Nature requires the assistance of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help them over a trying period and set them on their feet.

There would be fewer wearing glasses if the nerves were invigorated less irritation in the school and home, more robust health and a greater pleasure in the school tasks.

This letter bears a cheering message to parents whose children are weak, puny, and nervous. It shows you what may be expected from the use of this great restorative.

Mrs. Stephen Hartman, Italy Cross, Lunenburg Co., N.S., writes:

"My little sister at eleven years of age became nervous, irritable and seemed all tired out. She had no appetite, was lifeless and drowsy, and her complexion grew pale, and sallow. Finally she had to keep her bed and had somebody with her all the time. She was afraid of everything, would get excited and tremble till the bed would shake. As she seemed to be getting worse under the doctor's treatment, mother decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. After she had used about four boxes improvement was noticeable, and it was wonderful to see how much brighter and stronger she grew week by week. She used ten boxes altogether, and they cured her. She got fat and rosy, and went to school every day with an ambition that she never seemed to have before. I do not hesitate to recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to anyone, for it was indeed wonderful what it did for her."

THE PETERBOROUGH RED CROSS SOCIETY COLUMN

It has been with deep regret that the Executive found it necessary to close the workroom at the Public Library for a week owing to the great difficulty in securing sufficient gauze to keep our workers supplied. This has been due to no lack of foresight on the part of the Executive, but simply that owing to the enormous demand it was not possible to fulfill our orders. Peterborough has been fortunate in being able to go on so long, as many of the societies in Toronto had to close down owing the the same difficulty in getting gauze.

However the trouble is overcome, and gauze has been secured so the Executive make an earnest appeal to all the workers to turn up on Monday in such numbers as will enable us to send forward as many supplies for June as usual, in spite of our enforced holiday.

The society has forwarded during the last three months the following garments, etc:

Busy work parties are held by the ladies of Trinity Methodist Church, St. John's C.W.A., St. Peter's Patriotic League T.A.S, Rooms, Bereau Bible Class of Knox Church, Murray St. Baptist, Mother's Club of King Edward School, St. Paul's Presbyterian.

During the month of May the following surgical supplies were made in the workroom and forwarded:

2516 pads 6 by 7, 1,965 pads 9 by 12, 1,607 pads 12 by 16, 9,563 compresses, 36,766 sponges.

The generous help given to the Society by Fanning's Laundry is much appreciated, and is a worthy contribution, as otherwise the Laundry Bill of the Society would amount to quite a substantial sum.

This terrible struggle seems to be gaining in its intensity and fury as the days go by and the tragedy and awfulness of it all has been brought home to Peterborough afresh in the last ten days. So many of the finest boys, to whom life was full of promise, have made the supreme sacrifice for us, others are wounded or prisoners, but one and all have done their duty unflinchingly. In the face of their sacrifice we owe it to them, to do our duty also that there shall be no slacking, no falling away but steady faithful toil, day after day, week after week, month after month, and if need be, which we pray God it will not, year after year.

There are very many women who have not yet "done their bit" in Peterborough who have never been inside our workroom or that of any of the patriotic societies, surely in view of the sorrow which has come to some of the homes in Peterborough because some have seen their duty and obeyed the call to defend their Empire, their country and their home, it will arouse those who as yet have not heard the call of the Red Cross.

We have been asked twice during the last week if it is needful to be a member of the Red Cross to be able to work in the workroom.

Certainly not, everyone is welcome, there is only one regulation to be adhered to and that is, a willingness on the part of the worker to do her work to the satisfaction of the supervisor in the department in which she works.

We are always glad to see our regular workers in attendance but we are also glad to welcome new ones, there all would do it.

We would like to again draw the attention of subscribers to our "Prisoner's of War Food Fund", that it is needful no to send $2.50 instead of $2 as formerly. Some of our contributors have done this since notice was called to it in this column others have overlooked it, and we would be glad if all would do it.

One returned prisoner says coffee, cheese, condensed milk, biscuits, cocoa, sugar, tinned meat are the things most needed and that a "Macounichie ration" provides to good meat meals.

We do not know if the latter can be procured here, but this prisoner of war whose ideas are reproduced in the "Graphic" of 13th May and who has been released from the Ruhleben Camp says it is one of the things that the prisoners like to get almost better than anything else.

He says the prisoners get the parcels regularly and the evidence all round seems to bear out the truth of the statement.

Another prisoner says, "Send something nourishing, that we can bite on, something fat if you can, as we get no butter or fat here."

It is good news to hear that the prisoners of war in Turkey are also being sent parcels of food by the British branch. This has been made possible by the help of the American Ambassador in Constantinople service.

INDIA PROVES ITS LOYALTY IN CRISIS

When is a conquered country loyal? That, says the Boston Globe is a delicate question which is much concern to colonizing powers. Lord Hardinge of Penhurst, who was appointed Viceroy of India in 1910, has returned to England with a most flattering report of the loyalty of that Empire.

The British army of occupation usually numbers about 73,000 men. No fewer than 300,000 men, white and brown, were sent from India to the various European and Asian battlefields. The British forces in India were pared down at one time to less than 15,000 men—this in a country of 315,000,000 people. That the Indians did not overwhelm this small number of white troops in a tidal wave of revolt, says Lord Hardinge, is unmistakable proof of the unswerving loyalty of India.

Unfortunately for the effect of this, he hastens to add that "this situation was, however, purely temporary," and that the instant the troops could be spared reinforcements were sent to India. "From these facts it is apparent," the noble Lord concludes, "that the Indian government had full confidence in the loyalty of India, the princes, chiefs and peoples."

The plain situation in India is that "the princes, chiefs and peoples" have been made to understand that to throw off the English domination does not necessarily mean independence for India, but that it is far more likely to mean that India would exchange the temperate, and on the whole, benevolent British rule for a less humane task-master. It is commonly reported so have been King George VI's visit to India to explain this point to the Indian princes by word of mouth.

India's loyalty thus becomes less a matter of troops than of a "cordial understanding."

The Black Hole Of Calcutta Is Declared Myth

The four words, "The Black Hole of Calcutta," for 160 years have visualized the height and depth and the breadth of all horror. Nothing in frightfulness and human torture could go beyond what those 146 men suffered that hot Indian night, stuffed so tightly in a small underground room that the door had to be forced shut. In the morning only 23 were alive. The others had been suffocated, smothered to death.

No one has ever doubted the truth of that story. It has been accepted as an established historical fact for a century and a half. Every encyclopedia gives the same account of it. Poems have been written about it. It is in some of our school readers. One of Hentys best books was written about it and his hero was one who spent the night in that hell hole of horrors and lived. The Black Hole has been the synonym of human agony and torment. If someone somewhere suffered greatly, as men adrift for weeks on the ocean in an open boat without food or water we said they suffered the torments of the Black Hole of Calcutta.

And now, says the Kansas City Star, we are told by a man who seems to have considerable evidence in support of his contention that the historical version of the Black Hole tragedy is a "gigantic hoax." It never happened, he asserts. All the shudders all the sympathy, all the oceans of tears, shed over it, have been wasted. The man who thus tears down this story is J. H. Little, who is vouched for as a man of reputation and a careful investigator. In an article in the current number of Bengal, Past and Present, he writes that he has made a special study of the black hole incident, has very closely examined the archives of the East India Company, and overhauled contemporary French and Indian records, and has demonstrated that there is no truth in the story.

He asserts that the account was invented by a notoriously mendacious chronicler, J. Z. Holwell, a British official, to cover up his own stupid blunders, which contributed to the defeat and slaughter of the East India Company's men by the troops of the Indian Nawab. As a matter of fact, says Little, the Nawab stopped the slaughter as soon as he arrived on the scene, and the so-called Black Hole was a room in which only nine prisoners of war were detained, including Holwell himself. Two of the prisoners had been wounded in the fight and died in the room; and another who had been ailing, succumbed to his illness. This, says Little, is the whole truth about the Black Hole in a nutshell.

The historical story now disputed by Little is that in an Indian uprising in June, 1756, the English garrison of 146 men was put in the underground dungeon of Fort Williams in Calcutta. It was a strongly barred room only 18 feet square, with only two square windows. The night was excessively hot. The men were not given water or air. They became delirious, they raved, thy fought, prayed and cursed. In the fearful struggle to get near the window the weakest were pressed to death and suffocated.

An obelisk of white marble fifty feet high marks the spot where the dungeon was and it is visited by nearly every traveller who goes to Calcutta.

"And that," Voltaire once wrote to Mme. du Deffand, "is how history is written."

FELL IN A FAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall on the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

CANADIAN MISSION GOING TO FRANCE

MR. P. O. MILLS TO JOIN AMBULANCE AND DR. CARROLL CHASE FOR HOSPITAL WORK.

New York, June 7.—Senator Chas. P. Beaubin, of Montreal, heading a Canadian Commission to France, aboard the steamship Chicago, of the French line, which steamed from New York for Bordeaux, said:

"We are going to France to cement the relations of love between France and our mother country, England."

Other members of the commission were Mr. Louis N. Patenaude and Mr. Paul Sienrot, secretary of the French Chamber of Commerce of Montreal.

Going to join the Eleventh division of the French Volunteer Ambulance Corps, Mr. Philip O. Mills, son of the late Brigadier General Samuel M. Mills, formerly chief of artillery, was also a passenger. He belongs to the Harvard Club and is taking along a tent on wheels. It weighs seven hundred pounds, folds up and when open can provide sleeping accommodations for eight men.

"I went to Mrs. Van Smythe's reception yesterday. I didn't know a soul there." "It must have been a very swell affair."

GERMANY FINDS A SUBSTITUTE FOR TEA.

Among the latest substitutes for regular food and drink reported in the German press is a tea "ersatz." This is expected to prove very popular in view of the fact that the government has taken control of all the tea and coffee in the empire.

According to the Berliner Lokal Anzeiger of April 30, Professor Udo Dammer of the royal botanical gardens at Dahlen, has discovered that a mixture of dried blackberry and strawberry leaves can be made into a tea that cannot be distinguished from the finest true variety, even by experts. Chicory, acorn and malt coffee is a perfect substitute for coffee says the paper.

The writer adds that people drank adulterated coffee and tea before the war without knowing it so that it is no hardship to take it now.

Former Peterborough Citizen Writes Upon Corporations and Government Alliance

Mr. Andrew Cameron Writes in the Vancouver Sun on "The Corporations and Tory Combination"

Editor Sun: Sir—I am very much disappointed re our Dominion of Canada, which was once our free and noble country, but alas what do I see? From coast to coast many things make me lose confidence in the consistency of our rulers or governments. My convictions are open and without prejudice that the masses, the commonwealth, the working people and general business men along with the farmers, being the producers and consumers, are mere hewers of wood and drawers of water, led by a delusion and a snare to serve, work and submit to the ruling of the great corporations, and we must all bow the knee to Baal. Is the average member of Parliament not subject to the great corporations? In the last five years who has reaped the profits out of the products of Canada? What about all this borrowing money by the million to help those organizations which we believe are very much watered stock, along with this commission business. Nothing seems too much. I never heard of such excuses for graft as have been put up in B. C. $80,000 Indian reserve, no limit to extravagance. I see another attempt to cover up by the acting premier or would-be rulers supreme, the P. G. E. failure. He tells us that if they had not come to the rescue that Foley, Welch & Stewart would have gone into liquidation and the P. G. E. would have gone into the receiver's hands. Why not let it go? Or investigate first whether it was necessary to pay out of the public treasury this terrible amount. Oh, no, we must serve the great corporations, C.N.R., Mackenzie & Mann, P. G. E., Foley, Welsh & Stewart & Co., along with many others that our government is subject to. How long the people of B. C. and Canada will endure persecution, remains to be seen. Those fine addresses, oratorical speeches and misleading press reports will not pay the piper. I thing all those favor seekers at present are after a new lease of power that they make good their calls for money through the Tory combination. It is time to organize a board of control appointed outside of parliament to investigate our financial conditions. But I can see that there is going to be an election very soon, and something is wanted, yes, the votes of the people. For the last months there have ben pulling and studying public opinion through the prohibition or liquor license question, and a good many healers have been on the warpath re where the real power lies. Were there the most real votes for Bowser in the prohibition voters or in the licensed barroom voters? We have had a few dialogues going through our newspapers for some time, and the Bowser army was a bit careful, there was very little knowing which was the stronger, the dry horse or the wet horse. We all know that the Tory party had a great number of officials, mostly wet, who were put there through the license liquor business, all the agents and commissioners and provincial police all over the province. But for all that Mr. Bowser was not sure which horse to ride till Mr. Brewster and M. A. Macdonad were pronounced the dry candidates, and they meant it both in purpose and precept, and I know that Mr. Bowser was pressed very hard by some of the prohibition committee to go on to their dry horse, but no, not yet. I tell you, gentlemen, I like the Sullivan, Reid and Tulk horses pretty well, and they have carried me through before, and I think my friend Tisdall had better ride the wet horse on 28th Feb., and so he did, and rode him well, but, alas, the wet fellow was outdistanced. What can be the matter with him? Too much drink? And on Feb. 29th, leap year day, Mr. Bowser had the dry horses line up at Victoria. He says: "Gentlemen, I do believe you can go some, he is certainly some horse, but I tell you I do not like the gait of this horse you've fetched from Alberta, and besides I have my doubts if we Tories could ride him, it might not be just safe. I am told that he was raised and trained by a Liberal like a good many bills or horses, but, dear friends, I am going to have a dry horse raised and trained in B. C., and we will call him Bowser, and so herewith the Bowser dry horse, to be ridden by wets may kill it. It is not always the horse in the race, I am told, so much depends on the jockey."

What does all this tommy-rot mean? A blind eye might see the purpose; it is an arrangement from coast to coast; nothing but investigations, Dominion Trust, Indian reserve boat buying and excuses for wrongdoing for the last three years. Mr. Bowser's very dear friends, Sir Wm. Macknealie and my partners in the P. G. E., might suffer if I am not premier, so I will ride the dry horse in the day-time to keep in power.

Note and watch how much real intelligence the electorate of B. C. displays at the coming election. Party politics should have nothing to do with prohibition, neither should it have with the general business. It is plain to me that the corporations of Canada constitute the government. I have seen more political imposition in B. C. the last five years than in all my experience in Canada during the last forty years.

P.S.—I have been taught to recognize some of the commandments from the good book and one is: "Thou shalt not steal."

I am a Liberal, a Socialist and a labor man for the betterment of our province, but not a slave to Tory corporation rule such as we have in British Columbia. It is really serious. Andrew Cameron, 1716 Pendrell Street, Vancouver, B.C.

Trades and Labour Notes

(By the Official Scribe)

There was a good attendance of delegates at the Trades and Labour Council this week, no doubt caused by the local press, which announced on Wednesday that the Trades Council were going to discuss the Day light Saving that evening. The debate on the same subject ending in a tie vote at the City Council meeting on Monday. The Aldermen thought that an expression of opinion from the working classes would help them arrive at a decision when the question was next considered.

The Trades Council turned the proposition down. Members expressed themselves ably on the matter, showing that considerable interest over the question had been aroused. The men who enjoy an eight-hour day were not very much concerned. Finishing at 5 p.m, they had ample time to do any chores before the evening's entertainment, if any, started and lots of time in the morning to satisfy all nature demanded, and a little to spare, of sleep. The ten-hour man viewed things differently. When it would come quitting time he would be told: "Well, it's only five o'clock by the correct time; you can easily work another hour, because we're busy; so the daylight saving would be the thin end of the wedge to replace a long, monotonous ten-hour day by an eleven-hour grind. The manufacturers were eager for this, which showed that they were to be benefitted, and if the powers that be want daylight saving for the benefit of the toiler the idea is simple enough—let them agitate for a nine-hour day with half the energy displayed on the daylight saving proposition, and see how they would have the workers' support.

The onlooker always sees the best of the game, and the City Fathers who no doubt have the welfare of this good city at heart, should be able to say why so many good standards are left idle on well-lit George Street, while there are so many dark places elsewhere. Also why should gravel be drawn from the Edison Works to fill in Bethune Street, near London street, when there is lots of gravel close and handy in the North Ward?

The question of the employment of returned, disabled soldiers was also considered, and the question raised why should not the Government lead the way in this. There were lots of Government jobs held by 'huskies' that a disabled soldier could fill. These soldiers had gone forth, perhaps to give their lives at the request of the Government, and primarily it was the duty of the Government to employ them in preference to the men who had not responded to the call.

Next meeting, June 21st.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

By Elisabeth Thomas.

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same—lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orimus capsules. Take one after each meal and before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orimus in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.50 postal not or money order. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 2500, Montreal, Canada.

Normalites Leave For Home

Scattered East, West, North and South This Morning

At the Grand Trunk Station, this morning, the fair Normalites had their innings an kept three baggage porters, the agent and ticket clerk dancing attendance upon them for the better part of an hour, while they purchased transportation, and obtained checks for their many belongings. East, West, North and South they took their ways on the different trains. Many were the affectionate farewells. For no doubt this meant the end for many long days, of comradeships which had grown during the last few months of companionship at the Peterborough Normal School. Probably never to be renewed; for Canada is a large spot on the map of North America, and calls are insistent from far-away fields, for the services of those ambitious lassies who have equipped themselves for the work of teaching the young idea how to shoot.

"I don't mind being hugged in mistake," said one of the baggagemen after the last train had pulled out amid waving handerchiefs, and he mopped his brow; "but I do wish they would put their names on their baggage."

Unable To Save Zeppelin Crew

New York, June 8.—Additional details not heretofore published, reached New York yesterday regarding the destruction of the Zeppelin L—7 by the British war ships. The information came from the Swedish steamship Svea, which arrived at Malmoe on May 7th.

When the Svea was within seventeen minutes southwest of Horn's Riff, near Jutland, a Zeppelin was sighted going west. A little later several British destroyers were seen following the course of the Zeppelin, which turned and gave battle. The battle lasted a half an hour, when the Zeppelin careened and fell to the surface of the water.

The Svea put up steam to hasten to the assistance of the Zeppelin but was prevented from doing so by the destroyers. The Zeppelin was on fire the destroyers hastened away. When the Svea then approached the burning mass no signs of life were to be seen.

The Nieuwe Rotterdam Courantj says that a fishing boat, which was also a witness of the battle, tried to rescue the crew when the Zeppelin fell into the sea but the British war ships headed her off. The crew reported that the cruisers Galates and Phaleon were also engaged in the battle, and in the beginning of the battle two bombs from the Zeppelin struck their decks, evidently doing some damage. An explosion on the Zeppelin a little later was plainly heard and she suddenly fell into the sea.

COLLARS OF GOLD FOR WAR DOGS OF GREAT COURAGE

War dogs had the principal honors at the 63rd annual public sitting of the Societe Protectrice des Animaux. Mr. Guillon, inspector of viticulture of the Ministry of Agriculture, representing the Minister, presided. Mr. Andre Falise, president of the society, was also one of the speakers.

Gold collars were awarded to the war dogs. Three of thse dogs were more particularly honored. They have been the object of the following citations:

Fend l'Air, belonging to Sergt. Jacquemin, of the First Regiment of Zouaves, saved his master on Dec. 12, 1914, on the battle field of Roclincourt.

Loustic distinguished himself on the front by his intelligence and the valuable services he rendered to the unit to which he was attached. Loutic unfortunately was unable to hear the plaudits of the public, for he has now been "reforme" on account of deafness.

Pyrame's appearance was eagerly awaited but the pubile was disappointed, for he is still at the front. His notable service consists of saving a French battalion by signalling the unsuspected presence of a strong German column. By his barking he aroused the attention of his leader who, advancing and perceiving the enemy, attached a letter to the dog's collar, which Pyrame took back to the French lines, where an alert was given.

Fifteen dogs of the Societe Nationale du Chien Sanitaire then marched past on the platform accompanied by the soldiers who train them. Their appearance roused much enthusiasm. The ceremony was brought to a close by a concert of well known artists, aided by the band of the 230th Territorial Regiment.

FACES TRIAL FOR REVOLT SLAYING

DUBLIN, June 8.—The prosecution began the presentation of its case at the court martial of Captain Bowen Colthurst, charged with the shooting of F. Sheehy Skeffington, editor of the Irish Citizen; Thomas Dickson and Fred McIntyre during the recent Irish rebellion. The defendant is accused of murder.

The prosecuting officer said the defendant took the three men from the guard room with the remark, "I am going to shoot them, as I think it the right thing to do." The guard room orderly made a report regarding this to the Adjutant General who sent a message to the accused but it is not known whether it reached him. At all events, declared the prosecutor, the men were taken to the yard and shot by a firing party of seven men.

Officers testified they had been on duty seventy-two hours at this time and that the accused was extremely excited and did not act in his usual manner. One officer said that after the shooting he noticed a movement in Skeffington's body and told the Captain of it, the latter then ordering that the squad shot again. Another volley was fired into the body.

It was testified that the accused told Major Roxburgh, who was in command of the Portobello barracks that he had shot the men on his own responsibility and probably would hang for it.

General Bird, the chief witness for the defence, related how Captain Bowen-Colthurst had disobeyed orders during the Mons retreat and was suspended. Bowen-Colthurst's company was ordered to retire, but Bowen-Colthurst gave the command to advance. This, said the witness, showed his incapacity.

Medical testimony was then taken for the purpose of indicating the unbalanced state of Bowen-Colthurst's mind.

Serious Accident To Well Known and Venerable Lady

There will be very general regret at the sad accident to Mrs. T. W. Allan, of Millbrook, widow of the late Venerable Archdeacon Allan in his life the best known clergyman in Eastern Ontario. Mrs. Allan, a day or two ago, fell in the house of her son, Mr. John Allan, and sustained, what the surgeons describe as an intercapsular fracture of the thigh bone. This form of fracture, most serious in itself, is made more so by the advanced age of the sufferer—92 years—who, up to the time of the accident, was extremely well and active in both mind and body. Dr. D. C. King, city, reduced the fracture, and Mrs. Allan is in charge of her granddaughter, Mrs. King; and the venerable patient will have done for her all that professional capability, joined to filial love and an atmosphere of family love and devotion, can do. Her hosts of friends join to their loving and respectful sympathy, the hope that they may hear good news of her progress to recovery.

LLOYD GEORGE IS LUCKY.

Plans to Accompany Earl Kitchener Were Upset.

London, June 9. — David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, was only prevented from accompanying Lord Kitchener on his ill-fated trip on the cruiser Hampshire by the Irish crisis, according to statements in political circles here to-day. It had been arranged that Lloyd George should accompany the Minister of War to Russia, but the sudden call upon the Welsh statesman to mediate between the Irish factions upset this plan. His place was taken by other representatives of the Ministry of Munitions.

No Two-Party Rates.

The subscriber carelessly called the wrong number. Being in a hurry, he promptly asked for a box for two.

"But we don't have boxes for two," said a startled voice at the other end of the line.

"Why, isn't this the theatre?"

"No," was the reply; "this is Blank's the undertaker."

Why Shamed by Blotchy Skin

If you are a sufferer from Eczema or unsightly pimply skin you know just what it means to have that humiliating, backward feeling about meeting strangers, and oftentimes friends. If you will go to the druggist and procure a bottle of D.D.D., the greatest of all skin remedies, apply it according to directions, in a short time your skin will be as soft as velvet.

The Examiner welcomes the advent into the journalistic field of Ptes. Browne and Field of the 93rd Battalion Orderly Room who have issued a Battalion newspaper. The new sheet would be welcomed on our exchange list. So far we have not been favoured with a copy.

THURSDAY'S ORDERS.

Following are the Battalion Orders by Lieut. Col. T. J. Johnston, Officer Commanding 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F. Headquarters Barriefield Camp June 8th, 1916.

DUTIES—

Battalion Orderly Officer for to-day, Lieut. Stock.

Battalion Orderly Officer for to-morrow, Lieut. Hatton.

Battalion Orderly Officer for Saturday, Lieut. Richardson.

Battalion Orderly Sergeant for to-day, Sergt. Payne.

Battalion Orderly Sergeant for to-morrow, Sergt. Gower.

Battalion Orderly Corporal for to-day, Lance-Corpl. Bird.

Battalion Orderly Corporal for to-morrow, Corpl. Elliott.

PARADE GROUNDS—

All parade grounds will be kept free from paper, peelings, shavings, etc. All ranks will understand that if papers are thrown about more fatigues will be necessary. Consequently the practise must be discontinued.

PARADES—Thursday as per syllabus.

RIFLES CLEANING—

All ranks will pay special attention to the daily cleaning of the rifle as the present weather endangers rusting of metallic parts and warping of wooden parts.

ORDERS—

All ranks are again reminded that lack of knowledge of orders will in no way justify lack of duties or crime but will make the offence more serious.

All ranks will make themselves familiar with orders as placed on the Order board in front of canteen.

LEAVE BOOK—

The attention of Offices is again called to the fact that the Leave Book in Battalion Orderly Room must be signed personally before the Officer leaves the camp.

J. E. R. MUNRO, Captain, Adjutant 93rd Battalion, C.E.F.

Some time ago a statement was made by a certain high official whose home is not far from Lindsay that 4,000 citizens of Victoria County had joined the colours. The Examiner drew attention to the ridiculous nature of the statement at the time. The other day at a meeting of the Victoria County Council there were some interesting figures given by Mr. McNeillie of the Patriotic Fund. He showed that in May the number of people in Victoria County who were on the Patriotic Fund as only 92. This was increased in June to 156 so that some idea can be obtained of how far the number of Victoria County actually enlisted differs from the 4,000 total.

Although the departure of the 93rd Battalion from the city and the resultant disappearance to a large extent of khaki from the streets was expected to cause a slowing up in recruiting, such has not proved to be the case. Up to last evening fifty-six residents of Peterborough have joined the colours in ten days, an average of better than five a day since the day after the 93rd battalion left Peterborough. In addition to the fifty-six who have enlisted for active service, twenty-one more have been rejected as physically unfit have registered for the Army Service Corps up to last night making a total of 77 Peterborough men to offer their services in ten days. A very encouraging total in view of the heavy drafts that have been made upon the city since the war began. The recruiting accepted for active service in the period mentioned were divided among the different units as follows:

93rd Battalion	17
Queen's Field Ambulance	15
74 Battery, C.F.A.	12
255th Bowmanville	10
Cobourg Heavy Battalion	2
	56

Lt.-Colonel Johnston and Major R. P. Watt of the 93rd Battalion are home from Barriefield camp for the week-end. Major K. G. Lech will be in command of the battalion during their absence.

The 93rd is coming through the medical examination by a board of doctors at Barriefield very successfully. The examination of A Company has been completed with the result that not more than a half dozen men out of the 250 have been pronounced unfit for Overseas service. No. 5 platoon of B Company went through without losing a man in the test.

Lt.-Col. Gillespie of the headquarters' staff, Kingston, is in Peterborough in connection with the physical training examinations at the Normal School.

The Kingston Standard says: The rain stopped just long enough this morning to allow Major-General Sir Sam Hughes inspect the 10,000 men now under canvas on Barriefield heights. The battalions were drawn up facing the Gananoque road at 8.30, and the march past in spite of the bad condition of the grounds, was of such a character as to draw from the General the most liberal praise for their appearance. Following the inspection the officers of the battalions were drawn up in square formation, with General Hughes and the camp staff in the centre, and General Hughes addressed the officers.

ADDRESSES WANTED.

The ladies of the Churchwomen's Association of St. Johns have arranged and are arranging to send parcels to the members of the Overseas forces who have gone from St. John's congregation. They are desirous of getting the addresse of these men, and parents or friends are requested to hand in the names and addresses as soon as possible to Rev. Canon Cornish or Mrs. A. W. Turner, 572 Weller street.

Lieut.-Col. Johnston, O.C. the 93rd Battalion acted as brigadier for the first brigade composed of the 93rd, 109th and 130th Battalions in the inspection by Major General Sir Sam Hughes. Major Watt commanded the 93rd during the review. The Peterborough Batt. made a very creditable showing.

Wilfred Derry, Garnett Powell, Ivan Howden, Joe Murdock, and Henry Gray are the latest men to join the 74th Battery. Carpenters shoeing smiths and wheelers are particularly needed and any such men would be sure of a good berth.

A cablegram received by his parents from Lieut. Arthur Ackerman, stated that he was well and without a scratch.

Two residents of Lakefield appear on to-day's official casualty list. No 435,329 Pte. Morley Horace MacDonald, and No. 27,270 Pte. William Walker, both of whom are officially reported as wounded.

Sir Sam. Hughes addressed the officers of the battalions at Barriefield yesterday as follows:

"Officers of Barriefield Camp, I congratulate you on the nice weather you are having in this camp, and I must certainly congratulate you on the appearance and conduct of your men on parade this morning, in spite of the unpleasant conditions that prevail. I was amused to watch the corpulent men on parade march up the slippery hill before me indeed, I selected the hill because of its slippery nature, and I was pleased to see how it was covered. I noticed one big drummer get into a nasty place, and just missed two beats of his drum, and then go on as though nothing had happened. That is the spirit I like to see. I have seen the Grenadier Guards on parade, and can assure you that they did not do any better than you have done this morning. You did well.

"I realize that you have not sufficient room here to accommodate and properly train such a large force of men as you have here at present, and I intend later on sending some of the troops to Valcartier and to camp Borden. It would be impossible for you to learn here all that you should learn, and I want my conscience to be clear on the matter of training men for such an important task as that in which we are at present engaged.

Conduct Good.

"The conduct of your men is of the most exemplary kind, and it is an answer all over Canada to those who said that young men could not be trusted in small localities such as they were trained in during the winter. The best control a man can have is his own common sense. Self control is what is needed on the firing line. Men look to officers for examples, and if they lose confidence in them, their influence is gone. Officers must be gentlemen, and when you cease to be this, I shall remove your name from the militia list. I shall not tolerate drunkenness, and if I find any, I shall ask for your resignations in ten minutes, and I can find plenty to take the places of such men. You must also become proficient, and you will find that I can excuse other things easier than I can inefficiency.

"The Ross rifle is the best in the world, and if there has been any trouble with it, it has been due to the ammunition. The Lee-Enfield will jam with bad ammunition. Canadian ammunition has been found good. All the complaints that are made about the Ross Rifle are made by men who can't take the bolt out even. I want every officer to know how to use the rifle.

Bayonet Fighting.

"In the past the bayonet has been a good thing, but in these days of magazine rifles and machine guns, it is an extremely foolish idea to think that large forces can be reached successfully with the bayonet. In the civil war there was not one authentic record where the bayonet won a fight. At Bull Run it was tried, and in crossing a crest of 250 yards, the muzzle loading rifle swept an entire regiment out of existence before the bayonet could be used, and only the adjutant reached the parapet of the confederates. When men are thrown forward to meet large masses of the enemy, I feel freely, that an officer does not know his duty to force them to meet them with the bayonet. Give me men who know how to use the rifle. It is idiotic to press home bayonet charges.

Perfectly Satisfied.

"I am perfectly satisfied with what I have seen here to-day. I always pick the bad places. I now want to meet every officer face to face and shake him by the hand, and I tell you all, I shall shut my eyes to your iniquities, if you will do your duty, and do it well, and I know you will do this, for you are gentlemen and soldiers all over."

The General then shook hands with every officer in the order of their battalions, beginning with the 93rd.

JOYS OF OUTDOOR LIFE AT "Y" CAMP

Now is the time when the boy is longing to get away from the heat of the city, after the examinations is over, we see large numbers of boys going off to the woods, or sitting at the side of the river, enjoying the cool breezes and getting next to nature.

Without a doubt, a few weeks of a growing boy's time, spent as near the wild and nature as possible, affords not only a recreation, but a basis for healthful growth that places a boy far in advance of the one who in the same class does not have the same opportunity to live with nature. The boy, who is not endowed with animal spirits is lacking in the first requisites for a perfect young manhood. He needs physical development. In camp he is free to receive from nature the benefits she delights to give. Let him dress in an athletic suit, minus shoes, if he wishes, and give his skin a chance to breath the fresh air. You may call him an Indian if you wish, but let him gain the health and strength that only a free outdoor life can give. It is well to incourage athletic field games that develope self control, but give him a definite aim, whether a rock or plant or Indian relic. It little matters but on his return to camp he will be physically tired and very hungry and possessed with the consciouaness that he has learned something.

The period for sleep should be long. A healthy boy, physically weary and not mentally fagged will, like the farmer boy, fall asleep at taps, or before, and sleep till reveille is sounded, in the morning.

For evening entertainments in camp there are concerts, camp fires, corn roasts, mock trials and numerous other things.

In no station in life can a man come into closer touch with a boy than out in the open, away from the restriction and formalities of the city life. He can, there help the boy to get along with his fellows, to adjust himself to circumstances and to know that his life may be a factor for good in the world.

This year the Y.M.C.A. Boy's camp promises to be up to the standard. The camp will be held at Sandy Point Clear Lake, from Monday, July 3rd to July 14th. Sandy Point has a safe beach for swimming, and miles of water for boating and fishing. It has a good field for baseball and other sports and is without a doubt the best spot on the lakes for a boys camp. The boys will be under the constant supervision of the officer of the association, assisted by young men of character and ability, who are interested in the development of manly character among boys.

The purpose of the camp is to give the boys happy, healthy vacation, and an outdoor life full of fun and sport under the most wholesome influence and surroundings.

The cook house which is a very important feature in the camp will be well looked after. A competent cook will be in charge, and an abundant supply of good wholesome food three times a day, will keep the boys in good condition.

Boys who intend going to camp would do well to register as soon as possible as all names must be in by the 15th of June.

A SHOOTING SCRAPE AT BARRIEFIELD CAMP

The Kingston Standard says: Pte. Gallagher a member of the 130th Battalion shot Pte. Shenier with a rifle this afternoon at Barriefield Camp. The act was alleged to have been done with intent to kill and the soldier has been handed over to the civil authorities and is now in the police cells. Shenier was shot in the groin and is now in the General Hospital.

PRINTERS CLAIM WAGES ARE LOW

Canadian Scale, They Say, Should Be Increased—Will Press Matter After the War.

The regular Friday night thunderstorm prevented the delegates to the International Typographical Union from enjoying the moonlight trip that had been planned for their entertainment by their hosts of the local Union. However, yesterday afternoon's trip over the Lift Lock in the Bessie Butler was thoroughly enjoyed.

Returning from this outing President Doughty and Secretary-Treasurer Obermeyer presented their annual addresses. Factory Inspector Burke reviewed the sanitary measures pertaining to printing shops and stated that complaints against any shop would be fully considered. Delegates expressed the opinion that employees can in a large measure materially advance shop sanitation by cooperating to discourage careless and unsanitary practices.

A feature of this morning's session was an address by Mr. Walter Barrett, Vice-President of the International Union, in which he stated that the Canadian scale of wages for the printers is too low, and suggested that steps be taken to present demands for adequate increases when the war is over. The delegates were of the same opinion regarding existing wages but it is unlikely that they will present their claims until the war is over.

Mr. H. Stevenson of Toronto, was one of the speakers this morning.

Statements Were Contradictory

Interesting Question as to the Status of Sir Sam Hughes

OTTAWA, June 10.—A most significant situation has arisen at Ottawa which again gives rise to the question of the present status of General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence. The situation indicates a clash in jurisdiction which may have far reaching consequences. Yesterday afternoon General Hughes permitted the publication of a statement in the evening journal concerning the untenability of the Ypres salient, last evening Sir Robert Borden, with the approval of General Gwatkin, chief of staff, contradicted General Hughes' statement. Who, in the face of this situation, it may be asked, is the Minister of Militia? The two statements taken in conjunction with one another, create the most interesting situation at the capital for some days past. General Hughes leaves for the Maritime provinces this afternoon.

Borah Likely For Vice-President

Special to the Examiner:

Chicago, June 10.—The choice at the Republican convention for Vice-President is between Charles Fairbanks of Indiana, and Senator Borah. Borah is favored by both the Republicans and Progressives.

CHICAGO, June 10. — Justice Charles Evans Hughes will probably be named Republican standard bearer to-day within not more than five roll calls when the convention meets at 11 a.m., (Central Time.)

The call of the party may come to him on one or two ballots.

For his running mate any one of half a dozen favourite sons may be chosen. This was the situation early to-day when a night of conferences had shown no concert of opposition against the Justice, and no possibility of restoration of harmony between the G.O.P. and Bul Moose.

On the first ballot to-day, expected to come about 11:30, Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, Illinois' favourite son, will lead the procession in clambering on the Hughes band waggon.

Defections from the other allies were expected, culminating in a general landslide of votes for Justice Hughes.

A conference of the "olive branch" committee of Republicans and Progressives at 9 o'clock was the last effort to effect a truce, and in the view of leaders it was foredoomed to failure just as a prolonged discussion of the night had developed a deadlock, the Progressives standing pat on Roosevelt, as the Bull Moose price of amalgamation, and the Republicans proffering in his stead any one of a dozen favourite sons, dark horses and possibilities. Last night's conference adjourned at 2:30 a.m., both sides amiable and adamant.

BOZ OF CARTRIDGES ON GARBAGE WAGGON

Were Destined For the Incinerator and Might Have Done Damage To It

A box of cartridges of various calibre was recently intercepted on its way to the incinerator. There were 43's, 38's, and all the way down to revolver sizes, including Martini's and other makes. Where it came from could not be learned, but no sinister motives were connected with its inclusion with garbage for collection. Sanitary Inspector Cooper examined this unusual contribution to the garbage men, and stated this morning that the box contained quite a number of cartridges. "They'd be going off yet, if they had ever got into the furnace," he remarked. Since there was no way of discovering the source of this ammunition, it is not likely that anything more will be done to follow up the affair.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

MATTY'S STORY OF VICTORIES SAYS "DEFEAT BLESSING"

Christy Mathewson, the Giants' famous hurler, writes in the N. Y. American.

A fan sympathizes with me, by postal, as follows: "Too bad Matty, old boy, the Giants couldn't keep up their winning streak and set a new record."

Well, I appreciate the spirit of the fan and the good-will toward the Giants that his message shows, but really, I believe that Al Demaree's defeat of his old club on Decoration Day was a blessing in disguise to the Giants.

The Giants were fast approaching a situation where worry was bound to develop. The talk of the press and the public are creating a tenseness among the players such as is felt through the final drive in a hard campaign or in the world's series.

It is not good for any club to be called upon so early in a pennant race and face such a situation and especially a team which is more or less young and inexperienced together, such as the Giants are this year. So I guess it was just as well that it was not in the book for us to face further stress in the way of an unbroken string of wins.

McGRAW IS SATISFIED

As it is now, McGraw is satisfied that our seventeen straight victories developed no strain on the nerves of the club, and I agree with him. But there is no telling what might have been had Demare not handed us the first defeat of our long road trip and destroyed all possibility of the team becoming unduly strained from over-anxiety to maintain an unbroken chain of victories.

I thought pretty well of the Giants from the opening of the season. I thought well of them—yes, I did—even while they were losing thirteen of their first fifteen games. Naturally I though much better of them while they were amassing seventeen straight. I wasn't a bit downcast as to our prospects when Demaree handed us out a defeat.

But when we trimmed Alexander so nicely a few hours later in conclusively proved to me that my confidence in the team had not been misplaced, for among other things this victory over Alex. the Great showed the 1916 Giants to be possessed of unusual nerve, a vital qualification for any club with championship aspiration to possess in abundance.

You might have expected a slight upset at least in the team after the excitement of the first losing game of the long road trip. But the club played as smoothly, evenly and surely as a good team might be expected to play the opening game of the season. The way the Giants slugged Alex satisfied me that the team has not only the driving power and speed to accomplish great things, but the courage and nerve to climb to the highest pennant heights.

Before Alexander had been brushed aside I was sure that the team as now constituted is the very best hitting aggregation McGraw has ever mustered. That is putting it strong when we can look back to the champion Giants of 1904 and 1905, but I will stand by my statement, nevertheless.

The Giants are more confident than ever that their chances of taking part in the next world's series are just as good as—if not a little better than the next fellow's.

intimacy with him to penetrate beneath the surface. When you do get to his fundamental characteristics you will find that this reserve and superficial coldness are allied with a strong emotionalism and even sentimentality; that he has warm friendships to which he is rigidly true; that when swept away by some conviction in favour of a right course, there is no risk that he is not willing to take, no sacrifice that he is not willing to make. And then again when his back is to the wall, you find another side of his character, the hard, even the arrogant side he is very awkward, and sometimes he is even ruthless. And yet again to this fit there is another ready to come to the surface the emotionalism that lies at the root of his character comes up again; and woe betide the man who has mistaken the hardness as the permanent factor. For example, the loudest and the first voices—the voice of Ireland was stifled by the rebellion — that rose against the number of executions in Ireland rose from the Liberal press of England.

Carried Bombs.

I have known Englishmen to do extraordinary things. Take for instance, the case of Joseph Crowe, dead now for many years. He was enormously wealthy and lived in Newcastle on Tyne; he had great brickfields, he owned several newspapers, he was a great orator on the platform and in the House of Commons. He was a quiet little man living amid all the surroundings that wealth could give—though he drank nothing, ate very little, and dressed like a poor provincial Non-Conformist parson. Yet this darling of fortune carried bombs for Mazzini over all parts of Europe at the time when Italy was striving for her independence. Englishmen fought as common soldiers in the Italian army. In my own time several Englishmen went and fought for Greece; some of them were killed.

That spirit of emotionalism was brought out when once we succeeded in getting the real story of Ireland, to the hearts, the consciences and the minds of Englishmen. There were plenty of Englishmen who would have sacrificed everything for Ireland — money, political position personal reputation. For years I saw men coming up every Monday morning from their great businesses in the provinces, from their splendid homes from their wives and children, and steadily, quietly saying nothing, not even trying to get Parliamentary reputation, satisfied with just trudging through the division lobbies of the House of Commons and voting down Sir Edward Carson and the other enemies of the Irish cause. I often wished that some of my countrymen who had never left Ireland, and never known an Englishman intimately could have seen this spectacle, so as to get some idea of what the real, as distinguished from the imaginary, Englishman, was like.

DON'T UNDERSTAND.

It has come to this, that the Englishman, in a way, understands the Irishman better than the Irishman understands the Englishman. But even now there are plenty of Englishmen who don't in the least understand the Irishman, and especially the English militarist who still dreams that Ireland can be separated from her determination to have her liberty by a judicious application of stern methods. However, that type of Englishman is rare, as witness the immense movement for a settlement of the Irish question which followed on the very morning after the suppression of the rebellion in Dublin. And, curiously enough, while many Irishmen still dislike the Englishman, the Englishman prefers the Irishman, at least individually, to any of the other races that make up the four countries.

One of the proofs of this extraordinary division between the two peoples is the credence which was given in apparently good faith many of the organizers of the recent rebellion to the military facts of the situation. When I was a lad of sixteen a Fenian organiser just before the Fenian rebellion assured me with an air of perfect conviction that there was no doubt of Ireland's ability to conquer her liberty against any force that England could bring into Ireland; and he gave me as proof of that a quotation from a speech by some jingo Tory attacking the Liberal government of the day, declaring that England had no real navy. "England", said my Fenian friend, "has only four rotten ships. Read the speech of Sir John Packington" a now forgotten, but then popular Jingo Tory spokesman of the Opposition.

WAS IN FLIGHT.

Within a week after this conversation my friend was in flight. The insurrection had been put down. There were exactly the same kind of tales in circulation in Ireland just before the rebellion. A priest went to some of the leaders of the coming insurrection and remonstrated with them on the folly and hopelessness of their enterprise. He was listening to quite calmly, and then Pearse—one of the leaders of the insurrection who was afterward executed declared quite sincerely I am sure, that there was such a complete fleet of German submarines around the Irish coast that not a single soldier could be landed in Ireland. Some twenty thousand were landed within the course of a few days after this statement and no German submarine made its appearance. It was declared that 20,000 German soldiers were about to arrive; and in some cases the statement was made that they had already arrived on the Irish shores. Not one, as everybody knows, was landed. There were other stories quite as fantastic, such as the fall of Verdun, the submission of France to Germany, etc. etc. It is a tragic object lesson in the vast moral distance that still lies between the two islands that stories so palpably false could find absolute faith among the minds of even such intelligent men as many of the leaders of the recent rebellion undoubtedly were. I have no doubt that some of these stories were deliberately set afloat by German agents from America. These agents must have known the absolute falsity of their statements; but what did that matter so long as the unfortunate men—some of them old men some of them young lads—were induced by those agents to raise this insane movement.

COMING DISASTER

On the other hand, looking to the other side of this tragic misunderstanding between the two peoples, a large number of people in England, including the men responsible for the administration in Ireland, could not be got to see that the postponment of Home Rule was dangerous, that a suspicion had grown up that Ireland was to be tricked once more by England; and all the other signs and symptoms of coming disaster were told to English ears without producing the least impression. The horrible result at one time seemed to be inevitable, that the work done by Butt, Parnell and their successors for forty years of reconciling the two peoples and making them understand each other better, was about to fall to the ground. It is a strange paradox; it is almost a miracle that such a tragic result did not come, that the life's work of all these Irish leaders and British statesmen was not undone in the course of a few hours and that, with that strange tendency to paradox which always seems to haunt English and Irish relations, this insane understanding led to a clearer survey of the situation from both the English and the Irish point of view, and led up to the biggest attempt yet made to bring the two nations to final settlement of their centuries old misunderstanding.

NEW YORK HAS 39 TYPHOID CARRIERS

Danger to Public Health by Persons Who Harbor Germs Discussed at Conference

Saratoga, N. Y., June 9.—"Typhoid carriers," or persons who are capable of transmitting to others the germs of typhoid fever, form a menace to individuals and to municipalities, according to Dr. F. M. Meader, of the State Department of Health, who to-day addressed the State Health officers now holding their annual conference here. He asserted that at least 39 men and women with this characteristic have been detected in the state but he predicted that methods no win use by the department ultimately will result in eradication of the disease.

Dr. Linsley R. Williams, Deputy State Commissioner of Health, stated that raw milk more than any other food, is responsible for illness and stated that the Department is continually combatting epidemics arising from this source. He stated that in 18 months the State officers have discovered nearly 800 cases of typhoid fever, diphtheria and deptic sore throat which could be traced to infected milk. He advocated pasteurization as a preventative.

"Preparedness" in public health was urged at a banquet to-night at which one of the speakers was Dr. Herman M. Biggs, the State Commissioner of Health, who declared that public health is purchasable and that if large enough appropriations are made the department can materially reduce the death rate in the State.

CRAZED PRISONER AROUSES SING SING AS 2 DIE IN CHAIR

Sing Sing, N. Y., June 6.—Oresta Shillitano, the "Paper Box Kid," who killed two policemen and another man in New York City, and who was to have been put to death in the prison in about a month, became violent in the death house to-day, soon after Roy Champlain and Giovapni Supe had met death in the electric chair, that he wrecked his cell, attacked the keepers who tried to subdue him, and was quieted with drugs after he had been chained to a chair.

It has not been determined if Shillitano is really a maniac, his mental balance upset by the deaths this morning and by worry concerning his own approaching death or whether he is pretending. In either case he caused more trouble in Sing Sing than has been known for years.

Shillitano had shot and fatally wounded John Risso, his bitter enemy in Mulberry street, New York, the morning of May 4, 1913, when Policeman William R. Heaney and Charles J. Teare tried to catch him. He shot and killed Heaney almost instantly. Teare was so badly wounded that he died in Bellevue Hospital later. Risso also died of his wounds.

HIS APPEAL LOST

Upon his conviction of murder in the first degree Shillitano was sent to the death house in Sing Sing to await his appeal from the conviction. That appeal was decided adversely to him about three weeks ago and he was to have been put to death about the end of this month.

Since he lost his appeal Shillitano has been in an ugly mood. The guards reported that he became morose and a few days ago started what they believed was a hunger strike. It was decided to begin feeding him forcibly tomorrow if he did not accept food willingly.

He roused himself sufficiently this morning to shout a good-bye to Champlain and Supe as they were led to the electric chair, joining with the other prisoners in that. As all the men in the death house had been awake all night, as is customary on the eve of the putting to death of a prisoner, nearly all of them went to their cots and tried to sleep after the two men had been taken away.

The death house therefore was very quiet about seven o'clock when Shillitano seized his stool and began to wreck everything in his cell. At the same time he set up a series of shouts and yells, with curses, and all the prisoners in the death house were aroused and the noise was heard in the cell block, where fifteen hundred other prisoners were preparing to begin their work day. Not knowing what was happening in the death house they became highly excited.

Shillitano paid no attention to the keepers and guards who gathered at his cell door and tried to quiet him. He threatened to kill them with the fragments of the stool and they were afraid to open the door.

TOSSES GUARDS ABOUT.

Fred Doruer, the principal keeper, hurried to the death house and ordered the guards to open the cell door and over power Shillitano. They did so but before the prisoner was overpowered there was a lively scuffle. Despite the fact that he had eaten little, Shillitano exhibited remarkable strength. He tossed the guards and keepers about and beat and bruised them before they were able to chain his arms behind him with handcuffs and shackle his feet.

He was carried from the wrecked cell then and placed in a padded cell in another part of the prison. There he was chained to a chair but still he continued his struggles to free himself and continued to shriek and curse. Dr. A. O. Squier, who had begun his autopsies upon the bodies of the two men who had been put to death, was called, and he injected a drug into Shillitano's back while several men tried to hold him still. This had a quieting effect upon the murderer and he was still sleeping soundly late last night.

Alienists will be called to the prison to-day to determine the true mental condition of the prisoner. If they find him to be insane he will probably be transferred to Matteawan.

Shillitano's cell was opposite that of Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, and the latter was at his cell door watching the demonstration. He called to the guards to take Shillitano out, saying he had "gone crazy." Thus Dr. Waite, soon after his arrival in the death house, saw two men go to their death, and was a witness of the maniacal demonstration by the murderer of three men.

SAW HAMPSHIRE SINK.

Witness Says Boat Went Down in Twenty Minutes.

Edinburgh, June 8. —The Scotsman prints the story of an eye-witness of the disaster to the cruiser Hampshire, in which Earl Kitchener lost his life. This man, who saw the tragedy from the shore, is quoted as saying:

"The night was wet and stormy, but the light was good. From the shore a column of water was seen suddenly to rise from the Hampshire, followed by a great column of steam and smoke. In 20 minutes the ship has disappeared beneath the waves. A very heavy sea was running at the time. Four boats were seen leaving the ship, but were not again sighted.

Travel from one to two years free in your Ford on your saving in one year's depreciation

Other cars in the $1000 or less class, after one year of service, are worth from $250 to $400 less than their purchased price. That's their depreciation.

Ford cars, after a year's hard work, sell on an average for only $125 less than they cost brand new. That's Ford depreciation.

The difference in depreciation of these year-old cars ranges from $125 in the one case to $275 in the other—both considerable savings for Ford owners.

Thousands of owners tell us that it costs .024 per mile on an average to drive a Ford—paying for gasoline, oil, tires and repairs.

So, if your saving in depreciation for a year is $125 you pay all your expenses for 5,208 miles—while if it is $275, you have kept enough money in your pocket to pay for driving your Ford 11,458 miles.

Buying a Ford in preference to other less than $1,000 cars, lets you save in one year's time a difference in depreciation that pays all your motoring bills for from one to two years.

LOCAL PASTOR NOTIFIES FATHER OF SON'S INJURY

Mr. O'Flynn of Belleville Hears That His Son Was Wounded in Recent Fighting—Was Notified by Rev. J. P. Wilson of This City

THE LAST OFFICER

BELLEVILLE, June 10. — After having escaped dangers in the trenches for sixteen months, Capt. Edmund D. O'Flynn, son of Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, of this city, has been the victim of German artillery. He passed unscathed through the battles of Langemarck, Festubert, Givenchy and many other engagements, but in the last Hun drive at Ypres which is still in progress he suffered shell shock.

Strange to relate the first notification came to Mr. O'Flynn from Rev. J. P. Wilson, of Peterborough, who saw the announcement from Ottawa in an evening paper. Mr. O'Flynn made efforts to secure information, but did not succeed. Not until the following morning did he receive the regular official notice from Ottawa:

Captain O'Flynn was perhaps the first Belleville boy to volunteer for overseas service. Immediately on the outbreak of the war he offered his sword to the Minister of Militia. Since the momentous time, when war waas declared he has been on active service. He became one of the most popular and efficient officers in the first Canadian Contingent. In the trenches he was untiringly thoughtful of his men and doubtless many owe their lives to him. He passed through St. Julian and for services at that momentous period of fighting and because of the depletion of ranks of officers, he was promoted from the rank of lieutenant to that of Captain. Later he was appointed adjutant of his battalion. Recently he was prominently mentioned in connection with the formation of a new battalion as possibly senior major.

He is the last officer of the original officers of his battalion who went to France. They were killed, wounded, missing or invalided.

Capt. O'Flynn's friends throughout the city and province trust that he will have a rapid recovery.

He is a graduate of Osgoode Hall. He had practised law for a year prior to enlistment and was an alderman of the city for 1914.

Crop Prospects Are Excellen

Farmers in Peterboro' County Are on the Second Lap of the Season's Work

Yesterday's rain will further delay the farmers who are attempting to finish up their spring work. Some of the low-lying farms throughout the county of Peterborough can still lay claim to a few acres that have not been seeded. The majority of the farmers are at present engaged in putting in root crops. Despite the wet weather the crops throughout the county are looking fine, and the prospects for a good harvest are excellent. This applies to the fruit crop as well as the grain crops.

LOW GERMAN.

"Low German" is a variety, or "dialect," of the German language. German is divided into "High," "Middle" and "Low," but it can hardly be said that each is a "language." Low German does not go further back than the beginning of the ninth century. The real, or "High," German of to-day was fully established by Luther's translation of the Bible, that translation being accepted as the best pattern of the language.

More Water Than Ever Before at Springville

THE HOUSE MOTHER'S DUTY.

One home is like a calm summer evening or a bright, fresh, spring morning, because the mistress is full of restful sympathy or her mind is of bright, fresh interest in those around her. Another home is a gusty, stormy morning or a fog-laden afternoon when the darkness can be felt, because the woman who makes its atmosphere is capricious, hasty and ill-tempered, or dull and heavy, and careless of the comfort of those who depend on her, and incapable of putting brightness and warmth into the hearts of those around her because there is none in her own heart. Let those who are house mothers look to it that they keep hearts at leisure from themselves to soothe and sympathize" to create a restful atmosphere for those who come in tired and weary from the outside and to keep light and bright and alive in their own minds, that they may shed them over everyone who dwells beneath their roof or who sits beside their hearth.

SHREWD TEACHER PUTS THREE MEN IN JAIL ON GIRLS' CHARGES

CONFISCATION OF NOTE LEADS TO DISCOVERY OF ALLEGED PLOT TO PREY ON SCHOOL PUPILS.

Chicago, June 9.—A shrewd bit of detective work by Miss Mary Nolan, a teacher in Public School No. 31, landed three men in jail yesterday on serious charges.

Miss Nolan saw one of her pupils, Mary Koras, thirteen, pass a note to another pupil, Mary Wordowsky. She demanded the note and found that it contained this message, "I am going to meet Charlie to-night."

After questioning both girls closely Miss Nolan reported the matter to Miss Ethel Pickett of the Children's Aid Society, who in turn called for the assistance of the police.

Miss Nolan co-operated closely and soon discovered that three men who frequented the vicinity of the school had been making engagements with young girls. In all some sixteen girls were involved.

Yesterday Joseph Antonowits, thirty of No. 18 Freeman street, Charles Leach, twenty, of No. 174 Freeman street, and Frank Ivanoff, thirty-five, of No. 66 Box street, were held without bail by Magistrate Nash in the Bedford avenue court.

Antonowits is charged with assaulting his thirteen year old step-daughter.

PRESS ON DEATH OF EARL KITCHENER

"His Service."

Philadelphia Inquirer.—"It was in his capacity for organization that Kitchener's pre-eminence consisted and this capacity was never more effectively displayed, never more effectively exercised, than in the immense service which he rendered to his country immediately following the outbreak of the war."

"Created an Army."

Philadelphia Record:—"His work was well nigh completed. He created an army for his country and performed a work incalculably greater than that of driving the enemy from the field, or conquering a fenced city."

"Called Country to Arms."

New York World:—"When all is said, here was a commanding personality. Kitchener called his country to arms. He warned it that war would not be brief. He forget for it mighty weapons of flesh and blood and spirit. Other men must wield those weapons."

"Work Largely Achieved."

New York Times:—"Earl Kitchener's work was largely achieved—the work of organization. The army of 5,000,000 now exists. The rapidity with which it was integrated will rest for a long time as a high mark of military achievement."

"Dramatic Episode."

"Philadelphia Press:—"Earl Kitchener's death by the sinking of the British warship Hampshire, which was conveying him and his personal staff to Russia, is the most dramatic episode of the great war."

"An Empire Builder."

Bridgeport Post:—"Lord Kitchener was not a great general in the sense that he could deal with great military operations. But he had a wonderful genius for organization. He was one of the empire builders and few men were more successful in organization."

"A Martyr."

Baltimore Sun:—"Kitchener dead may be worth more to England than Kitchener living. Living, he was hotly criticized, his powers were curtailed, his activities hampered. Dead, as a martyr, his memory may become a stimulating force of incalculable value."

"A National Hero."

Pittsburg Press:—"Kitchener of Khartoum was a national hero. Whether or not he was in actual fact the great soldier that the popular fancy made of him, he was nevertheless believed to be so. And faith in a general makes any army twice as formidable as it would otherwise be."

Dan Cupid Has Had Time of His Life in England

Two remarkable interesting facts regarding the year 1915 are included in the registrar-general's annual report for 1915, issued last night, says the correspondent of the New York Sun. They are:

The marriage rate in 1915 rose to 19.4 per 1000 of the population.

Infant mortality increased to 110 per 1000 births.

It is evident from the first fact given that the war has had a striking effect on the number of marriages. For some years past there has been a steady though small increase in the popularity of marriage, but each year has only seen a rise of a decimal point or two. Thus 1914 showed an increase in the number of marriages over 1913 from 15.7 per 1000 to 15.9 per 1000.

Compared with this slight rise, the increase in the proportion last year of no less than 35 per 1000 is extraordinary. In rough figures it means that in addition to the normal number of marriages for the year there were no fewer than 80,000 war brides.

The second fact given rise to some melancholy reflections. For many years past strenuous efforts have been made to reduce the heavy wast of child life. So successful have been these efforts that the infantile mortality which in the '90s ranged about 150 per 1000 births, has fallen to about 100 per 1000 births.

Preparing Plans For C. P. R Footbridge

City Engineer Parsons is engaged in drawing up plans for a foot bridge across the Otonabee adjoining on the north side of the C.P.R. bridge, Ald. Edgar stated this morning. A board walk will be laid from George Street across the spur to the Quaker Oats Co., and from that point a fence will be erected between the walk and the main track. Ald. Edgar further stated that the plans will have to be submitted to the C.P.R. for their approval, but as they had already shown a desire to assist the city in this matter, he hoped to see the bridge completed in a month or so. Ald. Edgar has been specially interested in this facility for the residents of the south end and Ashburnham, and is confident that it will be a material benefit when finally completed.

USE WALKING STEPS IN NEW DANCES SO PARTNERS MAY TALK.

New York, June 9.—Dancing masters attending their annual convention here have decided to encourage their pupils in the practice of more walking steps in learning modern dances. The purpose is to give the dancers a better opportunity for conversation.

"Heretofore, dancers have been so intent upon thinking what steps are coming next that they have no opportunity to talk with their partners," said Charles McCrea of Philadelphia. "The mental strain of trying to remember how to dance has been so great that it has been impossible to think of anything else. It is this condition we are fighting."

HELD BY NEEDLE IN HER THUMB

With the needle of a sewing machine through her left thumb, Mrs. Mary Lamerkan, 30, of Valley street Baltimore, Md., was held a prisoner at her machine for half an hour. She became so faint that she was unable to call for help for several minutes after the accident.

The needle went through the fleshy part of the thumb when Mrs. Lamerkan was seated at the machine, sewing. A neighbour, hearing Mrs. Lamerkan's cries, brought Patrolman Keck, of the northeastern district, to the house.

Mrs. Lamerkan was suffering intense pain, because the needle was bent and could not be removed by an upward motion of the needle socket. Patrolman Keck got a small steel saw and sawed it off. A physician removed the broken needle.

Intense Artillery Fighting On the Western Front

Trenches North of Ypres Were Heavily Shelled on Saturday Afternoon---German Infantry Attacks Against the French Trenches Were Completely Checked---Severe Fighting in the Argonne Region.

CAPTURED A CRATER

LONDON, June 12.—The chief centre of activity has been in the Ypres district and our trenches north of Ypres were heavily shelled from one to three o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Also the artillery has been active against our position west of Hooge throughout the day. We sprang several mines doing considerable damage to the enemy trenches, which was followed by hostile aeroplanes dropping bombs ineffectively on our trenches.

PENETRATED ADVANCED TRENCHES.

PARIS, June 12.—Official statement yesterday says: German infantry attacks against the French trenches on Hill 304 and positions east of that elevation in the Verdun sector, were completely checked by French troops.

Two German detachments penetrated the French advanced trenches in the forest of Apremont southeast of St. Mihiel, but were later ejected.

FIGHTING IN THE ARGONNE.

PARIS, June 12.—Severe fighting in the Argonne is reported. The statement says: We took a single crater 80 metres in diametre, the edge of which we occupied on three sides.

On the front north of Verdun there is intense artillery fighting on the banks of the Meuse. Two assaults on Hill 304, and another east of the hill were completely checked.

Lord Kitchener Was An Admirer of the Elizabethan Period

NEW YORK, June 9.—The manner in which Lord Kitchener spent the few hours of relaxation which he allowed himself and the few forms of pleasure which he followed were told by Mr. Charles J. Duveen, who, as Charles of London, has an antique and furnishing shop at No. 718 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Duveen also maintains an establishment at No. 25 Brook street London, and it was there four years ago that he formed an acquaintance with the famous English Cabinet officer.

"Lord Kitchener was a great admirer of the Elizabethan period," said Mr. Duveen last night, "and he formed the habit of coming to my shop and rummaging through the warehouses, picking up here and there a piece of bric-a-brac or an old mantelpiece or some other article of the Elizabethan age which struck his fancy.

"He was busy for a long time building and furnishing a country home at Broome Park and he was determined that everything in it should be of the Elizabethan period. The house was his hobby, and whenever he had a few hours to spare from his duties he would either confer with his architect, of whom he was very fond, or go around informally into shops looking for Elizabethan furniture.

"I remember the night that the news was announced that Bulgaria had joined forces with the German nations. I happened to be in London at the time and was surprised that night to see Lord Kitchener come in to my shop and begin his usual procedure of examining furnishings.

"'I should think that foreign matters would make you worry too much to-night to chose furnishings,' I said to him.

"'No, I come here for relaxation from such things,' he replied, and went ahead with his investigations as if nothing in the world had happened."

The acquaintance formed through commercial relations between Mr Duveen and Lord Kitchener later ripened into a form of friendship and the great English statesman showed his liking by performing several services for Mr. Duveen, among them being the obtaining of the appointment of his brother, Mr. Ernest Duveen, to the Royal Flying Corps.

When Mr. Duveen was leaving London a few months ago for America, Lord Kitchener wrote him that he wished to tell him goodby. Unable at the last hour to do so, however, he sent his private secretary with an autographed portrait of himself. This portrait is one of the prized possessions of Mr Duveen.

"Lord Kitchener was a most democratic man" said Mr. Duveen. He was living in London at York House the home of the Prince of Wales which had been loaned to him through the courtesy of the Crown. However, when he went out it was always as an ordinary person would walk about. Ther was very little formality to him, although he was difficult to get well acquainted with. His tastes were very simple and there was nothing autocratic about him.

"His face was one, however, that could never be forgotten. When he talked to you he looked straight at you and you became conscious of the magnetism which caused a nation to idolize and follow him. His servants were all extraordinarily fond of him, and, perhaps because he never married and had no family, always treated him with a deference and respect which contained something of personal liking and deep regard."

In response to many telephonic inquiries for a word from General Leonard Wood about the death of Lord Kitchener, the General, upon his return to New York last night, gave out the following statement:

"The death of a man like Lord Kitchener would be a great loss to any nation. He proved himself a man of the highest type and quality in many fields of endeavour, embodying both the solution of military and administrative problems. I knew him personally, but rather slightly. I am, however, familiar with the records of his accomplishments and consider him one of the great men of his day."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

MEDIEVAL JUSTICE

By ETHEL HOLMES

In the year of our Lord 1370 in the town of Strasburg a man who had for a long while been thinking of the division of time into hours constructed one of the first clocks that was ever made. What led him to do this was that while the people could keep the flight of days by cutting a notch on a stick for every day, they could have no record of the parts of days except by the sun.

This man who invented the clock—his name is lost, so we will call him Gustav—set it up in the tower of the church, and the people could go to bed and get up by its striking the hour. Some of them considered him an angel who had been sent from heaven for this very purpose. Straightway they committed to his care the town calendar, throwing away the notched sticks, and after that it was only he who could tell them when anything that had been appointed for a certain day was due.

One day a young man—Martin Steiger—went to Gustav and said to him:

"Gustav, I love Katrina, the daughter of Frau Tinkhorner, and Katrina loves me. But her mother is forcing her to marry old Carl Oberman, who is rich or supposed to be. I happen to know a man from whom Oberman stole a valuable jewel. This man's name is Kneift, and he has since been looking all through Germany for the man who robbed him. Kneift is now in Munich. If I go there I can tell him where Oberman is; he will come here; it will be known that Oberman is a thief and Katrina will be saved from marrying him."

"Well, then, why do you not go at once?"

"Katrina in order to gain time has promised her mother that she will marry Oberman in seven days from to-day, binding herself before the judge to do so. I cannot go to Munich and find Kneift and bring him back here before the day set for the wedding. Can you not so disarrange the calendar so that a few days shall be gained?"

"But the people trust me implicitly in the matter of the flight of time."

"What difference will a few days make to them?"

Gustav, who was a good fellow, was persuaded and told Steiger that he would do what he could for him, and Steiger set out for Munich to find Kneift and inform him concerning Oberman's present residence. While Martin was gone the clock became very irregular. One morning it called the people from their beds before the sun was up and the next struck the hour for their rising when it was high in the heavens. Gustav said that he feared the clock was bewitched.

Meanwhile Frau Tinkhorner was keeping the passage of the days on her own account by cutting a notch on a stick for every day that passed. The day before the one set for the wedding she informed her daughter that she must be married the next day. Katrina declared that the time had not yet passed within three days and refused to comply, whereupon her mother summoned her before the judge, submitting to him the agreement between them and bringing with her the notched stick to show that the time would be up on the morrow. The judge looked at it and counted the notches, but the evidence of one interested in the case keeping the record did not coincide with his great judicial ideas, and he sent for Gustav.

"Gustav," he said, "what day of the month will tomorrow be?"

"The 12th, your honor."

"But Frau Tinkhorner says she has kept a record and tomorrow will be the 14th."

"My record by the clock tallies with that," replied Gustav, "but the clock has recently been bewitched and has lost two days."

"Who has bewitched it?"

Gustav approached the judge and whispered something in his ear.

"What is your age, Frau Tinkhorner?" asked the judge.

"I am forty-eight."

The judge started. "Are you sure?" he asked.

"Yes, your honor; I am just forty-eight."

The judge dismissed the matter before him and ordered Frau Tinkhorner into custody on a charge of having bewitched the town clock. Gustav had whispered to him that the clock having gained exactly forty-eight hours, this indicated that the person who had bewitched it was forty-eight years old. When Frau Tinkhorner admitted that she was that age it was evident she had bewitched the clock in order to force her daughter to marry old Oberman ahead of time.

So Frau Tinkhorner was thrown into prison. Two days later Martin Steiger returned from Munich with Kneift, who went before the judge and accused Oberman of having stolen a jewel from him. Oberman was arrested and the jewel found in his effects.

But there was nothing to prove that the jewel belonged to Kneift or that Oberman had stolen it.

The learned judge summed up the case thus: It was plain that the frau had bewitched the clock for the purpose of forcing Katrina to wed Oberman. She was sentenced to be burned at the stake, and Oberman was sentenced to be beheaded.

But Martin and Katrina, having attained their ends, got up a petition to the judge for pardons, and, as he granted them, justice was defeated.

"AND I HAVE GONE UPON MY WAY."

Dublin, May 9. — The following poem was written by rebel leader P. H. Pearse on the eve of execution:

The Wayfarer.

The beauty of this world hath made me sad,
This beauty that will pass;
Sometimes my heart hath shaken with great joy
To see a leaping squirrel in a tree,
Or a red ladybird upon a stalk,
Or little rabits in a field at evening
Lit by a starring sun,
Or some green hill where shadows drifting by
Some quietude where mountainy men had sown,
And some would reap near to the gate of heaven
Our children with bare feet upon the sands of some ebbed sea.
Or playing on the streets of little towns in Connaught,
Things young and happy;
And then my heart hath told me
These will pass,
Will pass and change, will die and be no more;
Things bright and green, things young and happy,
And I have gone upon my way
—Sorrowful.

BOLT STRIKES CHURCH.

Collingwood, June 8.—During the thunderstorm which passed over this section about nine o'clock on Monday night lightning struck Christ Church at the Batteau, about three miles from here, partly destroying the building. The bolt entered through the belfry, and ran down the west wall, setting fire to the main floor. Fortunately some of the congregation who had attended the evening service, which had been dismissed about ten minutes before, were only a short distance away from the building when the flames were noticed and returning succeeded in extinguishing the fire before much damage was done. The wall down which the fluid passed was badly cracked while practically every pane of glass in the building was broken.

IMPRESSIONS IN FRENCH HOSPITAL

The big bell of the hospital clanged three times. In happier days it has summoned children to school, but now heralded the approach of the ambulances and warned us to be ready, says a writer in the London Daily Chronicle.

A few moments more, and the orderlies are placing the stretchers in a long line down the middle of the ward. A white-coated doctor enters, examines the label tied in each man's buttonhole, asks a few brief questions, and goes to the next ward. We work away busily, remove soil-stained clothing and blood-stained bandages, and soon what a transformation! It is difficult to believe that these clean, cheerful patients are the same blue-coated and mud-caked men who were brought to us less than one short hour ago!

Looks of Content.

Some of them are enjoying a second basin of steaming soup, others puff away contentedly at the ubiquitous cigarette. Here is one watching while the contents of his pockets are turned out by an orderly, before the clothes are taken away to be cleaned and disinfected; another is asking how soon I shall have time to write to his wife. "As soon as the doctor has seen you all, and we get you comfortably bandaged," and he settles down in bed with a sigh of satisfaction. There are some who lie with closed eyes and pain-drawn brows; but in most cases the pathetic look of endurance on each face has given way to one of content. The weeks of untiring watching in the trenches, the sharp engagement, the long, painful journey to hospital, even the pain of the wound, all are forgotten in the enjoyment of long-denied comforts and pleasant and peaceful surroundings.

How patient they all are, even those who are most maimed! They never complain, and are so grateful for anything one does for them.

Sees German Patient.

It is visiting day, and a French lady comes into the ward, leading by the hand a little boy. His father belongs to the famous Vingtieme Corps, now known as "the regiment that saved Verdun." The child has heard someone say that one patient in this ward is a German, and asking in a whisper which it is, he trots up to the bed. Standing on tiptoe, he gently strokes the rough face. "You won't try to hurt my daddy any more now, will you?" he says, in a coaxing voice. "Say you will not be wicked any more." The man, who is evidently in pain, opens his eyes and smiles. He does not understand the language, but the action is eloquent, and, taking the child's hand, he presses it to his lips, while a far-away look comes into his eyes. "My own little boy—just the same age," he says; and his eyes close again.

German Delivered Letter.

There is silence for a moment, then "They are not all bad, even Germans," says a sergeant in the next bed. "I remember before this last attack, we'd been in the same trenches for weeks, and at last we got to feel quite friendly to the chaps in the trenches opposite. In the evenings, when the firing had ceased, we would throw cigarettes over to each other, and sometimes we'd even have a friendly chat. There was one fellow in our company whose home was in the invaded territory, so he was very anxious about his wife, and knew that she, too, would be worrying for news of him. So one day he wrote a letter to her, and addressed it, and that evening, when he heard the Saxon's friendly whistle, he called out and asked them if they knew the village he named. One of them did and promised to deliver the note when they returned from the trench to camp. As it happened, on the way he got wounded, and one of the first things he thought of when he was picked up was to ask one of his comrades to redeem his promise for him. So the wife got the letter all right, and in time was able to send an answer to her husband — that was how we heard the story."

Twenty Year Old Hero.

When I entered the ward to-day there was an unwonted air of excitement, and I was greeted with the news that our "enfant de troupe," a lad of twenty, was "down" for the Military Cross. Presently I persuaded him to tell me the story, and with bovish pride he described how he had led a bombing party into the front trench of the enemy. Then, single-handed, he had captured a mitrailleuse, and turned it with deadly effect upon the foe as they fled panic-stricken before the French onslaught.

It was almost impossible to realize that this seemingly hardened soldier, whose eyes blazed with courage as he re-lived the scene, was the same lad whom I had seen only a day or two before, unnerved with pain, sobbing for his dead mother. "If only she were here to nurse me, I think I could bear it better," he had whispered, and I instinctively felt that it was the spirit of that mother which had inspired her son to dare and do so nobly.

Unsightly Pimples
Covered His Face.

All diseases and blemishes of the skin are caused by the blood being in an impure condition.

You cannot make a good complexion from the outside; you must get to the root of the trouble. You must make the blood pure and rich by taking a medicine that will drive out all the impurities and poisons from the blood; one that drives out everything from the system that is the cause of these unsightly skin eruptions.

The best blood cleansing medicine on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters; a medicine that has been used with the greatest success for the past forty years; a medicine you don't experiment with when you buy it.

Mr. Lennox D. Cooke, Indian Path, N.B., writes: "I am writing you a few lines to tell you what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. Last winter my face was covered with pimples. I tried different kinds of medicine, and all seemed to fail. I was one day to a friend's house, and there they advised me to use B.B.B., so I purchased two bottles, and before I had them taken I found I was getting better. I got two more, and when they were finished I was completely cured. I find it is a great blood purifier, and I recommend it to all."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Indigestion Resulted From Bad Case of Inactive Liver

Experience Proved That Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Were Exactly What Was Needed

If every sufferer from indigestion would study his case as did the writer of this letter the great majority would find sluggish action of the liver and bowels to be the cause of trouble.

It is then an easy way to finding a cure, for there is nothing like Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to awaken the action of the liver, kidneys and forming their natural functions the system is thoroughly cleansed of all poisonous waste matter and the process of digestion is no longer impeded.

Mrs. W. L. Jones, Hill Spring, Alta. writes: "I have often thought I would write and tell you how much I appreciate Dr. Chase's medicines, especially Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I suffered terribly from indigestion and did not know what was the cause. I got to using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and was so improved that I began to study the malady. I found that the indigestion resulted from a bad case of inactive liver, and as soon as I get the liver working right, I didn't have any stomach trouble or indigestion, the nervous spells vanished and the 'blues' flew away. I am never sick now, but should the old trouble return, I know how to cure it quickly."

There is a whole host of derangements which disappear when the liver is set right. Biliousness, indigestion, headache, irritability, constipation are a few of the more common results of torpid liver action. By the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you can control all such disorders. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

SOWING AND REAPING SPIRITUAL HARVESTS

Great Majority Sowing Along Natural Lines.

How to the Flesh and Reap Corruption—How to the Spirit and Reap Life Everlasting—How Bountifully and Reap Bountifully—How Sparingly and Reap Sparingly—How Choicest Seed and Reap Richest Grain—What Shall Our Harvest Be?

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Indianapolis, June 11.—Pastor Russell was here to-day and gave a very interesting lecture on the text, "He that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully; but he that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly." (2 Corinthians 9:6.) A condensed report follows:

The speaker showed that reaping invariably corresponds to sowing, not only in kind, but also in quality and in quantity. It is very evident that his view on the application of both text and context differs from that of the majority of even professed Christians. Usually this passage is applied in a general way to everybody; but the Pastor applies it only to Christians—those who have made a full consecration of themselves to God and are begotten of the Holy Spirit—can sow to the Spirit; that only these are now on trial for life or death everlasting. He believes that only a few are sowing seed along spiritual lines and reaping spiritual harvests; and that the great majority are sowing along merely natural lines, whether the seed be good or evil, and will reap accordingly, some a noble and some an ignoble character.

So far has man fallen from the estate in which Adam was created that it may be truly said, as the Apostle declares, "They are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." (Romans 3:10-12.) Instead of being a holy spirit—a holy mind or disposition—the mind of fallen man to-day is largely unholy, perverted, and imperfect. But those who have stepped out from the world, those who have become, through faith in Christ and dedication of themselves to God, children of God, have His Holy Spirit—His mind or disposition; and this they have in proportion as they are living close to God, following in their Master's footsteps.

According to the measure that this latter class "sow to the Spirit" will they reap the character of Christ, the fruitage of the Holy Spirit. The Lord desires His people not only to sow to the Spirit, but to sow bountifully. There is a principle of justice that runs all through the matter. God does not say, "Never mind what you do. I will forgive you and make it all right with you. I know that you are imperfect." No. The principle constantly operates that whoever sows good seed will reap corresponding blessings; but whoever sows evil seed may expect to reap corresponding injury. The merit of Christ covers the Christian's unwitting mistakes when he is doing his best; but it does not make up for negligence, carelessness, or indifference as to the kind of seed he sows. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Inflexible Law of Cause and Effect.

Those new children of God found, before they left the world, that when they lived in accordance with the will of the fallen human nature, the things from which they expected good results and happiness gave poor results and dissatisfaction—that anticipation was much better than realization. They also found that following their own will generally yielded bad fruitage. They had sown wrong thoughts; and these thoughts produced more of the same kind. Then the wrong thoughts brought forth wrong deeds, which in time developed a wrong character. The things which at first were merely optional became fixed characteristics. As somebody has well said, "Sow a thought and reap an act; sow an act and reap a habit; sow a habit and reap a character; sow a character and reap a destiny." To the extent that an unholy character had been developed it must be painstakingly demolished, and a righteous character erected.

In this connection parents should begin with their children, by keeping before their minds from earliest childhood pure, noble, loving thoughts. While it is impossible to make them perfect, yet parents can do much toward shielding their children from the evil in the world. By giving their children a right start in life, parents would be bestowing upon them a legacy for which the children would thank them throughout eternity. If mothers could only know how much they have in their power the moulding of the minds of their children, how careful they would be! How vigilantly they would guard their own mental conditions and attitudes, in order that they might bring into the world children whose dispositions would be noble, upright—children that would be a blessing rather than a curse.

But if vicious passions control, if wrong thoughts are harbored, the child will be born with those evil tendencies; and no matter how hard he may try in after life to develop a noble character, he will have a lifelong battle with the results of improper pre-natal influences. How sad it is that these facts were not set before us long ago!

The fathers also have especial responsibility along this line. Not only should they themselves be noble if they would hope to bring forth noble offspring, but they should see to it that so far as possible the mother should have the proper associations and environment, the proper care and attention. As these things are all taken into consideration in the breeding of fine horses, dogs, etc., of how much more importance is it that our children be given these a noble heritage!

Proper Training of Children.

It is high time that all thinking people agitate this subject, and thus head off as far as possible the propagation of children badly equipped mentally, morally, and physically. We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of proper pre-natal influences in forming the bent of the child's disposition. But parental responsibility does not cease with the birth of the child. Its entire life must be supervised. Here again the mother has her care to see that the child is not unjust in dealing with its playmates—not even with the dog. She must also inculcate cleanliness of body and of mind. If she is careless about these things, the child gets the idea that it does not matter what one does; and thus the liability to do unjustly and to live uncleanly is greatly increased.

Peculiar responsibility along all these lines rests upon Christian parents. As we come to see the principles of God's government, our minds should be filled with thoughts of justice, righteousness, kindness, love. These thoughts should be reflected upon our children; and thus our children would be taught of God. Even though they may not become spirit-begotten children of God, yet all who ever attain unto life everlasting on any plane must have this holy spirit, mind, of the Lord. If a child is not naturally meek. If its pre-natal development was neglected in this respect then it should be taught meekness. It should be shown how unbecoming are rudeness and self-assertion; it should have held up before it the beauty of gentleness and kindness.

If a child is handled properly during the early formative years of its life, it will soon get these good principles fixed in its mind. Meekness, gentleness, patience, long-suffering, kindness, love—these are traits that parents should carefully cultivate in themselves. They are qualities of the Spirit of God which He expects all His children to develop richly in heart and in life. However bad a Christian's habits may have been before he became a child of God, the Heavenly Father expects him to eradicate his undesirable traits of character as rapidly as possible, by Divine grace. He is to dig them up by the roots, as he would pull up noxious weeds from his garden. Then he must plant instead the beautiful and fruitful things. What a beautiful adornment is meekness! How unlovely are arrogance and headiness!

As this beauty of character is manifested in the parent, it will be noticed by the children, who are very quick of discernment, and who generally have a very keen sense of justice and of consistency of example. Sooner or later this beautiy in the parent is sure to bear fruitage in the child, unless its character had become too firmly fixed before the parents realized their responsibility along these lines. Undoubtedly the disrespect of parents so common today and the neglect of parents in their old age are the legitimate fruitage of parental neglect in earlier days. Many parents to-day are reaping the harvest of their own failure to train their children properly in early childhood. In many cases evil seeds have been sown in the child mind instead of good seed; and today the bad fruitage of such sowing is evident. In other cases the seed has been sown far too sparingly; and the reaping has been in proportion.

God's Children Carefully Trained

As the child-life is a training school, so it is with the spirit-begotten children of God. As soon as we enter His family, He puts us to school; and during the remainder of our lives in the flesh we are given a systematic course of training, schooling. As New Creatures, we are in the School of Christ, where we have daily lessons to learn — lessons of meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love, as well as lessons of doctrine. Chronology shows us where we are on the stream of time. Doctrine is the foundation upon which our character structure is to be built. But the most important of all our lessons is that of character-likeness to our great Teacher, Christ Jesus.

St. Peter tells us that this work is accomplished through the "exceeding great and precious promises," given to us that thereby we "might be partakers of the Divine nature." (2 Peter 1:4.) As the children of God feed upon these promises, they work in us to will and to do of God's good pleasure. Thus we become like Christ, who always delighted to do God's will. At first we were willing to do that will, but now we are striving TO DO. And this is right; for it is just what the promises are designed to do in us.

This School of Christ was opened at our Lord's First Advent. During His early ministry, about five hundred pupils were enrolled. At Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was first given in begetting power, many more entered this school and came under the instruction of the Master Teacher. At first the pupils were of the Jews only; but a little later the door of favor was opened to the Gentiles also. Then all who would meet the conditions of discipleship were invited to enter this school.

The terms of discipleship are very definite and rigid. To be a disciple of Christ one must entirely surrender his will to God, and then take up his cross and follow Jesus, henceforth to have no will of his own, but to strive day by day to copy Christ. (Matthew 16:24.) This class shall, if faithful to the end of their course, reap the legitimate reward of their careful sowing to the Spirit—full character-likeness to Christ Jesus our Lord; and this will bring them joint-heirship with Him in His Messianic Kingdom.

Training for the Priesthood.

Whoever desires to hold on to his own will can have no part nor lot with Christ now. He cannot enter the family of God at all. Before we shall be accepted of God, we must give up everything that we have. Thenceforth we are to live, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Thus the New Creature will grow stronger day by day, while the flesh—that is, the fleshly nature—will grow weaker. As long as we are in this mortal body we shall have a struggle with the flesh; but through the strength of the Lord we may win a glorious victory and in due time receive a new spiritual body, like that of our glorified Lord.

This class are the ones who are to rule the world during the incoming Age. No others will be fit to rule the world. But before this class can be qualified for such a position, they must first learn to submit themselves fully to God, must have fixed characters for righteousness. No one could make a competent ruler of others until he had learned to bow to lawful authority, until he had first learned to govern himself.

The pupils whom the great Teacher is now training are to be Priests of the incoming Age. The priests of old taught the people and healed the sick. This typified what the Royal Priesthood will do in the future, when empowered by the First Resurrection change. (Revelation 20: 4, 6.) "Sown an animal body," they will be "raised a spiritual body." It will be a grand class that God will have. Our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Head of the Church, will be there. St. Peter, St. John, St. James St. Paul, and the other Apostles, as well as all the faithful saints of this Gospel Age, will be with Him. A glorious company it will be.

Some of this company, however, did not always do right before their transformation into the likeness of our Lord and Head. Sometimes they manifested a gross spirit. But afterwards they became well developed in meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love. When all of them shall have been perfected and receive their spirit bodies, all their earthly imperfections, some of which they were never able to overcome fully, will be forgotten. Perhaps they will shine all the brighter because of what they once were and what they overcame.

Christian Responsibility.

It is well for us to remember, as Christians, that the responsibility of our character development rests with us personally. God does not do the sowing. We are doing this; and we are to do the reaping. God supplies the seed, and tells us how to sow it; but He does not do the sowing for us. Whoever is not following the Master's instructions is not making himself ready for the Kingdom. How sorry we shall be in the future, if we find that we have been giving time and attention to worldly business or pleasure or any other thing to the neglect of the development of character necessary for joint-heirship with Christ, and thus miss our share in the Kingdom glories!

God expects each Christian to have the greatest concern as to his personal character development. Important as it is to assist others in the same narrow way, the building up of his own character is paramount. Each has an individual work in himself that no one else can do. That work God leaves to the individual. He desires each of His children to possess character; and each develops it according as he cultivates those traits which make it. Therefore let us do our very best.

The World's Sowing and Reaping.

As it is true of the Church in the present time that we shall reap what we sow, and that the average manifested in the sowing shall determine the size of the crop, so it will be with the world in the next Age. The deeds that they do in this life, and the character that they develop, will determine their status when they enter the next Age. The bad marks now made upon their character will remain with them until erased, by a process of discipline and development, in the resurrection time.

For instance, the Emperor Nero was probably the meanest man who ever lived. The man who set fire to he city of Rome that he might enjoy a great conflagration, who then blamed the Christians for the deed, who caused them to be covered with oil and burned as torches, and who finally murdered his mother—such a man was very deeply degraded. The measure of his responsibility we are unable to estimate. We leave the decision to the Lord. But he surely sowed lavishly to his depraved flesh, and correspondingly reaped an abundant crop of evil.

We sympathize with poor Nero and all others who were born predisposed to evil. We are glad that our gracious God has an arrangement whereby these unfortunates may have the opportunity under most favorable conditions to uproot the noxious weeds of sin which they have cultivated during this life. What a time they will have in accomplishing this work. As they do so, the shame and contempt will decrease; and by the time that any of them has regained the lost image of God his shame and contempt will all be gone. But those who will not return to harmony with God under these favorable conditions will abide in shame and contempt — will die the Second Death. Having had his opportunity to the full measure of the blessings accruing from the death and the reign of Christ, he will be cut off as a brute beast.—2 Peter 2:12.

IN DREAD OF CROUP.

Every mother dreads croup unless she knows about Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Given in frequent small doses at the first indication of trouble, this treatment loosens the cough and affords relief and comfort. Its use should be kept up until the child is entirely recovered.

THE GLEANER.

By Herbert Kauffman.

Three o'clock—the empty owl car rumbles by— the last taxi lurches north with its mandlin freight— the watchman rounds the block and settles himself comfortably in the drug-store doorway—the younger women have straggled home—now the Gleaner comes forth.

In all the city there is no quest for bread so cruel—no work so mean and pitiless. In this unlighted hour, there may be one who will not see how hard the vengeful years have ridden her frail form.

Once she, too, had a chance. She could have been a housemaid, a shop girl, even a wife. But she was too "proud" to enter service, and vanity led to her and spun a web of delusions about her vapid little mind.

She wanted pretty things that poor men couldn't afford. She couldn't wait. She took the easiest way, and thought it was the shortest cut. There was no money in her purse, so she made one out of her soul, and now that, too, is empty—except for the scars with which it is filled and the bruises which crowd it.

She went to five among the red, red roses—but when she gathered them into her arms, they were bundles of thorns and filled her blood with poisons. Then she understood what her mother's mother knew when proud young Rome first sat down on the hills. She would not listen, and now the bog has smeared her and the night has taken her for a sensation.

They never do heed—her sort. And when they learn they have no voices to carry back a warning message to the little sisters who dare a-new the painted mires.

There she walks—alone in the black rains—the heaviest burden-bearer of all—the sob that was a woman—the last chapter in the oldest story—the Gleaner in the Shadows.

Afflicted with Lame Back

THREE YEARS AGO

COULD NOT SWEEP THE FLOOR.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer so much excruciating pain and agony are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

The kidneys are overtaxed—given more work than they can do, and when the back aches and pains it is hard for a woman to look after her household duties, for no woman can be strong and well when the kidneys are out of order.

On the first sign of any weakness in the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go right to the seat of the trouble, cure the weak, aching back, and prevent any serious kidney trouble liable to follow.

Mrs. L. Goudshaw, 663 Manning Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not even sweep the floor. I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills, and before I had used one box there was a great improvement, and my back was completely cured. I highly recommend 'Doan's' for lame back."

Every Man admires a workmanlike job

And that is why any man who is thinking of installing a heating system should examine the Sunshine Furnace. It is a piece of work he will take to.

Every part is well thought out. The sections are carefully made. The whole is substantially and accurately put together.

And there is a sound reason for every feature. Take the shape of the fire-pot as an example. The straight walls allow the ashes to fall instead of lodging against the sides where they would interfere with the free passage of heat from the burning coal.

See the large double tight-fitting doors. Notice how easily the dampers are controlled. Not much trouble to shut off the fire and hold the heat with this furnace. See how dust is directed up the chimney whenever the fire is shaken down. Note the large radiating surfaces and wide passages for heating the air.

It was a man who knew his job that designed

McClary's Sunshine Furnace

If you wish to know what it will cost to place this fine furnace in your home, write us about it. Our Heating Engineer will send you full information. He will show you how to arrange the distribution of heat so as to get the most out of it. There is no charge; no obligation to buy a Sunshine Furnace. And if you would like a copy of our booklet "Sunshine" enclose the coupon with your letter.

SEES PLAN TO MAKE ALLIES QUIT GREECE

(By Dr. E. J. Dillon)

PARIS, June 8.—The cession of Fort Rupel by the Greek Government to Bulgaria and the subsequent advance of King Ferdinand's troops into Greek Macedonia reveal the real intentions of those who are now swaying the destinies of the Hellenic people.

Information from a trustworthy Athenian source reveals that the first object of the Bulgaro-Germans and their abettors in Greece is to oust the Allies from Saloniki. The court and the military party are resolved to persist in their attitude of underhand opposition to France and Britain, for they believe in the invincibility of the Teutons and are ready to help the Teutons justify that belief.

Rectifying His Mistake.

In the Buchan district of Aberdeenshire, at a catechising, there was a character by name Jock. The parish minister put the question to him, "What was the devil before he fell?" Someone whispered in Jock's ear, "An angel of light." Jock, being rather dull in hearing, did not hear what he said, but shouted, "An elder o' the Kirk," and seeing he had made a mistake, he thought he would rectify it, and followed up with, "Ay, but the Free Kirk, though."

King Hot Water Boiler.
Get the Best! Look around and examine other Hot Water Boilers, all you like. The more of them you see, and really understand, the more you will be convinced that the King Hot Water Boiler has the best points. Take the "water-way" for example. In the King Boiler, there is about half the quantity of water and it heats twice as quick and circulates twice as fast. This heats the house in a much shorter time. The "water-way" also gets better contact with the fire by means of genuine corrugated fire pot and staggered water sections. In the King Boiler, the doors fit practically air tight, enabling accurate control of drafts. There is a double shaker, which is operated on either side by a person standing upright. The King Boiler actually does save fuel and save money. It heats a house quicker, steadier (and hotter if desired) than same number cubic feet of air can be heated by same radiator specifications with any other Boiler or radiator. "Get the Best"—means get a King. Ask your Architect or Sanitary Engineer—he knows and approves the King Boiler.
King Radiators
To get full advantage of the Boiler, the Radiators also must be right. The King Radiators are made on a certain principle which makes them doubly capable of giving heat. They fit any shape or size of space required and never leak. You should insist on King Radiators. We will give estimates of cost if desired.

Band in the Hanging Basket Runs Republican Convention

By George Martin.

Coliseum, Chicago, June 9.—It's the band in the hanging garden up on the wall at the far end of the hall that's really running this Republican convention.

There can be no delegate so obstreperous, no burst of applause so thunderous, no hullabaloo so hullaballoolious but it can be ta-ra-rahoomde-ay-ed out of existence by one burst of oomph-ta-tas from Professor Wm. Weil and his wily wind-jamming wonders.

Professor Weil, a most gorgeous man in white duck and 1d medals, with a mop of iron grey hair that he flops tellingly in either 4—4, or 6—8 time, has a phone at his eloquent elbow, the other end of which (meaning the phone not the elbow) rests upon the chairman's platform miles away down in the middle of the National committee.

The president of the band, which is leased, owned, operated and controlled by the people of Chicago has a name that sounds like the interlude to a ragtime onestep, Colonel William Nelson Polowno, America — Meet Colonel Polowno! In addition to presidenting the band he bosses all the convention ushers and he also assistant grand marshalled the Chicago preparedness parade. Colonel Polowno—America!

Now the way this band runs the convention is this:

Professor Weil, who is a frenzied director, can make the catapulting Creatore bite holes in his baton for envy, gets a telephone tip from the chairman as to what he wants done to the convention; then he and his band boys do it. The formula is something like this:

Squelching a meeting delegate — Washington Post march, heavy on the drums and basses, fortissimo throughout.

Pacify a peeved contingent that has just been steamy liered—a dreamy waltz, piano. Nachtman doing light gymnastics on the slip horn.

Put tremulo stops before and after touching appeal for harmony—shivery music with piccolo obligato by Fontaine Cavone.

These are a few of many ways the band runs things. Vollmer, who is twice as fat as his tuba, and Koler, whose voice booms like his own bass drum, aided and abetted by Buck Ewing's corps of clarineters, Kayser's bassoon and Ailner's oboe, can silence the entire Republican party, with the Progressives and women thrown in.

"You can't make me believe a college education gits you anything," said the young man who had won two medals for fox-trotting. "Still I always thought college fellows was awful swell." replied the girl. "Nothin' doin' We got one of them in our office that always says 'whom' and 'notwithstandin', and say, I heard the boss callin' him down to-day the worst I ever seen. What's the use knowin' then kind of words if you can't talk back?"—"Judge".

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S NEGLIGEE.

By Anabel Worthington.

Because we insist upon comfort more than we did in a previous day, and as well because we appreciate the propriety of dressing opportunely, the negligee forcefully attracts every woman to-day. How tempting this one, No. 7,791, is, with the most salient of the season's features—the deep cape collar—and in contrasting note with lace or edging for a finish; this trimming is repeated on the sleeve. An elastic band at the waistline brings the fulness into folds and a rippled fall to the skirt portion in full length. If preferred, the dressing sacque style—short length—may be substituted.

This pattern may be had in sizes 36, 40 and 44 bust measure. For a duplicate of the design in size 36 you will need 5¼ yards of 36 inch material with ⅝ yard goods for collar. In all one material, full length, 5⅝ yards will be necessary or 3¼ yards for the dressing sacque.

To obtain the pattern, send 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

Price 10 cents, or 3 for 25 cents.

QUEER TALES COME FROM WEST VIRGINIA

Unexpected Events Follow Each Other in Panhandle State in Bewildering Fashion.

When it comes to happenings of the unexpected the little State of West Virginia, says the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph, is in a class by itself. Fifteen or more years ago, as persons with good memories will remember, that section of the United States was dampened by a black rain, the phenomenon passing into history as an "inkfall," and ever since that time strange events have followed each other in bewildering succession.

Several days ago it was the discovery and destruction of a blacksnake measuring twenty-five feet in length, notwithstanding the declarations of experts that a six foot blacksnake is the limit, and now comes the story of an event that is fully as extraordinary.

Now, while breaking out of jail is an occasional happening, and therefore not surprising, it is a matter of astonishment when a man, or men, break into jail, but that was what was done at Tunnelton, W. Va., when at least two burglars put themselves behind prison bars temporarily. Their object? Well, as all persons who keep posted on the news are aware, West Virginia is a "dry" State, and the prohibition law is so vigorously and rigorously enforced that getting intoxicants into the State is much like driving a camel through the eye of a needle.

Now and then some miscreant tries to "put one over" on the authorities, with the result that his stock of "booze" is confiscated and locked up in the nearest jail. That was the lure at Tunnelton, for these most unusual burglars knew what was in the jail and determined upon desperate measures to acquire it, which they did, carrying away sixty pints of whiskey as vile as any that ever staggered along a country turnpike. Sixty pints! Enough to put a whole village on the warpath. And it is likely that more than two men wer implicated in this astonishing burglary, for generally a bottle containing one quart is considered a sufficient burden for any lover of intoxicants. So look out for more snake stories from West Virginia.

PANAMA CHURCHES WITHSTAND TIME

The destruction of old Panama by Morgan, the buccaneer, in 1617 writes C. P. Kimball in the Architectural Record, was so complete that the Spanish Crown ordered the new city to be built five miles up the coast.

As wood had proved such a factor in the destruction of the older city by fire, it was ordered that all buildings in the new city should be of stone or brick. Thus we find the Cathedral and other city churches with massive walls of brick and stone, the exterior surface being plastered with cement. The roofs were covered with tiles which through the centuries have accumulated moss and plant growth.

The Cathedral was of course the principal building of the city. Of a typical Spanish architecture of the time, it stands a monument to the faithful work of the old Spanish artists and artisans. Educated in the mother country, these masters in art have left their imprint on the old monument to Catholicism throughout the former Spanish South American colonies, from Mexico and the Isthmus on the north to the extreme southern portion of the American continent.

The facade of the Cathedral between the two flanking towers, was faced with stone of a bluish gray color the rest of the walls being of stone and brick with plastered surfaces. The various niches contain carved figures of wood.

The two belfry towers have spires whose surface slopes are studded with clam shells set into the cement in geometrical patterns, which glisten brightly in the bright tropical sunshine.

Old Santo Domingo Church, built entirely of brick, has long been a ruin, only the walls and arches remaining. A few years ago when the site was covered for an apartment building, the old flat arch was saved for sentimental reasons and with the front wall still stands.

This old arch with a span of thirty-seven feet and a rise of seven feet nine inches, built of brick and cement, stands as a tribute to the skill of the old Spanish artisans of the seventeenth century. The story of its construction is told in the Isthmus as follows:—It had been twice built only to collapse the third time the forms were removed the architect took a position directly beneath it, calling on God to crown his work with success, and the arch stood.

SPECULATION RUNS RIOT IN DETROIT

Detroit is beginning to pay the penalty of prosperity. The thousands attracted by the boom, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, have exhausted the housing accommodations, and the scarcity of labour for the construction of new buildings has accentuated the situation. Rents have been raised to the roof and raised again.

And now a spendthrift city government, having carried the tax levy as high as it dared, has turned to inflating valuations to get more money. The assessments just announced are said to be thirty per cent. higher than last year, a total increase in the taxable valuation in one year of more than $170,000,000. Practically nothing has been allowed to escape. Downtown business sites are reported by a tax expert to be assessed at a higher figure than any other property in the world. Residences, large and small, have been boosted in valuation far beyond similar valuations in any other city of the size.

STRICKEN IN THE STREET

Completely Restored To Health By "Fruit-a-tives"

382 St. Valier St., Montreal.

"In 1912, I was taken suddenly ill with Acute Stomach Trouble and dropped in the street. I was treated by several physicians for nearly two years, and my weight dropped from 225 pounds to 160 pounds. Then several of my friends advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives". I began to improve almost with the first dose, and by using them, I recovered from the distressing Stomach Trouble—and all pain and Constipation were cured. Now I weigh 208 pounds. I cannot praise "Fruit-a-tives" enough". H. WHITMAN.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

A frenzy for real estate speculation has swept the town. People are paying fancy prices for property as a speculation that they would never dream of giving for places for their own homes or business premises. Warnings that there is a maximum real value, the value to the occupier, have gone unheeded. People are not thinking of buying homes, one Detroit paper says, they are going wild on speculation and living in rented quarters. And the city administration, with that thirty per cent. increase in taxable property to levy on, has graciously reduced the tax millage from more than 23.5 mills to 18.5 with the net result that the total amount raised by taxation has been boosted to more than $13,500,000 annually.

Los Angeles had such a boom once and is now recovering from the effects. Other cities that have been through the mill know also by sad experience what it is to pay the price of premature prosperity. Fictitious values and all too real taxes levied upon them have reacted with disastrous effect. It is better not to travel too fast and then when forced to halt for breath be overtaken and passed by steadier-gaited and surer-footed competitors.

Women and Courage

The men of a nation seldom will rise much above the standard of courage and unselfishness set for them by the women of the nation. Spartan soldiers did not leave Lesbian wives and mothers behind them, and Roman republican legionaries did not march out with their women running after them weeping and imploring them to remain at home.

If the women of the nation are weak, selfish, and timid, the men will reflect feminine attributes. A comfortable housekeepr objects violently enough to being taken from safe pursuits and easy circumstances. His conscience might command him, but the women of his household emphasize the characteristics from which he is trying to escape he is likely to accept ignominy and avoid danger.

A noble minded womanhood can make a courageous manhood not only possible but anything else than a courageous manhood utterly impossible. It is an unusual craven who can withstand the scorn of a woman's contempt for his lack of courage. The instinct of the male is to be esteemed brave by the female. It hardly matters how many generations of soft living have tended to break down the courageous impulses and hard muscles, the scorn of a woman will revive determination to be a man in a man's part.

If women reconcile themselves to soft living and cowardice, to selfishness and timidity, they will make the men in character what they want them to be in condition. The character is not handsome even if the condition be comfortable.

A nation of good men is a nation of courageous women. It is that or it is a nation of unconsidered women. Women either are relected from the scheme of the nation for other than breeding purpose, or, being respected as thinking, influential part of it, they affect its character.

It is possible for male children to be born in the harem and have manly attributes when they are grown regardless of feminine influence. That is because the man takes the boy's training in hand and disregards the woman. What she thinks or is becomes of no consequence. In a rightly ordered nation the woman will set the standard of behavior. She will give either courage or cowardice.—Chicago Tribune.

THE PATH OF MAY.

I went with May along the track
That she had made her own:
Her bloom-white banners floated back
With young winds overblown.
Low violets gave their purple light,
Spring waters rushed and sang,
And straight dark trunks in grave delight,
Through gold-green shadow sprang.

I followed May along the way
Where all her joys are strewn.
And heard, in all her voices gay,
Her hail to royal June;
My soul took breath, and slipped the load
Of earth's long strife and pain;
My feet were light upon that road,
My songs awoke like rain.
So life has traveled with the Spring
Through all the hoary years;
Not once has love forgot to sing
And smile through April tears;
And there shall come one final May,
When rest is long and deep.
When joy may find her own lost way,
And old despairs may sleep!

Two entire divisions with all their generals, artillery and ammunition, were captured. Russians are in full pursuit, the Cossacks over-running the territory at the rear of the fleeing armies on a hundred-mile front.

Italian Armies Are Now on the Offensive

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, June 12.—The Italian armies to-day took the offensive all along the Trentino front, making general advances. This movement, it is understood, is to be a powerful attack, timed simultaneously with the Russian offensive and the reported withdrawal of Austrian troops from the Trentino.

Russians Advance Toward Diarbekr

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, June 12.—Yesterday's official statement says:

'Caucasus region—The Turks made repeated attacks on our positions in the Plantana region, but were repulsed with heavy losses, abandoning in front of our trenches hundreds of dead. In the direction of Gumashan we have occupied first-line enemy trenches. In the direction of Diarbekr we are advancing and have made prisoners and captured boxes of ammunition."

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 12.—The following official communication was issued yesterday:

"After a battle at Khanikin (on the Persian frontier northeast of Bagdad), which resulted in the defeat and retreat of the Russians, our forces pursued the enemy, drove back strong Cossack detachments and entered Kasr-i-Shirin."

Cruiser Hampshire Was Mined

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, June 12.—The following statement was issued by the Admiralty:

"Admiral Jellicoe states that the cruiser Hampshire was mined. The vessel was accompanied by two destroyers until the Hampshire was compelled to detach them, on account of the heavy seas, an hour before the explosion. Survivors say the Hampshire sank in ten minutes.

"Destroyers and patrol vessels hurried to the scene. Search parties were sent in motor cars along the coast. Four boats were seen to leave the ship. Admiral Jellicoe concludes that all were wrecked on the lee shore. Twelve survivors landed from a raft. All hope has been abandoned for the others."

Crown Prince Honours Defender

Examiner Special:

LONDON, June 12.—A Central News despatch from Amsterdam says that Major Raynal, who was in command of the French troops which defended Fort Vaux, on the Verdun front, when it was cut off by the Germans and finally compelled to surrender, has arrived at Mains, Germany, a prisoner of war. He was permitted by the German Crown Prince to retain his sword.

GERMAN ATTACKS ARE COMPLETELY REPULSED

Special to the Examiner:

PARIS (French Official Communique), June 12.—Repeated and violent German attacks directed at the trenches west of Vaux were completely repulsed, said the French War Office statement to-day.

An artillery struggle, of the utmost violence, is in progress on the Souvilee and Tavennes sectors.

West of Soissons the French artillery destroyed German works, one shell causing an explosion within the German lines, apparently having struck an ammunition depot.

Officer Casualties Now Number 295

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 12.—The number of Canadian officers reported as killed and wounded since the battle of last week at Sanctuary Woods of the Ypres salient is now 295. That fighting is continuing is indicated by the fact that Lieut. H. Rothwell Page, of Winnipeg, was killed on Saturday, and Lieut. H. M. Wilson, of Toronto, on Friday. To-day's list includes three killed and twelve wounded. In four cases the wounds are described as shell shock. The majority of the officers figuring in to-day's list largely belong to Northern Ontario and Western Canada.

Premier Will Act As Minister of Militia

OTTAWA, Ont., June 12.—During the absence of General Hughes in the Maritime Provinces Sir Robert Borden will be acting minister. It is stated that Sir Sam will visit the west when he returns, and nothing definite has yet been heard as to the date of his return to England. Considerable interest in the meantime centres round the Minister's visit to the Maritime Provinces. There is an election on in Nova Scotia and the soldiers are voting there.

STRATEGY OF ENEMY FAILS

Germany Unable to Dictate Trend of Operations in Accordance With Its Own Plans—Failed to Induce a Premature Offensive in West

NOW RUSSIANS ARE COMING

(Special cable by W. A. Willison to the Examiner)

(BY W. A. WILLISON.)

LONDON, June 12.—The development of the military situation during the past four months calls for recapitulation of the cardinal factors which your correspondent has consistently regarded as salient considerations. In analyzing the strategical situation last February I laid emphasis upon the fact that the solution of the military proposition depended on the problem of an effective siege of the central empires, the problem of the possibility of a premature decision on the western front and the problem if coordinating the strategy of the allies, to offset the advantage of the interior lines of communication possessed by the central empires.

Subsequent events have only served to make these factors more prominent and more inter-dependent. Indeed, it is an excellent sign of the trend of policy that now it is impossible to discuss any one of these factors without reference to the other. The best demonstration of this is found in a brief survey of events. Through somewhat of a habit of strategic thought, induced by his consistent superiority in numbers and munitions ever eighteen months of the war the enemy believed in his infallible power to dictate the trend of operations in accordance with his preconceived plans. Thus as early as February your correspondent showed the enemy's operations before Verdun were designed primarily to induce an offensive of the allies in the west and neutralize it in time to turn against the Russians. It was also indicated that the Verdun offensive would be the preliminary to an equally determined effort on the line of Arras-Nieuport with precisely the same object in view. The operations before Verdun have continued with unbroken violence ever three months, and another gigantic attempt has been undertaken, and is now in progress before Ypres, but the allies have not been drawn from their established policy.

POLICY HAS FAILED.

The significance of these terrible conflicts is not so much in adamantine defensive of the allies or the colossal loses of the enemy as in the fact that the enemy has completely failed to induce a premature offensive by allied armies. He planned to accomplish this, neutralize the effort, and then turn his Hindenburg tactics against the Russians before their 1916 offensive could develop. His strategic conception failed. Great Britain and France have proceeded steadily and calmly with gigantic preparations, and the enemy could not dictate the moment of the launching of the allies' offensive. Verdun and Ypres are to him terrible omens. To the allies they are incidents of an effective defence.

RUSSIANS ON THE MOVE.

Now what the enemy was attempting to forestall is happening. Russia is on the move and Austria is in grave peril. Nor in the meantime can the enemy relax his efforts in the west. The problem of an effective blockade of the central empires is increasingly important. In his February summary, your correspondent forecast the probability of the sea affair if the military situation did not develop along the lines desired by the German General Staff. Urged by Germany's failure to control developments, and by the undoubted economic pressure, the German navy has emerged and has been dismissed from the high seas. Henceforth the problem of an effective siege of the central empires is to be solved with more and more disadvantage to the enemy. The morale of the German people, so long nurtured on artificial and hollow victories, now is being deliberately bolstered by falsehood and be regarded be correspondingly unstable. The subsidiary operations in the east of the Balkans have no important bearing on the main issues of strategy. The Allies' preparations in the west, the failure of the enemy to draw an early offensive and anticipate the Russians, and the complete fiasco of the German sea effort. "These are the outstanding features of the most gratifying strategical outlook since the commencement of the world war."

Barriefield War Camp
June 11, 1916

(Special Correspondence to Examiner)

The wet weather which still prevails in this district is beginning to prove a monotony to all as it greatly interferes with the drilling and work of the men in general, it being impossible to do any drill owing to the mud.

Sir Sam Hughes reviewed the different battalions in camp last week in a down pour of rain and although it was impossible to do marching of any kind with smartness Sir Sam was well pleased with the showing made and also made the statement that their would be a change in a short time. It is not known as yet which battalions will be moved to either Borden or Valcartier, although most of the battalions west of Kingston are hoping it will be Borden.

During the fine weather of the past week the baseball fans of the battalion have been getting into shape for their league games the first of which was played Saturday, June 10th, when the 93rd nine and the 109th nine met in their first league game, the 93rd winning by a score of 8 to 6 with an innings to spare. The weather was rather threatening but it did not interfere with the attendance there being a large crowd of supporters for both teams.

The line up of the 93rd was as follows:

Sergt. H. O. Heron, 1st base.
Pte. Misha, 2nd base.
Corpl. Bell, 3rd base.
Pte. Frost, right field.
Pte. Hawkins and Staple, left field.
Pte. H. Hatcher, centre field.
Corpl. Anderson, short stop.
Pte. Rose and Hawkins, pitcher.
Capt. Widdifield, catcher.

Pte. Rose went in the box for the 1st 3 innings when he had to retire owing to an injured wrist. Pte. Hawkins then took his position while Pte Stapies played left field.

SOCCER TEAM WIN TOO

At 2.30 on the parade grounds of the 93rd an exhibition game of football was played with the 130th Battalin when the 93rd again proved victorious, the final score being 7 to 0. The 93rd line up was as follows:

Co. Sergt.-Maj. G. Calladine, goal.
Pte. Robinson, right back.
Pte. Marsh, left back.
Lance.Corpl. Hardie, right half.
Pte. S. Taylor, left half.
Pte. Ryan, centre half.
Co. Sergt-Major Hartshorn, outside right.
Pte. Griffin, inside right.
Q.M.S. King, centre.
Lance.-Corpl. Hardman, outside left.
Pte. M. Shaw, inside left.

The 93rd is also able to uphold our reputation as amateur theatricals as on Saturday night which a "stant" night at the Y.M.C.A. concert hall Pte. Cole of the 93rd cook staff won the prize, which speaks well for his ability.

There was a large number of contestants, eight men trying for 1st prize which was $3.00 worth of Canteen tickets.

The different stunts included strong men, singing, both comic and sentimental, monologues, recitations and last but not least Pte. Cole with his Tonny Atkins and ventriloquist stunt.

The 2nd prize was won by Pte. Murphy of the 109th battalion in an imitation of Harry Lauder and it might be said that he gave Pte Cole a close run for 1st prize.

There were probably 500 in attendance and all spent a most pleasant evening and after singing "God Save the King" all went home tired but happy.

If the results of the different sports of Saturday are any indication of the future there is no doubt whatever, of what the results will be at the end of the season.

Sunday as usual proved to be a wet day with heavy showers which interfered somewhat with the arrangements made for divine service. Major Davidson spoke for a short while to the men of the 93rd, 109th and 130th battalions with the 109th band leading the singing. Capt. Kenny had charge of the Second Brigade while Capt. Hagar had charge of the 3rd brigade assisted by Capt. Dodds the latest chaplain to arrive in camp and by all outside appearance the latter will create a good impression being a well built man and weighing 240 pounds in his stocking feet.

THE BAND BUSY

Bandmaster W. Hughes and his 93rd bandsmen are getting in some good work as the weather does not seem to effect their spirit and as they have a large marquee to practice in. Everybody is happy. On Thursday, June 8th, they rendered the following programme at the Officers mess of the 93rd Battalion:

March—True Tones.
Overture—Foot and Peasant.
Vocal Waltz—Eileen Allanah.
Selection—Lohengrin.
Patrol—American Patrol.
Descriptive—Indian Ride.
Finale—"O Canada".

On Saturday, June 10th they were

DANGEROUSLY ILL.

Pte. Jas. A. Wallace, Mounted Rifles, 77 Harvey Street.

Saturday was the first day for several weeks in which a Peterborough casualty was not reported, but unfortunately the lull did not last long, and yesterday and to-day brought the unwelcome news that a number of Peterborough soldiers have been wounded. It is significant that two of those reported, Corp. Thos. Levoir and Bombardier Sidney Luther, left with the first contingent.

Pte. Edwin McKay.

In to-day's casualty list, among the Mounted Rifles, appears the name of Pte. Edwin McKay, whose address is given as Lakefield.

BOMBARDIER LUTHER.

The many friends both in Peterborough and surrounding district of Master Percy Luther, the little recruiting sergeant of the 93rd Battalion, will be sorry to learn that his brother, Bombardier Sidney Luther of the 4th Battery, C.F.A., and son of Pte. J. M. Luther, of the cooks staff of the 93rd Battalion, is officially reported severely wounded. Bombardier Luther, who was a member of the Peterborough Fire Department when war broke out, enlisted with the 24th Field Battery's quota and went overseas as a driver with the 4th Battery, 1st Canadian Artillery Brigade. He has been in the thick of the fighting ever since the first contingent went to France with the exception of two short furloughs in London, one week last August and another a short time ago. Bombardier Luther was promoted in France. He was very popular with the members of the Fire Department and in the city generally, and his many friends will wish him a speedy recovery. He was born in Montreal and came to Peterborough with his parents several years ago. His father is at Barriefield with the 93rd Battalion and his mother and two smaller brothers reside on Lansdowne street.

CORP. THOS. LEVOIR.

News was received yesterday that Corp. Thos. Levoir, a Peterborough member of the 2nd Battalion, is officially reported wounded. Corp. Levoir was one of three brothers who left Peterborough in August, 1914, as a member of the 57th Regiment's quota to the 2nd Battalion, 1st Canadian contingent. One brother, Pte. Robert Levoir, was invalided home

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1916

KITCHENER FOR BERLIN.

The enterprising and growing city of Berlin, Ontario, wishes to change its name, and has great difficulty of getting a suitable substitute. Among the names suggested is "Kitchener." If the city, in its desire to get away from the spirit that makes its present name of Berlin undesirable, it cannot get a better name than that of the great statesman warrior, who has died, but lives, and will live forever as an influence and an inspiration to high ideals. He has spent his life, and with splendid success, in working and fighting for the ideals of freedom, right, and human good, of which the name Berlin represents the deadly and damnable opposite. The name "Kitchener," as a substitute for the present name, is a good one in he highest sense for our own Berlin. But it has one quality that must be considered. It will, if chosen, be a mighty hard name to live up to, if the city is to accomplish in its sphere of responsibility what the name "Kitchener" represents in the achievements of the highest statesmanship and the highest accomplishments of human good. The name "Kitchener," however, would be a splendid inspiration to the enterprising city which now stands eminent among Ontario urban communities for enterprise and public spirit.

APPEALING TO TE BEST IN THEM.

When we are asking the children of the city to respect, and refrain from destroying, the work being done by the city in improving the boulevards on paved streets, we have a claim upon them that should appeal to the higher side of their natures—to their sense of gratitude and fair play. We are doing something for the children that will help them avoid injuring the boulevards by providing other playgrounds than the streets, where, in the impulse of youthful activity, inspired by youthful spirits, they cannot, perhaps, avoid trespassing on boulevards and open lawns. We are spouring the city from centre to—Byersville, to gather old papers and rage to be converted into money to equip play-grounds. The provision and equipment of such grounds throw a responsibility upon our boys and girls, and means an appeal to the best side of their nature. No boy (or girl) who has not the seeds of criminality sprouting in him will maliciously destroy or deface, or mar the newly-made boulevards if appeal be made to the true sporting side of his character—to his spirit of fair play; he will not commit the houndish ingratitude of doing harm to the city and public property when the city and public are trying to do so much for his pleasure and benefit. If a little pains is taken to message this idea into the minds of boys and girls we shall have results that will meet our desires and be contributory to the beauty of our public places by engendering and developing a spirit of reverence and respect for it, and by making our boys and girls better in all ways. It is only by appealing to the best in every boy and girl that we can expect to get the best out of them.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT.

The main idea of Canada's future involves the simple thing, development of our national spirit; of our opportunities; of our resources. The first and most vital need is the development of the right national idea in our governing powers, in our national leaders. If we have the leaders setting the example of developing the national idea of self-help, the people will catch the same spirit and be influenced by it to achievements to which those of the past will be as nothing.

The tendency of the dominant or dominating forces of the Dominion is, in some important ways, to discourage the Canadian spirit of enterprise, the first step of growth, the first condition of development.

We have the governing powers discouraging the spirit of Canadian enterprise and casting doubt upon Canadian ability of accomplishment. We have had Premier Borden enunciating the heresy that Canada "can't build warships in fifty years." Herein he exchanges Canadian independence of action for subservient dependence upon others. Herein is a confession that Canada, with a population of eight millions, and infinite domestic resources in respect of all things needed for shipbuilding, and native skill, cannot do do what Australia, with a little more than half our people, with no greater popular skill, with no greater popular enterprise, has done, and done well. Australia has a navy of her own, the best of its ships built in her own ship yards. If, in 1911, Premier Borden had dealt with the tenders for cruisers which he found ready to hand, Canada, by this time, would have had the nucleus of a Canadian navy, already built or on the stocks in our own shipyards.

This attitude is taken in face of the fact that we have shown our ability to build sea-going ships. Hon. Col. Cantley, president and general manager of the Nova Scotia Steel Company, and a member of the Iron and Steel Institute of Great Britain, declared only a few days ago his belief in the ability of Canada to build ships. Politics and political expedience seemed to have swept away the sea spirit that Premier Borden must have developed by residence at the side of the sounding sea. When he spoke his mind from his heart in 1909, he declared for a Canadian navy, "built of our own material, by our our own workmen, by our our own skill." Then he was voicing the true national policy, giving voice to the true spirit that should animate Canadians.

We are told, officially, both in words and action, that we can't build ships in Canada; we are told by actions that speak louder than words, that we can't refine nickel in Canada, but must send it abroad to be exploited by foreigners, among whom are our bitterest enemies. We were told that we couldn't make certain munitions of war in Canada; we gave Canadian enterprise a buffet in the face, refused its contracts, and sent millions of dollars worth of profitable business to a foreign country, instead of developing the industrial resources of Canada, and encouraging Canadian industrial enterprise and industrial skill.

It may be argued with some show of reasonableness that we can't do as well as other countries in many arenas of activity that are invitingly open to us. Possibly not; but we shall never be able ti do things that must be done if we ever become a great country, unless we begin. We can do nothing without trying, and we learn by trying. The nestling birds would never learn to fly if they stayed in their nests and let others do their flying.

We don't know what we can do nor what we can't do without trying. A man, no matter how much we thought he knew, or no no matter how much he trusted his wisdom and judgment, who two years ago to-day would have told us that Canada could raise and equip and send into the field an army of 350,000 of the best soldiers in the world, would have been laughed to scorn. But we did it by doing it. The government gave the people a chance, the government "let itself loose," and by trying has done what the most sanguine, felt before we tried, was an impossibility. The government gave the people a chance and the people did the rest — did the most. The government gave opportunity to manufacture war material, and we have made all the equipment of our soldiers from guns to haversacks. We have done this, simply by doing it—by trying and succeeding. We could have done the same in building ships, in refining nickel and in making fuses, if the government had shown the same spirit of confidence in the capability and resources of Canadians as they have shown in other things in connection with the war.

The terrible ordeal of this war, with all its waste of life and substance, with all its lavish employment of money, is in reality Canada's growing time. The pains we are suffering are in the true sense, growing pains, the travail of a new national birth. Canada will or should emerge from this war a new country, with new ideals, with new self respect for our capacity for achievement, and with a new spirit of self dependence and enterprise. And, if the new spirit is given a chance for expression through a vigorous policy on the part of our rulers of development of all our resources —, of our manhood, of our industrial opportunities and our natural resources, we shall realize in a magnificent way Sir Wilfrid Laurier's forecast of half a generation ago —"The twentieth century belongs to Canada."

Neutral Newspaper Pricks The Bubble of German Sea "Victory"

A short statement attributed to the chief of the intelligence department of the British Admiralty it rounded off with the trite observation that "the British control the North Sea", an assurance which ought surely to be superfluous, but may perhaps help to clear the heads of excitable critics.

It is not impossible to account for the wildly extravagant conclusions drawn from the recent battle off the Jutland Bank. Far more than a year and three-quarters everyone had been expecting a clash between the Main British and German fleets. All of the fights has been comparatively small affairs. The influence of Britain's power at sea had been manifested in a manner wholly unspectacular, and so the smallest encounters were exaggerated beyond all measure by casual and inexpert observers. Thus, when the unfortunate Cradock was defeated the event was magnified into a gigantic disaster and has since grown to such vast proportions in some minds that to-day Mr. Bernard Ridder, for instance, cheerfully refers to the sinking of two cruisers as the destruction of "a British fleet". No wonder, then, that after the battle in the North Sea he should feel that the famous Day is come, that the Kaiser is already "Admiral of the Atlantic" and that there is no longer any doubt about the eventual invasion of Britain.

NEWSPAPER CRITICS AT FAULT

But it is not only the spokesmen of the German-Americans who talk in this extravagant vein. The impulsive comments in nearly all the newspapers show how general is the ignorance of naval history and how completely the first big battle has blinded the occasional critic to the lessons of the past. One chronicler, forgetting all the results of the constant naval pressure on Germany is the last two years, complains that "throughout the whole war" Britain's fleet has been "inexplicably sleepy". Another sums up the event as "a terrible and decisive defeat" of Germany's foe. But the World outdoes all the rest. Premising that the British fleet was "outmanoeuvred, outshot, and outfought," it declares roundly that "Germany has won the greatest sea fight in modern history."

When it is considered that the newly appointed admiral of the Atlantic failed to gain even momentary control of the sea the wildness of such comments is sufficiently apparent. They are, of course, dismissed as ridiculous by naval men and even the semi-official naval critics of the German press are more sober in their speculations. None of them pretends that the battle was in any sense decisive for the obvious reason that it cannot in the slightest degree affect the naval situation in the North Sea or serve in any way to reduce the pressure.

GERMANS REALLY GAINED NOTHING.

A series of similar feats might indeed be decisive, yet it is by no means clear that the decision would be favourable to the Germans. Nay, if we are to accept the latest estimates of German losses, a series of such victories would inevitably result at last in so great reduction of the fleet as to leave the enemy undisputed masters of the sea. A possibility fully appreciated by the Germans, for it is apparent from all accounts that they avoided a general fleet action and drew off when the main body of the British fleet came up. If the victory had really been so complete as Mr. Ridder and his friends pretend to believe it would undoubtedly have been followed up and the victors would not have retired so readily into port.

That the conduct of the German fleet was strategically sound in this respect may not be doubted, but the event shows plainly how absurd it is to talk of the battle as decisive in any sense. If the "enterprise" vaguely referred to in the first German report had any ultimate object beyond an encounter with the British fleet, that object was temporarily defeated. If, on the other hand, the Germans were only seeking an engagement with the enemy, there will be abundant opportunity for further enterprises of the same kind in the future, as there has been at any time since the war began. The German fleet has the same liberty as it had before the battle and no more. The Admiralty of the Atlantic remains unchanged.—New York Tribune

Saving the Settler From Cropless Lands

The opening up on non-agricultural lands to settlement has produced some of the most far-reaching and pitiful tragedies in the Dominion's history. Every province has communities which have been permitted to make the fatal error of a bad location. Their subsequent history is an unbroken line of bad crops, poverty, suffering and human demoralization. Too poor to move away, the farmer and his family resign themselves to a pitiful standard of living, giving their time, and efforts for practically no return.

Every province and the Federal authorities have made such blunders in times past nor is there satisfactory evidence that a general and complete reform has been brought about. Farmers still are allowed on Federal and Provincial 'homesteads' which are impossible for field crops. The policy was of course, more the result of laxity in classification and not a deliberate effort to send settlers to useless lands. The laxness, however, is growing in public disfavour and the tendency of all governments now is to protect the settler and to conserve rocky, sandy areas for their natural purpose of growing trees.

Several survey parties are engaged on soil examinations this summer and such work is bound to achieve higher importance in the eyes of governments. One party, composed of Messrs. F. C. Nunnick of the Commission of Conservation and Walter Graham of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, are in New Brunswick, co-operating with the provincial government in a scheme of land classification. The project deserves the hearty support of conservationists everywhere for the benefits are far from local.

ESCORT FOR CORPSES.

WESTERN MAN MAKES PRACTICE OF ACTING A AS PROFESSIONAL MOURNER.

Six times during the last eighteen months an east-bound Union Pacific train has pulled out of Boise, Idaho, bearing a man who apparently takes his pleasures sadly, a peculiar individual who gratifies an apparent passion for travel by acting as official escort for bodies shipped back east without relative or friend to accompany them. This person keeps in touch with the various undertaking establishments of Boise, and when them occasions arise offers himself as professional mourner, conscientiously looking after all details, attending to any flowers, and even going to the eastern funeral as one of the honoured guests. For such depressing service he is reimbursed with one first-class ticket to the corpse's destination. He buys his own meals and pays all other expenses, which include his own fare back. The mystery is, what possible advantage does he gain by making these trips?

For it is a fact that this peculiar individual never makes a railroad trip unless it is on his self-constituted professional duties. Someone must die and he sent east to be buried to furnish him with an excuse for a trip, although he has other idiosyncrasies, according to Union Pacific officials. They report that last summer, returning from a "burying", at some point east of Chicago on a special "commission" rate, he travelled through to Salem, Ore., because it only cost $2 more than the regular Boise fare, although it cost him $16 to get back from Salem to Boise. Also, starting on his last professional trip, he asked the Union Pacific baggageman if he could check a trunk on a corpse's ticket. Finding that he could, as all first-class tickets are allowed 150 pounds of baggage, he went off and "rustled" another trunk, which he will have to pay excess baggage on to get back home.

detailed from duty at the Officers Mess of Headquarters Staff, 3rd Military District where they rendered the following programme:—

March—"Albion".
Overture—"Raymond".
Selection—"William Tell".
Descriptive—"Forest Scenes"
Patrol—"Wee McGregor"
Descriptive—"Motor Ride".
Finale—"O Canada".

Col. Hemming, D.O.C. remarked that it was the finest programme of music he had heard from any band in camp.

The 93rd Battalion was strengthened in numbers on Sunday when the following non-coms who have been attending the B.F and P.T. class at London arrived in camp after having spent four weeks at hard drill.

All men speak highly of their treatment at London and also of the conditions of the camp at Carling Heights.

The final medical examination is progressing favourably and up to Saturday B Company was finished and C. Company will start Monday morning.

The Kingston Standard says: The local laundries are so crowded with work, that they are unable to accept a large portion of the washing of the camp, and it is a common thing to see soldiers doing their own washing in some little stream in the vicinity of the camp. The 33rd battalion of Peterborough have been compelled to buy wash tubs and the battalion will do its own washing, not from choice, but because compelled to do it.

The Tweed Advocate states: "For the balance of this year at least Tweed will be without any athletic games as the number of young men who have enlisted and left for Barriefield makes it almost impossible to muster a team." To be unrepresented in sporting circles this year is no bad reflection and we are glad to note that Lakefield is in the same position as the town to the east. We could hardly raise a baseball nine here of fit young men.—Lakefield News.

The Lakefield News says: In the fighting of last week in which the Canadians were engaged at Ypres, France, at least one Lakefield boy, Private Morley H. MacDonald, is numbered in the heavy list of casualties. The following telegram conveying the intelligence was received by his father, Mr. J. J. MacDonald, on Thursday morning:

Ottawa, June 8th, 1916.

Sincerely regret to inform you that Private Morley Horace MacDonald, Infantry, officially reported admitted to No. 3 General Hospital, Boulogne, May 30th, wounded in left arm. Will send further particulars when received.

Officer in Charge Record Office.

Pte. MacDonald enlisted in the 50th Battalion at Calgary, Alta., about a year ago. He went over to England with a draft from that battalion arriving there in September. Some time after he was transferred to the 16th Battalion and proceeded to the firing line in France. This is the second son of Mr. MacDonald that has been wounded. Corp. Roy MacDonald of the 2nd Battalion, was injured some time ago while in the trenches, and is still unable to take his place on the firing line.

Quite a number of the 93rd Battalion were home over the week-end. Among the non-coms who are up from camp are Sod. Sergt.-Major J. Hawthorne, C Company, Co. Q.M.S. J. Williams, A Company, Sergt. G. F. Toone, Sergt. W. Theobald, Sergt. E. Abraham, Sergt. Ball (Lakefield), and Corp J. R. Miller.

In addition to Lt.-Col. Johnson and Major Watt, Lieuts. Stock and Crisp, of the 93rd Battalion, were here for the week-end.

It is expected that the Band of the 93rd Battalion will be home on leave at the end of this week. As usual the band will take its leaves in a body.

The 93rd Battalion was the Duty Battalion at Barriefield camp Saturday that is they had to provide all the guards and piquet required for the day. A glance on the orders issued on Friday will show what it means to be the Duty Battalion.

Following are the Battalion Orders by Lieut. Col T. J. Johnston, Officer commanding 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F Headquarters Barriefield camp June 9th, 1916. Number 139.

J. E. R. MUNRO, Captain. Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

Lieut. Walker Fair, signalling officer for the 136th Battalion, Port Hope, is in town, the guest of his uncle, Mr. Robert Fair, 566 Dickson Street. Lieut. Fair is convalescing from a surgical operation that was performed about one month ago.

The suspense concerning the extent of the injuries to Capt. D'Arcy Sneath, who left Peterborough as a Subaltern with B Squadron, 8th C. M. R., was considerably relieved by the receipt of a message from him on the 8th inst. On the 18th of May he was taken to a hospital at Boulogne in an unconscious condition, suffering from shell shock. He was deaf and badly shaken up, but in the course of a week was able to be removed to Hyde Park Hospital in London, where he is steadily improving and hopes in the course of a few weeks to be able to rejoin his battalion which has sustained very heavy losses during the past week. His injuries were received from the explosion of a shell among a group of five officers. Two were killed outright and the other three were knocked over and buried under a great weight of earth from which they were, with difficulty, extricated more read han alive.

Capt. Sneath has been mentioned in despatches three times for his gallantry in reconnoitering the enemy's trenches and received his promotion a few weeks ago.

The Examiner has received the following letter from Wheeler Owen Montgomery, C.A.S.C.,

Dear Sir,—A few lines, as I thought you, and your valuable paper, would like to know that myself and my three brothers are here. I am very pleased to be able to tell you that I have seen all my brothers—my brother Scott, 21st Battalion, and Morris and Ray, Ammunition Col., C.F.A., and myself, in C.A.S.C., as a wheeler. All are well at present, and I have two more brothers in the Imperial Army—Brother Percy, 3rd Scottish Horse, and Norman, R. H.Guards. We shall all be glad to get back to our dear wives and children. We get it a little warm at times, and a little excitement, shells dropping around us. The weather is fine. I am feeling good and we are all doing out best to guard our King and Country; all the same it will be a grand thing when all is over. Remember my brothers and myself to Peterborough friends. We all hope to see Canada soon. I have run across a lot of Peterborough boys.

LONDON, June 11.—Lieut.-Col. E. B. Clegg of Peterborough will take temporary command of the 9th, vice Lieut.-Col. Moore, who is appointed commander of a brigade.

Temporary Lieutenants Archibald and Meredith of Peterborough; Sergeant Hecht, Cavalry Depot; Lieut. Fennell, Toronto, have passed with distinction the signalling field telephone course at Shorncliffe. Capt. Aird of St. Catharines has recovered from wounds and is now with his battalion at West Sandling. Major Templeton of Victoria has recovered and joins the Pioneer Depot.

The following have left Shorncliffe for overseas: Lieutenants Heal, New Glasgow; Brighjman, Port Arthur; Holte, Toronto; Spendlove, Winnipeg; Yuill, Williams, Eagleson and E. R. Morris, Sault Ste Marie, Rimmer, Barnia, McLean, Campbell, Vallance of Hamilton; Kennedy-Powell, Brickendon, Langford, Jackson, Randall and Price, Winnipeg; Patterson, Slader, Hampshire, Hopewell, Higgins and Barnbrook. The following go to No. 7 General Hospital: Captains Claxton, C. A. James, and Fisher Boyd.

His many friends will be glad to learn that the report that Sergt. Custance of the 21st Battalion has been wounded, announced some time ago, was in error. A member of the Examiner staff received a letetr from Sergt. Custance to-day, written on May 29, in which he says: "Just a few words in brief to notify you that I have not been wounded as reported. In fact I am very much alive, pleased to say, and have been doing duty since September, 1915, in the trenches (and am very much aware of the fact.)".

Among the non-coms home from Barriefield Camp are Hospital Sergt. H. Maguire and Sergt. W. Lewington.

Hopes To Release Man Charged With Sedition

Windsor Lawyer Claims Evidence Was of Manufactured Kind.

WINDSOR, June 12.—Stefan Casok, a Slav, who lived in Ford, and was arrested several months ago and sent to an internment camp, because it was alleged by fellow-workmen he had made statements detrimental to the cause of the Allies, will soon be at liberty, if correspondence now being carried on by F. W. Wilson, local barrister, is productive of results. Casok's counsel claims to have found the evidence against him was of a manufactured kind, and says he has sufficient grounds for his release.

FATHER COTE'S NEPHEW DROWNED AT LINDSAY

Six-Year-Old Boy Was Playing Near Horn Bros. Mill When He Fell Into the River

Examiner Special:

LINDSAY, June 12—Basil Cote, the six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Cote, was drowned in the river, at the rear of Horn Bros. mill late Saturday afternoon. He was playing with his brother and sister, who ran home to give the alarm, it was stated, overlooking in their excitement the presence of the workmen at the mill who were comparatively close by. The body was recovered within a few minutes. Two doctors applied artificial respiration, but without success. The deceased is a nephew of Rev. Father Cote, formerly of St. Peter's Cathedral, Peterborough.

GLOOMY REPORTS FROM FARMERS

Some reports from the neighbouring townships are far from bright. In fact they are altogether gloomy. Parts of Otonabee are in bad shape, and Monaghan, and even Smith, with its higher altitude, state that the prolonged cold and wet weather is "souring" the grain that has been planted. Fall wheat does not look as good as it did two weeks ago, the farmers say, potatoes that have been planted are likely to rot, and there are considerable patches that have not even been seeded. One retired farmer stated this morning that the spring has been so cold and wet that the farmers are bound to experience an "off" year. On rolling land the seeding has been completed and conditions are fairly good, but in some places such as level stretches in South Monaghan and parts of Smith, the outlook is not a pleasing one. At present it is difficult to estimate just what the effects on the country will be. The harvest, however, will tell.

DRUGGISTS REFUSE TO HANDLE LIQUOR

LONDON MEN DECLARE THEY WILL NOT SELL IT.

LONDON, June 12.—Unless the Ontario Government passes legislation compelling the druggists of the province to sell liquor, it is not likely it will be handled in the city drug stores.

Several local druggists, when interviewed to-day, stated they had definitely decided to have nothing to do with that end of the business, due to the chances they were forced to take. This decision was reached some time ago and the druggists remain firm in the stand taken at that time.

The heavy penalties attached to any violation of the act would not justify a druggist in dealing in liquor for the small profit he might derive from its sale, is the argument advanced by the druggists in their refusal to deal in liquor.

The two first offences are punishable by heavy fines, the third by a cancellation of the druggist's diploma, which would mean putting him out of business entirely.

The majority of the city druggists are averse to the handling of liquor at any time, but with the additional restrictions to be placed on after September 16th the business would be a great deal more so.

After prohibition goes into effect the druggists contend it would mean the directing of a class of trade to their stores which they would much prefer to have nothing to do with.

Unless the present attitude of the druggists change, liquor will not be procurable in city drug stores except Governmental action forces them to keep it. At present the majority of the druggists do not anticipate any drastic action of that kind.

Claim Prisoners Were Taken

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, June 12.—After avoiding for several days any reference to the great Russian drive on the Austrian front, a German statement to-day mentions that the Germans have met the Russians near Bocsacs, and says that thirteen hundred Russians have been taken prisoners by the Austro-German forces in this district.

The Russian troops are now close to Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, and several large explosions have been heard in town, indicating that the Austrians are probably evacuat-

"COBOURG" SOLDIER COMMITTED FOR TRIAL ON SHOOTING CHARGE

Another 139th Man Gets Six Months For Desertion---Folly of Picking Up Recruits All Over the Map Illustrated by Two Cases Heard at Kingston.

The folly of securing recruits from all over the map to fill up a battalion, as Cobourg, Port Hope and other battalions have done this winter, instead of building up the battalion with home talent as the 93rd did, is beginning to make itself felt. Here are two illustrations affecting the 139th Battalion, Cobourg, taken from Saturday's Kingston Standard:

Pte. Gallagher, Cobourg, a member of the 139th Battalion, appeared before Justice of the Peace Hunter and Allison this morning and was committed for trial on a charge of attempting to kill, as the result of the discharge of a rifle in his hands, Pte. Lowell Chenier a member of the same battalion, who is in the Hotel Dieu suffering from a bullet wound in the right leg.

Gallagher was defended by Mr. D. A. Givens and a plea of "not guilty" was entered and after taking the evidence of Sergt. Harper the man was committed for trial.

In his evidence Sergt. Harper stated that Gallagher had come to him and asked if he was wanted and was told he was not, but was referred to Acting Sergt. Maj. Patterson, who told the accused that he should be in the guard room, as it appears that he had used abusive language to the above soldier. The Sergt.-Major ordered two men to place Gallagher in the guard room, but Gallagher went up to his tent, picked up a rifle and threatened to shoot anyone who came near him. The witness went for the provost sergeant and when he (Harper) came back, Gallagher still had the rifle in his hands. Harper went around the back of a tent and he saw the accused draw the bolt of the rifle, eject the cartridge and then replace it in the rifle chamber. He then pulled the trigger but shot low towards the tent. "It appears that the bullet struck apiece of iron in front of the tent," said Harper, "and was deflected inside. Striking Pte. Chenier it passed through his leg and dropped on the floor. Major Grant came along and grabbing Gallagher threw him to the floor and he was then taken to the guard tent.

Cross-examined by Wr. D. A. Givens Harper stated that the prisoner did not appear to be drunk. He had fired the shot, but apparently did not aim at any person.

On the evidence of the one witness the prisoner was sent up for trial and will likely get a hearing during next week.

Gallagher has three charges on his conduct sheet at camp, one of them being for assaulting an officer. He is considered to be a troublesome man by many.

Lhenier is in the Hotel Dieu under the care of Dr. Morrison and is getting along nicely. The bullet entered his leg above the knee, and although it made a bad wound no serious developments are anticipated.

DESERTER SENTENCED.

"If an X-ray was placed on you we would find that your liver was white." That was one of the condemnatory statements made by Col. Hunter, when he sentenced Pte. Alfred Provost, 139th Battalion, to six months in jail for desertion, after he had pleaded guilty and had been tried by Justices of the Peace Hunter and Allinson.

"You are a disgrace to your battalion, Canada and the Empire," said Col. Hunter, "and I find that you have spent a luxurious winter on the fat of the land and after your easy time was taken away you doffed the khaki and went into mufti. Your crime is a most serious one, one in fact that cannot go unpunished."

Provost came from the State of Vermont and enlisted at Campbellford with four companions. He had a good time in that place all winter and when he arrived in Cobourg he was determined to desert. This he did and attired in civilian clothing took French leave on June 2nd and was arrested in Campbellford on Wednesday last.

When arraigned he pleaded guilty and when given six months in jail he did not seem to care and walked from the court room with a smile on his face.

Desertions are few in this district, but still there are too many and the military authorities are determined that men who give their word to fight for the cause of humanity will abide by the promise or pay the penalty. There are still a number who will be tried.

Another Heavy List of Casualties, etc.

from England and died here during the past winter, being buried with full military honours, on the day after the other brother, Pte Wm Levoir, who had been wounded in France and invalided home, reached Peterborough. Now the third brother appears on the casualty list. Corp. Thos. Levoir was with the 2nd Battalion during the terrible battle of Langemarck in April of last year and in the hard fighting that followed. Soon afterwards he was invalided to England and was for a long period in hospital at Shorncliffe. Pte. Barney Quinn met him there on his way home to Canada, and states that Corp. Levoir had grown tired of the life, and although he did not need to do so, volunteered to go back to France with a draft that was going across. He has been at the front on his second visit to France about a month, serving with the grenade section.

Corp. Levoir's wife died since he left Peterborough. There is one daughter, Miss Margaret Levoir, living at 739 Water street, while four smaller children are now residing in Montreal. Before the war, Corp Levoir and his family resided at 178 Edinburgh street.

JAMES ALEXANDER WALLACE.

Mrs. John Wallace, 717 Harvey street, received a message this morning announcing the fact that her son, Private James Alexander Wallace, had been reported dangerously ill and on June 9th was admitted to No. 2 General Hospital, Camiers. Private Wallace, who is a son of the late John Wallace, enlisted in Peterborough a little over a year ago. He was born in Peterborough and is well and favourably known. His brother, Lance-Corporal Peter Wallace, is a member of the 21st Battalion. He enlisted in Bowmanville.

Private James Wallace is a member of the Mounted Rifles.

LLOYD MATHER.

The war came home to Mather's Corners, Otonabee, yesterday, when Mr. W. Thomas Mather received a telegram from the Militia Department announcing the wounding of his son, Lloyd Mather, who enlisted in Haileybury in the 18th Battalion, and was later transferred to the 15th in England. He received a gunshot wound in the shoulder according to the laconic notification from headquarters at Ottawa. Private Mather is 28 years of age and previous to his enlistment in the second contingent was working in Haileybury. He had been gone from the corners about eight years. The family is one of the most widely known in Otonabee. Mather's Corners has been a landmark in the township for several generations past. Mr. Thos. Mather is an undertaker and also operates a carriage shop.

PTE. W. A. HAGERMAN.

Mr. Alfred Hagerman, 161 Hunter street, received a message this morning this morning that his son, Pte. William A. Hagerman, Canadian Infantry, is reported admitted to the Australian Hospital at Wimereux, suffering from a gunshot wound in the elbow. Pte. Hagerman is one of four Canadian-born sons of Mr. Hagerman who are now overseas, the fathers being Sergt. Stanley and Bombardier Alf. Hagerman of the 33rd Battery, and Pte. Victor Hagerman with the grenade section of the 21st Battalion. Pte. W. A. Hagerman enlisted with one of the university companies which went across as reinforcements to the Princess Pats and has been overseas for some time.

PTE. WILLIE TEABO.

Mrs. Geo. McCallum, 43 Smith street, received a wire from Ottawa to-day informing her that her son, Pte. Willie Teabo of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, is officially reported admitted to No 8 Stationary Hospital, Wimereux on June 4th, suffering from a gunshot wound in the right thigh. Pte. Teabo, who was born in Peterborough, was a member of the 57th Regiment for some time and joined the last draft from Peterborough which joined the 8th C.M.R. at Barriefield Camp last summer.

PTE. BRUCE CHAMBERS.

Pte. Bruce Chambers, one of the Peterborough boys who left Peterborough with 8 squadron, 8th C.M.R. in March, 1915, has been wounded in the recent fighting. Mrs. Chambers, 483 Bolivar street, received official news to this effect to-day. Pte. Chambers was admitted to No. 13 Stationary Hospital, Boulogne, on June 3, wounded slightly in the shoulder and face. He is a well known member of the 8th and has been at the front for some time.

120 Perish In Tornadoes That Do Vast Damage In Mississippi Valley States

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 9.— The series of tornadoes that swept over parts of Arkansas, Mississippi, Illinois, and Missouri are known to have killed 120 persons.

This includes the lives of twenty others, said to be negro deck hands, lost when the Mississippi steam packet Elinore capsized seventeen miles north of here in the storm. Incomplete lists now show that in Arkansas fifty-seven persons were killed, twelve in Mississippi, one in Illinois and thirty in Missouri.

These casualties were distributed as follows, although later reports may show changes and even more dead:

Jackson, Miss.—Twelve persons killed, seventy-five injured.

Heber Springs, Ark.—Twenty-five reported dead.

Cabot, Ark.—Three dead, a dozen injured.

Judsonia, Ark.—Eight negroes dead, many whites injured.

Greenland, Ark.—One dead, six injured.

Fordyce, Ark.—Five whites killed.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Four killed, eight injured.

Truman, Ark.—Two negroes killed, thirteen others injured.

Newport, Ark.—Two dead.

Dalark, Ark.—Two dead, six injured.

Forrest City, Ark.—Four dead, thirty-five injured.

Russellville, Ark.—One dead.

Dexter, Mo.—Three negroes killed.

Poplar, Bluff, Mo.—Sixteen dead.

Studdard, Mo.—Seven dead.

Moorehouse, Mo.—Four dead.

Tornado Capsizes Vessel.

A report received here states that the Mississippi River packet Elmore was caught in a blast of the tornado seventeen miles north of this city and capsized. Reports vary concerning the loss of life. It is generally believed that seventeen negro deck hands lost their lives. The Elmore is not known to have carried passengers.

It is believed that the Elmore was turned over as the tornado passed from Arkansas to the east side of the river.

While the damage at Judsonia, Ark., is as great as reported, the death list is confined to eight negroes. About fifty white persons there were injured. First reports from Judsonia told of the death of twenty-five persons.

The property loss there and at Heber Springs will be very large, more than half of each town being destroyed. At Heber Springs twenty-five bodies have been recovered, according to a messenger who has reached Little Rock.

Deaths and destruction of property have been reported from many towns throughout the central and northern parts of Arkansas, the southern part of Missouri, the north-western part of Mississippi and the south-western part of Illinois.

Great Damage to Crops.

Damage to the crops will be very high. The loss to the farmers will be irrecoverable, as it is too late to get another crop. Hundreds of farm buildings were blown away.

Twelve persons lost their lives and seventy-five were injured in the tornado, which swept a path one hundred yards through the residential district of Jackson, Miss. More than two hundred and fifty homes were wrecked or damaged, and the property loss was put at $500,000. Mrs. Annie Jelks and Walter Dremott were the white victims of the storm. A storm south of Vicksburg killed three white persons and caused damage over a wide radius. The village of Pineville suffered heavily and other regions throughout the State report storm damage.

Two white persons were killed in Jackson, Miss., when a building collapsed. In other buildings near there a score of persons were injured, some of them seriously.

Relief trains have been run into the wide area of the stricken districts, and aside from the relief required in the towns, the rescue parties have found many in the rural sections needing aid. In many of these sections, far from towns, there were no physicians to attend the injured, and the relief parties did what they could.

These trains were started from Little Rock, Memphis, Poplar Bluff, Jackson, Miss., and Hot Springs. All of them carried physicians and medical supplies.

At Hot Springs, where four persons are reported killed, several of the large hotels were damaged and the principal structures at the Oak Lawn race track were destroyed.

Special Service in Trinity Church

A service to commemorate the death of Lord Kitchener and the men who lost their lives in the Jutland naval battle, was held last evening in Trinity Methodist Church. Stirring and appropriate addresses were given by His Honour Judge Huycke and Mr. Duncan Walker. There was a large attendance.

In the morning a Flower Service was held for the Sunday School.

PRISON FARM PROVES BILL OF EXPENSE TO WELLINGTON COUNTY

Deputation Will Wait on Government Regarding Expense of Inquests On Prisoners.

Guelph, June 12.— The council of Wellington will send a deputation to wait on the provincial cabinet in reference to the matter of paying for inquests on all the men who die at the Ontario reformatory, which is in Wellington County, near this city:

When a death takes place there, no matter whether from natural or violent causes, it is compulsory that an inquest be held. The bill for the expenses in connection with this, with the exception of the coroner's fee, which is paid by the Government, is sent to the county for payment.

County Treasurer Fox stated this morning at the council:

"The county is not being used right in this. These men are not brought here at the option of the county. The Government brings them. So far this year the bill for inquests has amounted to $159."

The complaint was also made that the county had to pay costs whenever prisoners charged with escaping are arraigned before the police magistrate after being lodged in the count jail.

I.O.O.F. Decoration Day

The members of Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, and Peterboro Lodge, No. 111, I.O.O.F., are requested to assemble in the I.O.O.F. Hall, on Sunday, June 18th, at 2 o'clock, p.m., and proceed to Little Lake Cemetery for the Annual Decoration Ceremony. All visiting Brethren in the city are cordially invited.

Trying To Win Roosevelt Over

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 12.—Another party of pilgrims from the G.O.P., including George W. Wickersham, George B. Cortelyou and William Loeb, Jr., will advance on Sagamore Hill to-day waving the olive branch and talking peace in an effort to win Roosevelt over to the support of Hughes.

Although he is still full of old time vigor, there were lines in T. R.'s face to-day which indicate that the G.O.P. dealt him a severe blow on Saturday.

IN MEMORY OF KITCHENER

In all the city churches yesterday, the services had special reference to the late Lord Kitchener, with at St. John's a touchingly solemn incident of the service. The preacher concluded his tribute of the dead warrior-statesman by requesting the congregation to stand at the offertory, with head bowed and with silent prayer, while the organ played the Dead March in Saul. This was done with beautiful effect and the moments were affectingly solemn.

New Biscuit Case For Juby's Store

The grocery store of Messrs. Juby Bros., Charlotte street, has been improved by the installing of a new Christie biscuit case. This addition to the interior fittings of the store contains 18 patent tilting biscuit boxes, for showing a corresponding number of Christie's fancy biscuits. The case is made additionally handy by five fruit bins at the bottom and five shelves for displaying other goods. The range of biscuits and fruits stocked by Juby Bros. gives patrons a wide range of selection.

"BUCK UP!"

My friends, when it's raining
Cut out the complaining,
We've been up against it before,
Cheer up and remember
'Twixt now and September
There'll be double-headers galore.

For every postponement
There'll be an atonement
In shape of a fine double bill;
At two for a quarter
We'll get a rip-snorter,
The lapse in the schedule to fill.

Be blithesome and breezy
And don't feel uneasy
Or down in the mouth when it rains;
A just compensation
Brings equalization;
And losses are squared by the gains.

Then let your eyes twinkle
And banish the wrinkle
That furrows the forehead with woe:
This world is for frolics,
And cold melancholics
Are having a pretty tough row.

THE FATHER AND HIS BOY

A father writes in perplexity about his eighteen-year-old boy, and closes his letter thus:

"He seems to resent my making decisions for him, and will not bend to my will."

The boy, of course, is right and the father is wrong. No eighteen-year-old boy, if he is worth his salt, should have his decisions made for him by his father or by anyone else. We fathers are too apt to forget that our sons are personalities: that they have a right to their own lives; that they must live those lives, not we. We can plan for them, explain, guide, direct, counsel, but there is where the father must stop. If ever a boy is going to be worth anything to himself and to the world at large it is time at eighteen for him to begin to learn to decide things for himself. "But he will make mistakes," says some anxious father or mother. He certainly will: and he will take the consequences for them too. So did you, so did I: so will our sons and grandsons after us. But a boy's fiber is not hardened by sparing him those experiences: he must have them if he is to be a red-blooded man and not a member of the cherub choir. And we fathers must stand by and see our sons pass through those experiences, and see them get the hard knocks of life. It is not easy to do—certainly not: but it is life, and inexorable. No lesson is really learned save by experience. Even if a boy is of his father's flesh and blood, he is not his father: he is himself: different in every respect: and after the fundamentals of training have been laid he is entitled to the development of his own personality.—Ladies' Home Journal.

RAPID PROGRESS IS BEING MADE AT BORDEN

New Camp Where Peterborough Soldiers Are Likely to Go Has Been the Driest Spot in Canada During the Past Month in Spite of the Heavy Rains---1000 Men Are at Work There.

CAMP BORDEN, June 10. — The driest spot in Canada during the past four weeks has been Camp Borden, the new military encampment 65 miles north of Toronto. Though it has rained most every day —sometimes two and three times a day—the area known as Pine Plains on which the tented city will be placed is as dry as the proverbial board. This is due to the nautral drainage of the land, the sandy nature of the soil and the turf which covers the ground like a thick hide This sod forms a hard, yet spongy surface, and no rubbers are even needed when a person walks over the plains. These facts are highly interesting in view of the fact that tens of thousands of men in khaki will be sleeping and marching on this same turf soon.

Colonel Robert Low, general manager of Bates, MacMahon and Company, Ottawa, contractors, and the builder of the camp, has complained of two features which have tended to retard his work. He has brought men from Halifax to Port Arthur to construct the camp, but Toronto merchants are altogether too slow, he says, in filling the large orders for machinery and supplies which he has been placing. Montreal wholesalers carried him off his feet, declares Colonel Low, when he undertook to prepare the first camp at Valcartier in August, 1914. His other complaint is about the rainy weather. The latter has not caused a cessation of work but it has made the men uncomfortable. Many of the labourers have nothing more than the clothes on their backs and sometimes these clothes do not come off for days.

LIKE A BATTLEFIELD.

During the past week Pine Plains has resembled a battlefield. In fact it would have supplied continuous war atmosphere for a motion picture company. At the edge of the thick forests which skirt the wide plains arise long thin lines of flame and smoke from hundreds of uprooted stumps and brush. Occasionally a big clump of tree roots is mined and earth, turf and debris shoot into the air. Back across the plains is the motley collection of the construction tents and workshops, the tops of which are barely visible because of he rolling ground. Truly a war picture.

The first street of the camp has been named. It is Hughes Avenue.

On either side of this thoroughfare will be pitched the tents of many battalions. If 40,000 troops are accommodated at Camp Borden, then about 8,000 tents will be visible from the head of this street.

Camp Borden is far from being one mere plateau of rolling ground. There are extensive woods and deep ravines, also heavily wooded, while through the Government property run four streams, the Matarasaua Pine and Mad Rivers and Bear Creek. One portion of the camp area is also intersected by the Grand Trunk spur and this railway line, as well as the water courses, woods and valleys, will probably be the scene of many tactical exercises during the summer period.

The thousand workmen on the staff of Colonel Low have been working steadily from dawn to dusk each day, Sundays included. The breakfast call is sounded at 4.45 a.m. and work starts at 5.30. The men work until 11 a.m., when they knock off three-quarters of an hour for the mid day meal. Supper time comes at 5 p.m. and the evening session of work continues from 5.45 to 8.30. Then everybody goes to bed. There has been little, if any, diversion from work, but practically all the men are satisfied with conditions inasmuch as they are well paid and well fed. Several labourers quit, however, after which Colonel Low issued the following characteristic order:

"Any workman who stops work on his own account and has not been discharged will not be paid until the usual pay day, notwithstanding that all his family may be dead or dying. The death rate during the past two weeks has been simply enormous. The post cards, telegrams and letters which the workmen have received strike me that there must be an epidemic of diseases in Canada."

The headquarters staff of the camp, during the construction period, has consisted of the following: Colonel R. S. Low, commandant; Lieut.-Col. A. P. De Roche, R.E., representing Ottawa; Captain David Barry, camp engineer, who has assisted Colonel Low in the building of other Canadian military camps, and Mr. T. Aird Murray, the Toronto engineer, who gave Toronto people their first taste of chlorine in drinking water. Mr. Murray is looking after arrangements for the water supply here.

Colonel Low has been the man in charges of the preparation of Valcartier Camp, Quebec;, Camp Hughes, Manitoba; Sarcee Camp, Alberta, and Camp Borden, for Ontario. He has also built important military works at Halifax and the big rifle ranges at Ottawa.

ANGUS, FIFTY YEARS AGO.

A half century ago Angus, the nearest centre to Camp Borden, was a hustling lumber camp. Hundreds of French-Canadian lumber-jacks operated from this town and logging trains brought millions of feet of lumber into the place. There were lumber mills and extensive shipping arrangements at Angus and many men made and lost fortunes in and around the busy centre. Tales are also told of many fights between the rough woodsmen, and there is a house, haunted of course, in which several bodies were once found, it is declared. Angus was on the main line of the Hamilton and Northern Railway, a terminus of which was located at the foot of Yonge street, Toronto. This Toronto station is now used as the terminal for the handling of fruit shipments. The main forests of this district were practically destroyed by the large gangs, however, and the activities of Angus gradually dwindled until the centre became a mere shadow of its former self. A re-awakening has taken place with the construction of the military camp only two miles away. An evidence of this life renewal is contained in the report that the small temperance hotel at Angus changed hands three times in one day after the announcement was made regarding the camp. Small stores are being erected on the several streets of Angus, but these building operations are slow because of the congestion of freight. The booths and halls are being erected as fast as possible, however, and old discarded structures are being rebuilt, so that a new city is rising once more as if by magic.

THREE ACTIONS BEFORE COUNTY COURT TO-MORROW

A docket of three cases will be presented at the June sessions of the County Court which opens to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. Laura Sloan, a housmaid, seeks $1,000 damages from John Buller, plumber, whom she charges with a breach of promise, and seduction under promise of marriage. The defendant makes a complete denial in his reply. Gordon and Widdifield for plaintiff. D. O'Connell for defendant.

Another jury case is the damage action, Glover vs. Tully for $2,137 growing out of the County Court hearing of ill-treatment of Evelyn Glover, the little daughter of Robert Glover, Ashburnham.

The third case is a non-jury action between W. J. Kennedy, blacksmith, and Mrs. Innes, both claiming $100 due Garnet Innes, the balance of $175 for a buggy which he sold Dr. F. I. Robinson.

HUGHES BEGINS HIS CAMPAIGN

Republican Candidate For President is Already Under Way

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 12.—Charles E. Hughes, Republican candidate for President, opened his campaign with a rush to-day with a trip to New York for a conference with party leaders.

Hughes arrived at seven a.m. and went directly to the Hotel Astor, where he displayed true campaign form by sending word he would see newspapermen at once.

Still full of fight, the Roosevelt radicals of the Progressive party will storm Oyster Bay to-day in an effort to convince the Colonel that he should accept the Progressive nomination for President.

Delegates, returned from the Chicago convention, to-day said that it was still the consensus of opinion of the Progressives that T. R. should accept the nomination of the party he fathered, and that the party positively would not endorse Hughes.

"The issue in this campaign will be flatly Berlin against Washington, with Hughes, the former protagonist, against Wilson," said one delegate.

TO-DAY'S PROGRAMME AT THE EMPIRE

Drama, Comedy and War Pictures —Marguerite Clarke in "Still Waters"

In "Still Waters," a novel story of circus and rural life, by Edith Barnard Delano, the dainty Marguerite Clark renders one of the most effective characterizations of her entire motion picture career. Beginning as a quaint comedy with a very delightful romance, the story gradually develops into a thrilling drama, which reaches a tremendous climatic degree of power in the rescue of Nesta, the girl impersonated by Miss Clark, from a burly circus ring-master, who has trapped her in a deserted canal-boat, whither she has fled to escape his objectionable attentions. "Still Waters," with its beautiful vistas, the novel canal-boat atmosphere, the reproduction of an entire itinerant circus, and its amusing comedy and unusual dramatic strength, enables Miss Clark to display in a measure hitherto unsuspected her versatile and bewitching powers.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

Magistrate Dumble Reiterates His Refusal to Deal With Delinquents at His Home

Twenty summonses have been issued against as many owners of dogs, who have failed to obtain the necessary license. The usual fine of two dollars is imposed by Police Magistrate Dumble, the sum of forty dollars will be diverted into the civic treasury in addition to the regular license fee. A similar batch was dealt with in Police Court last week. This may have had something to do with the large number of licenses that were issued on Saturday. During the day, fifty licenses were issued.

FINED THIS MORNING

In this morning's Police Court a Water street resident was fined two dollars for harbouring a dog without a license. The twenty summonses issued this morning will be dealt with in the course of a few days. In commenting upon this phase of police court work, Magistrate Dumble, this morning, reiterated his refusal to deal with delinquents at his home. "Wherever a man receives a summons he makes a bolt for my house with the object of explaining", said Magistrate Dumble. I want it understood that the business of the Police Court will be transacted in the Police Court not at my home or anywhere else."

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.

Mr Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr Chase's Ointment, and in less than every parcel me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

Why Dyes Are Scarce

Materials That Formerly Went Into Their Composition Now in High Explosives

It is said that many people do not yet fully understand the condition of the dye market this year.

Owing to the war much of the materials that were formerly used in the composition of dyes are now being used in the manufacture of the high explosives.

The aniline products are becoming scarcer and scarcer. The chemists are now largely using vegetable products in the composition of dye stuffs.

In view of the present abnormal condition of affairs it would be well for the buying public to be patient when you purchase any article with colour in it, and do not expect too much about the fastness of its shade.

Under present conditions the color will very likely run, and no merchant can guarantee that it will not do so.

The manufacturers have all sent out circulars setting forth the fact that they cannot guarantee any colour.

The British chemists are able to make just as good dyes as can any country in the world, but under present conditions the ingredients cannot be obtained in sufficient quantities. Be patient, do not complain to the merchant, he cannot help it.

STRAWBERRY PUDDING.

Beat three eggs without separating until light; add one pint of milk sift in three and a half cups of flour and beat until perfectly smooth. Add one tablespoon of butter melted, one half tea-spoon of salt and four tea spoons of baking powder then add one pint of hulled strawberries dredged with flour. Turn the pudding into a greased mould, cover tightly, stand it in boiling water and boil continuously for three hours. Serve with hard and liquid sauce.

Societies Attend Divine Service

"Joseph and Kitchener as Empire Builders"—This Was the Subject of Interesting Address at George Street Church

The Independent Order of Foresters and Woodmen of the World attended divine service last evening in George Street Methodist Church. Despite the inclement weather there was a fairly large attendance. The Rev. R. G. Peever, pastor of George Street Church, welcomed the members of the Order, which, he said, was based on Christian principles. The subject of his discourse was taken from Genesis 45: 5—"For God did send me before you to preserve life." The speaker referred to the death of Lord Kitchener, whom he characterized as an Empire builder together with Joseph, who during the seven years of famine that fastened itself upon Egypt, took charge of the situation and brought order out of chaos. Kitchener performed a similar service for his country. After spending some of his earlier years in establishing order and good government in Egypt, Kitchener returned home and subsequently was called upon to organize Britain's army for service in the present gigantic conflict. A deep sense of duty prompted him to accept the responsibility.

The marshalls were: Mr. J. W. Buyers for the I.O.F., and Mr. Fred Dummitt for the Woodmen. The Salvation Army band played the societies to the Church. The attendance was between ninety and one hundred, which was particularly gratifying when it is remembered that the parade assembled in a downpour After the service the societies returned to the hall, where a short meeting was held with Mr. W. G. McKee, C.R., of the I.O.F., presiding. Speeches were made by Messrs. W. Madill, A. Allison and A. Webb of the Foresters, and Messrs. R. Warnam, F. Sutcliffe and R. H. Carr of the Woodmen. Rev. R. G. Peever also addressed the members. The meeting concluded with the passing of votes of thanks to Rev. Mr. Peever, the trustees of George Street Church, the Choir and the Salvation Army Band. The two societies were Sherwood Forest Camp of the Woodmen of the World and Court Chemong, No. 530, Independent Order of Foresters.

Simplified Menu Bewilders Berlin

New Law and Card Ordinance Raise Question, When Is Meat Not Meat?

Shortage of Ingredients for the National Beverage Results from the British Blockade.

BERLIN, June 8. — Berlin to-day celebrated the introduction of a simplified bill of fare, the new ordinance providing that publicans may offer only two meat dishes to guests, who may eat only one, while table d'hotes may consist only of one soup, one non-meat entree, one meat dish, and either cheese, fruit, or dessert.

Simple as this sounds, native and alien patrons of hotels and restaurants found themselves to-day eating their way through a labyrinth of magisterial meat ordinances that baffle even head waiters, since the combination of meat, lard and simplified menu rules has created a gastronomic problem of the utmost complexity, to wit. "When is meat not meat?"

According to Berlin Magistrates cold meats and sausages served in sandwich form as minor appendices to vegetables are not meat in any sense, and may be offered as freely as desired on bills of fare and may be consumed without meat coupons. On the other hand, poultry and game are meat in the sense of the simplified bill of fare ordinance, and thus are subject to the rule that only two meat dishes may publicly be offered and only one eaten, whereas they are not meat in the sense of the meat card ordinance, thus requiring no meat coupons. Internal organs are meat in be sense of the meat card ordinance, but not in the sense of the simplified bill of fare law. Thus restaurateurs may offer kidney, liver, lung, etc., ad libitum, but their consumption is permissible only on presentation of meat coupons.

Ordering a square meal to-day in Berlin involves considerable hard brain work, but the present situation caused by the conflicting strategy of the meat card and bill of fare ordinances will undoubtedly be mastered with practice. The potato bread spirit has enabled the Teutons to swallow this latest food novelty, too.

Serious is the news from Dresden that the Saxon Government plans the introduction of "beerless days," presumably throughout the kingdom of Saxony, as a result of the growing beer shortage. It is intimated that this will have no effect on the final outcome of the war, except possibly to make the Saxons fight all the harder against the English, whose blockade is blamed for the shortage of beer ingredients.

Ft. Vaux Torn From Base By German Fire

Six Hundred Gallant Defenders Fought for 170 Hours Without Sleep—All Believed Killed.

(By Charles F. Bertelli.)

PARIS, June 10.—I was able to obtain from an officer the first eye-witness account of the battle for Fort Vaux to reach Paris.

The fury with which the French fought to hold Fort Douaumont after its recapture was not exceeded in any previous engagement, but I am assured by this officer, who witnessed both struggles, that it was surpassed by the bravery with which Major Raynal and his handful of men battled for 170 hours without a wink of sleep to beat off the swarming Prussians.

The wonder is that the terrific preliminary shelling did not blast to atoms every man in Major Raynal's battalion.

The heavy shells simply uprooted the fort's concrete foundations and blew its surface to smithereens, with the result that the underground casements and corridors were exposed. Never in history before has artillery fire accomplished this result.

Silence After Storm.

Seven days before the Germans seized the ruins the bombardment suddenly ceased. An impressive silence followed.

Then the French field guns began to speak, the machine guns crackle. Guttural cries, followed by screams, rose up to the fort—all signs indicating that the Prussians were again attempting to storm it.

Some detachments having already gained a foothold on the northern moat, the German guns could no longer fire without imperiling their lives.

Now began the seven-day fight with machine guns, rifles, bayonets, hand-grenades, poison-gas, and liquid flames.

Two German regiments, renewed daily endeavoured to rush the breach in the northern ramparts where the Norman gate formerly stood. The assailants had to pass between two stout concrete posts twelve feet apart.

The defence of this narrow way was strengthened by well-placed guns, which, with bombers placed behind cover afforded by the fort's debris, inflicted the ghastliest kind of slaughter on the two regiments herded into the narrow approach and beating in ceaseless waves against the entrance.

50,000 Massed At Gate.

So many times had the regiments to be withdrawn, owing to the frightful casualties, that fully 50,000 Teutons attempted to progress at this point.

Splashed with blood, his moustache singed to the roots, Major Raynal led his slowly dwindling 600 in the defense of the gate. Every man wore a gas mask of asbestos.

Helmets and brestplates protected them from the flaming liquid which the Germans used profusely. Now and then a defender would fall to the rear, draw off his mask, snatch a few mouthfuls of food and immediately return to the fighting line.

So efficient was this defense that it would probably have held the entrance. But throughout the week the Germans employed two army corps in working around to the eastern and western slopes, and on the sixth day the ring was complete.

Communications were cut off, food been brought up by communicating and ammunition which hitherto had trenches, in canvas grips beneath the deadly German screen fire, could now no longer be taken, for from that moment the fate of the fort was sealed.

Cock-Crow of Victory.

At the foot of the southern slope, hoarse shouting indicated to the Frenchmen watching this now isolated battle that the Germans had again attacked. Then a quiet interval was broken by a shrill cock-crow, the signal from the defenders that the attack had been beaten off.

These cock-crows were many, telling of the desperate onslaughts oft repeated, every one of them provoking storms of cheering from the trenches to the south.

Finally, at 5:30 on Wednesday morning, came the last piercing crow. But the fort must have fallen soon after, because no further sign came from Raynal's heroes.

Although there naturally is no positive information on this point, it is certain that the 600 never surrendered, but when the last cartride had been fired, the last bomb hurled on the Teutons now triumphantly swarming through the Norman gateway, they must have thrown themselves upon the Germans with the bayonet till the last man either was disarmed or killed.

AUSTRIANS HAVE EVACUATED CZERNOWITZ

GERMANS COMMENCE AN OFFENSIVE AGAINST RUSSIANS

New Heroes of Air Enthrall French Nation

People Learn With Surprise That Le Bourhis Has Died in Service at Verdun

One of the surprises of last month to the French nation was the news that Le Bourhis, comedian of the air, the "Mark Twain of Aviation," as he was termed in the Paris Journal, had been in active service as an aviator ,and after notable exploits, had been killed at Verdun. Another surprise was to learn that Georges Boillot, long an automobile star, had become an aviator, and had performed a feat worthy of mention in an official communication.

In France, as in Germany, public interest is aroused by few deeds of heroism except those performed by airmen. In both countries all accounts of exploits of the members of the "fifth arm" are read with avidity, but the names of the airmen are usually withheld, except on rare occasions when the military authorities think the personality of the aviator or the character of the exploit justifies the mention of names, and is likely to stimulate the morale of the nation.

Le Bourhis was celebrated before the war. He used to jump from relatively low altitudes, with various forms of parachutes, and hoped to further the day when individual flying without the aid of machinery would be possible by the use of some of his inventions in the form of over coats of a voluminous kind which would open and fulfil the service of a parachute. His adventures with the police, who chased him from post to pillar to prevent him from carrying out what they regarded as suicidal purposes, and Le Bourhis insisted were scientific experiments, added to the gayety of the nation, especially as the inventor was endowed with a keen wit.

NEARLY LOSES LIFE.

On account of the obstacles which were put in his way in France he went to Austria, where his experiments were not interfered with by the police. There he met with an accident of the kind the French authorities had expected and he nearly lost his life.

As soon as he recovered he gave up the career of parachutist and took up aviation. He became a brilliant pilot and devoted himself to freak exploits in the air which made his shows at Longchamps one of the popular attractions of the capital. When war was declared he went to the front as a soldier, and was killed in an air fight at Verdun, being then a sub-lieutenant and a knight of the Legion of Honour.

Jacques Montane, an aviation expert, who knew Le Bourhis intimately, endeavoured to induce him to put into writing some of his experiences but the comedian-aviator was chary in speaking of himself. He did consent, however, to tell a story of one alleged performance—a keen bit of satire on the exaggerated literature of aviation work. It was as follows:

"My finest flight, which was my only stirring and even emotional experience in the air, was in the month of August, 1915, in the heat of the day, soon after luncheon. The weather was oppressive. I was flying already for long hours, dragging after my chaser apparatus, a grappling-iron. Nothing on the horizon; the calm was perfect.

5,600 METERS IN AIR

"I am drowsy and the heat overwhelms me. My altimeter, however, indicates that I am at an altitude of 5,600 meters. The sky becomes violet. Suddenly a black spot appears on the horizon. It grows rapidly in size and it is coming toward me. It is an enormous black aeroplane marked with white crosses, a Boeche. Attention! We are going to meet.

"With a violent effort I hurl my machine in a vertiginous swoop above the dark aeroplane. There is a shock; the grappling-iron catches; I draw the cable; it holds. At the end of the cable, solidly hooked by the iron, the conquered Boche aeroplane swings like a toy.

"I am joyous and I laugh. I laugh repeatedly. For several minutes every thing goes well. Then suddenly my motor weakens and my flight becomes difficult. The machine rolls softly from one wing to the other. Then it becomes heavy and I make desperate efforts to keep it up. I am now only at 4350 meters and brusquely my motor stops. There is a wild, precipitous descent. The sweat drops from my chin. I struggle, for I must hold on. Below me I can see the deep trenches and, in the centre, a broad river, dark and hard as a mirror.

SUDDEN SHOCK.

The Boche bird swings at the end of my grappling iron. I smother but I must hold. The fall continues; a wing is broken, everything is black. I fall like a stone and it seems long. Then there is a sudden shock.

"I open my eyes. On one side are my cap and my pipe and the other a reclining chair overturned. Standing up in front of me is Jensen, and he looks down at me with a sarcastic look."

This description was responsible for a sudden change of style in the literature of aerial warfare.

Georges Boillot is the aviator who performed the service described in a recent official communication, as follows: "One of our pilots, in the course of a stirring fight, brought down on aviatik which fell within our lines at Suippes."

It was nearly a week before the public learned that it was the winner of the automobile Grand Prix of 1912 and 1913 who had accomplished this feat.

At the beginning of the war Boillot's name was constantly mentioned as automobile driver for General Joffre. It was told how he dashed from one end of the line to the other in the critical days before the battle of the Marne and how he broke all records in delivering messages and dispatches of importance.

At one time he was surrounded by a regiment of German soldiers, and on other occasions he escaped death almost by hair breadths. The most delicate missions, where skill, discretion, and speed were required, were intrusted to him. Once he crossed France in a single day, and again he was on the point of establishing a remarkable speed record between Joffre's headquarters and the town of Pontarlier, when, as he neared the latter place, he was stopped by the police and he and his companions were detained 48 hours on the suspicion of being spies.—New York Times.

Re-organization The Real Reason of The Italian Crisis

Opposition Parties Desired Ministry to Represent the Whole Nation

ROME, June 13.—The present ministerial crisis may seem unexpected and inexplicable abroad, where it is difficult to follow internal politics here, but it had been inevitable since two months ago, when the Chamber adjourned on a vote giving a large majority for the cabinet after the leaders of the different parties had urged the Government to widen the composition so as to permit all parties to participate effectively in the preparations and direction of the war.

Premier Salandra and Foreign Minister Sonnino not only refused to add new members to the cabinet, but, adhering to the traditions of their political upbringings, abstained from keeping in touch through the press with parliament, the political organization and the country, which were so patriotically eager to be taken into the Government's confidence.

Had the progress of the Italian campaign continued as satisfactory as it was last year the cabinet might still have held out, notwithstanding the criticism of the Opposition. This did not assume serious form, as was not desired to lower the prestige of the Government before the enemy. But at the first reverses in the Trentino it was generally felt that the time had come to give the country a cabinet better fitted to carry on the struggle to a successful conclusion.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad, and smothering feelings came on till I thought that I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

ROBERTSON NOW BRITAIN'S GREATEST SOLDIER

Astonishing Career of the Man Who May Be War Minister

RISE FROM RANKER TO ARMY CHIEF

A SCORNER OF RED TAPE, WITH EFFICIENCY AS HIS WATCH-WORD.

With the disappearance of Lord Kitchener, Gen. Sir William Robertson stands out as the most famous and efficient soldier in Great Britain, with the likelihood that he will become Secretary of State for War in succession to his Great Chief.

From servant to head of the thinking machine of the British army in the greatest war in history, this is the record of Gen. Sir William Robertson, who a few months ago was appointed Chief of the General Staff at the War Office in London, and virtual Commander in Chief of the British armies.

Since his appointment he has taken over several of the duties formerly performed by Lord Kitchener, leaving his great chief freer to devote his time to the work more properly belonging to the province of the civilian Minister of War, for that is the post which Lord Kitchener, although the greatest soldier of his day, had occupied for some time before his untimely end.

Robertson's rise to the very highest possible position in the British army is unique—to use the word that is often abused in its most accurate sense. There is no case on record of a ranker attaining the highest command in the British Army and only one other case in which a ranker even came within measurable distance of it.

FROM RANKER TO ARMY CHIEF

The only other case at all comparable with Robertson's is that of General Sir Hector MacDonald, that great soldier who literally fought his way up from the ranks to a generalship, and who was admittedly one of the most brilliant soldiers of his time. Macdonald might have gone as far as Robertson had he lived, but it will be remembered he committed suicide in Paris while on his way home from Ceylon to face a court martial on grave charges affecting his private morality.

Robertson is a genuine ranker, of Scottish descent. He is the son of a farm labourer in Lincolnshire where he was born 56 years ago, and his preliminary education was received at the village school. When he left school he worked in the fields for a time, and then he had a great piece of luck for one of such humble origin. He was received into one of the great houses in the neighbourhood as a servant.

ENLISTED IN THE LANCERS.

At 18 the military fever seized him and he enlisted. He chose a crack regiment, the 16th Lancers, and he must have made an ideal cavalryman for even now he is the beau ideal of a dashing soldier, tall, well set up, and with an extraordinary firm chin and jaw. He had no one to help him along, and he served in the ranks for ten years, but before long his ambition was roused and he probably foresaw that in his case the soldier's knapsack really did contain the field marshal's baton. He began then the study of languages and of military history, both of which have stood him in such good stead in his subsequent career.

It is not necessarily surprising that this labourer's son should be esteemed the possessor of the most brilliant brain in the British army, for brains are not inherited, but it is surprising that with his lack of educational advantages he should be one of the most brilliant linguists. His French in fact, is said to be better than his English, for, in spite of his long association with men whose early opportunities were better, his English still smacks of the soil and the barrack room, and possesses a fullness and flavour that rather endear him to the private soldier and make him a terror of the shirker and incompetent among his officers, for Robertson's is not the temper that suffers fools gladly.

An acquaintance who dined with him a few days ago related that another member of the party, an officer in the Quartermaster General's department, was complaining bitterly of the interference of a civilian official with the execution of some rush contracts for the army. "What would you advise me to do, Robertson?" he asked.

"I'd—well clear the ..... out," was Robertson's reply, and he would have said exactly the same thing if the civilian official had been present.

Robertson's French, however, is the purest French of the Academic, and French officers who confer with him always come away exclaiming on its excellence and wondering where such a typical Briton acquired an accent of such purity. He also speaks German with easy fluency and has a good working knowledge of Russian and Italian, while there is hardly one of the scores of Indian dialects in which he cannot make himself understood, while in many of them he speaks like a native.

When he was chief of staff to Sir John French in France during the earlier stages of the war he used to delight in visiting the Indian lines and talking familiarly with the sepoys ad troopers about their homes. Many of them declared that there was no spot in India which Robertson Sahib Bahadur did not know, and no man in India with whom he could not talk.

SERVICE IN INDIA.

After his ten years' service in the 16th Lancers, now known as "King Alfonso's Own," Robertson received his first commission as second lieutenant in the 3rd Dragoon Guards and was sent to India. He chose the Indian service wisely, knowing that he could not live on his pay in crack regiments at home, and moreover, at that time India was the place for a young officer who intended to work and make a career.

It was in India that he saw his first fighting, in the Chitral campaign, and it was in this campaign that his career nearly came to an end. He was then Lieutenant Robertson, and he was out on a reconnaissance. Requiring a sketch of the enemy's position he handed his sword to a native guide and crawled forward. Suddenly the guide fired on him with a double-barreled sporting rifle, the charge from one barrel passing through one sleeve of his tunic and the charge from the other barrel passing through the other sleeve, but without scratching him.

Robertson dashed for the man, firing with his revolver; but the revolver jammed, and he threw it away and grappled with the traitor and choked him into insensibility, but not before he was cut over the head with his own sword. Two more native guides made a rush for him; but before they could reach him his Ghurko guard arrived and rescued him.

IN SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

He won the Distinguished Service Order in this campaign and definitely attracted the attention of his superiors, chief among whom was the late Lord Roberts, who formed a very high opinion of Robertson's ability. When the South Africa war broke out it found Robertson a Captain, but his ability as a linguist and strategist had been recognized by this time and he was made an intelligence officer at headquarters. He came out of that war a colonel and then he did a most amazing thing for a ranker officer, or indeed, for any officer of his seniority. He secured permission to attend the Staff College at Camberley in order that he might obtain the magic letter 'P. S. C.' (Passed Staff College, after his name, and the right to wear the red collar tabs which indicate this distinction.

DIRECTOR OF STAFF COLLEGE

Of course, he passed brilliantly, for there was little of the art of war that the Staff College professors could teach him, and the most surprising thing of all he, a ranker, a graduate of the village school, was appointed director of the Staff College in 1910. While he was there he insisted on a close study of the various Continental army systems, and there is little doubt that whatever success the British have achieved so far in this war, is due in large part to the education al system for staff officers instituted by this ex-private soldier, at Britain's chief military training school.

By this time he was a Major-General, and in 1914 he became a Lieutenant-General. He became a full general in 1915, and he is probably next on the list for promotion to the rank of Field Marshal. In his present position, however, his name is signed to the orders which all the field marshals in the army, except Kitchener himself, had to obey.

Like most men of his type, Robertson is a glutton for work, and hardly knows what fatigue means. He is also a master of detail. When he was Quartermaster General to Sir John French at the Aldeshot command, in the two or three years before the war began, he made himself familiar with every detail of provisioning, clothing, and generally catering for the army. He introduced a lot of forms, one being what is known as the iron rations,' the little package of condensed food which each man must carry with him and which he must not touch until the last extremity.

CUT ALL THE RED TAPE.

What he learned then stood the army in good stead in the early days of the fighting in France and Flanders. Never once during the terrible retreat from Mons and later during the pursuit of the flying Germans to the present line did the British army go short of food or supplies. Robertson, who was Chief of Staff to Sir John French, cut all the red tape and got the goods to the places where they were wanted. On one occasion a trainload of food arrived at a French port and was badly needed at the front. For some reason the transport officer said it could not be loaded and dispatched that night. Robertson hear of the delay, as he heard of everything, and motored to the wharf.

"I am going to stay here until that train leaves," he told the officer in charge, "and if I miss my supper you soon will go back to England."

RETARDING THE NAVIES

Speed in Big Gun Making is Vital Point

It is well understood among naval men that the limiting element in the question of rapid construction of a navy is the speed with which the guns and armor can be produced. Speaking on this question, Hector C. Bywater, a British naval critic, draws attention to the fact that during the naval agitation of 1909 in England, the First Lord, Mr. McKenna, stated that it was not beyond the power of the Krupp establishment to produce all the guns and armor necessary for eight Dreadnoughts a year. This output would be additional to the enormous home and foreign orders for war material taken care of at Essen. Hence, having in view the increased size of the Krupp works, this authority believes that the Essen and affiliated factories could supply the guns and armor for all the Dreadnoughts and other ships which Germany is capable of building.

BAD COMPLEXION

Its Cause Impure, Impoverished Blood

To have a soft smooth skin, free from eruptions and unsightly blemishes, the blood must be maintained in a healthy condition.

Face powders, lotions and other toilet preparations may for a short time cover up a multitude of wrongs in the blood, but they cannot remove these red disfiguring pimples that are the bane of so many young ladies' lives.

Why not use Ferrozone? It is an unfailing cure for the worst kind of skin disease, the most effective on all blood purifiers, and cures bad complexion by removing its cause.

Ferrozone invigorates and purifies enfeebled blood. Makes it strong, rich and red. Ferrozone puts power into the blood to nourish the body and all its organs. It is a regulator of acknowledged merit, and is quite unrivalled as a remedy for Female disorders.

Mrs. Shanly of Pittsburg, Ont., says: "For five years my face was disfigured by raw bleeding eruptions that resisted all treatment.

"Three Kingston doctors did their best for me and when they acknowledged themselves beaten, I tried Ferrozone. The first box helped me quite a little, and by the time I had used six boxes I was cured. Ferrozone is a fine remedy for womanly disorders or all kinds and I can highly recommend it." (Signed), Mary Shanly.

Growing girls, women, men, in fact everybody can derive untold benefit from Ferrozone. It is a tonic for the blood, brain and nerves, and worth its price ten times over to everyone who uses it.

Three weeks' treatment contained in a box of sixty-three chocolate coated tablets, cost 50c., or three boxes for $1.25. Sold by all druggists.

Child Near Trenches

While a company was trudging along for the first line of trenches in Flanders, Private Impey found a little girl of about four years in a ditch by the roadside. No one could go back, and the soldiers took the girl into the trench and made her as comfortable as possible. In a few days she had recovered from the ill effects of the wet and exposure, and was running up and down the trench, the pet of all the officers and men. One day a bomb nearly filled in part of the trench. When the men had recovered from the shock, the sergeant-major asked a man to go and see that the child was safe. They had left her asleep in a sheltered corner, and there they found her, still sleeping!

The Waiter's Price.

It was a banquet where a notable gathering of politicians had assembled. A certain aspiring young attorney was among the number, and as he spied an influential judge at the far end of the parlour, he called the head waiter, slipped half a dollar into his hand, and whispered, "Put me next to Judge Spink at the table."

Upon being seated, however, he found he was at the other end of the room from the judge.

He called the head waiter to explain.

"Well, sir," replied the official, "the fact is that the judge gave me a dollar to put you as far from him as possible."

If woman could forgive the other woman as easily as she overlooks the faults of the bad man, the world would be better.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

In Hard Luck

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Had you asked in the village of Lorsin which was the happiest family in the community nine out of ten would have answered that Deacon Thurston and his wife filled the bill.

Deacon Thurston was long, lean and smiling. His wife was fat, content and good natured.

The deacon had never been known to get mad or to do a selfish action. His wife was seldom known to borrow, but was always willing to lend.

Of a summer evening they sat on the porch—sometimes for three hours—without speaking a word to each other.

After supper of a winter's evening the deacon built a roaring fire in the sitting room, and then with a candle in one hand and a blue pitcher in the other he descended to the cellar. The barrel of cider stood in the northeast corner. He knelt before it and drew exactly a pint and a half of its contents. This was a pint for himself and half a pint for his good wife. It was never more and never less. The apple bin stood against the south wall. He went to it and selected four fine Baldwins and put them in his contrail pocket and marched up the stairs. His wife was ready with a damp cloth to give the apples a wipe. Three of them were for the deacon and one for his wife.

One winter when the first snowfall came the deacon hitched up the old horse to the "pung," or homemade sled, and started for the woods. Four inches of snow had fallen, and it was a brisk morning. The old horse squealed and kicked up his heels, and the deacon heard himself saying:

"Well, if I ain't glad to be alive this morning, though they have raised my taxes 92 more this year!"

When the deacon and his outfit entered the woods there was a rabbit's trail leading in the direction he wanted to go. He therefore followed it. It led into the woods and stopped at a hollow log.

The deacon advanced to the log and with the head of his ax struck a resounding blow. He did not see whether the rabbit ran out or not. His ear caught a jingling sound, and in the excitement the presence of bunny was entirely forgotten. It was a jingle of money—not greenbacks, but solid coin.

Five minutes later he was splitting the old log wide open and his eyes were bulging out and his cheeks were pale. There was coin before him—heaps of coin. It was all silver coin.

One, two, three, four capfuls of silver treasure. He carried each capful to the sled and emptied its contents upon the horse blanket. When all the money had been gathered he tied up the blanket. When he finally mounted the sled he gave the old horse three or four sharp cuts with the whip. They were the first blows the old nag had ever received at his hands, and they started him out at a lumbering gallop.

Horse and driver appeared at home in a sweat. They did not stop at the kitchen door, though Mrs. Thurston was there to ask what had happened.

"S-s-h! You go right into the house, Judith, and I will be there in a minute."

In five minutes he followed after her and laid the bundle of coin on the kitchen table with a clink that made her exclaim:

"Oh, deacon, have you picked up a lot of horseshoes?"

"Horseshoes nothing!!" he whispered as he untied the blanket and folded it back.

"Why, it's silver—it's money!"

"Of course it is, and I didn't rob anybody to get it either. I found it in a holler log."

"Deacon, we are rich!" whispered the wife as she locked the kitchen door and pulled down the shades.

"You bet we are," replied the deacon. "Help me count the money."

They counted it. It took them a full hour, but it was over at last, and there was just $5,000.

"Deacon," said she after a moment, "we allus wanted to go to Niagara Falls and see the water wasting itself, but you could never spare the money. We will go now, won't we?"

The deacon was silent, but there was such a look on his face as she had never seen before. It was a look of avarice and selfishness combined, and it was not good to see. She had to repeat her question before he replied.

"Judith, I want you to understand," said the deacon as he walked backward and forward, "there is to be no nonsense about this money. I may have to go to Niagara Falls on business, but you will stay at home and care for the house. I shall have to have a new suit of clothes, but you can get along with your old ones."

"But I have not had a new bonnet in fourteen years," she wailed.

"Your old one is all right."

And that treasure from the hollow log bred dissension almost within the hour it was found. Husband and wife took opposite stands, and things were getting ripe for a separation when the deacon passed one of the coins at the grocery. The grocer found it counterfeit, and the whole pile of silver was overhauled, to find that every coin was bogus. It had been hidden in the log by those who made it. When the sad truth stood revealed and the deacon had fumed and fretted and his wife had shed a few tears he stood before her and queried:

"Well, Judith, what are we going to do about it?"

"Quit being idiots," she answered. And they then and there quit.

MONK REBUKED KAISER

Grave of Hessian Prince Near Ypres is Not Marked

Writing of a trip to the British front, Viggo Toepfer, a United States correspondent says: On our way to ruined Ypres, our cars stop at a hill where stands a famous Trappist monastery. Our party consists of several of high staff officers, a guide and the Spanish military attache at London. It is a glorious day and the country, of which we have an unobstructed view for miles around, lies bathed in sunshine at our feet. There is no wind and the aeroplanes, British as well as German, are busy reconnoitring and directing an incipient bombardment which promises to assume imposing proportions.

Out of the gate of the stately monastery comes a procession of the silent white-garbed monks, going out to their work in the fields as they have been doing daily even when the battle was raging all around them, before the Germans were finally driven back to their present positions barely visible in the distant horizon. The place in which we are standing has seen furious fighting several times in the course of the war. It was here that Prince Max of Hesse found his death with hundreds of his countryman and was buried by the monks. His last resting place is under one of the little wooden crosses which dot the landscape.

Which one? Nobody knows, not even the Kaiser, who when the news of his relative's death reached him wrote a long letter to the abbot imploring him to indicate where the Prince was buried that his last remains might be removed to Germany. The Kaiser offered rich treasures to the monastery for the information, but the abbot replied: "Your Majesty. When you who brought this atrocious war upon the world, and who, without provocation, attacked a peace-loving and patriotic little nation, have restored to heroic King Albert every inch of Belgian soil you now occupy, and when you have made restitution for all the crimes and atrocities committed by your soldiers, then and then only will I tell you where Prince Max is buried. Until then his grave will remain unknown among thousands of others."

"CONSCIENCE COMPS" WORKS AT THE FRONT

Those Who Object to War on Religious Principles Are Not Obliged to Fight

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, June 10.—Unique among all the variegated units of the armies on the Continent is the British Non-Combatant Corps—the conscientious objectors, who do not want to fight and who are not expected to fight. Not fear, but conscience, is their reason for being excused.

In England, where individual rights are so strongly recognized, the Quaker is not required to bear arms because it is against his religious scruples.

When compulsion was applied, another class arose. They said they had conscientious scruples against the taking of life. If they would not fight then they must work, the Government decided. Where a man who enters the army under normal conditions must drill for many months before he is sent to the front, the conscientious objector is given a few days of drill, put in khaki, and sent to France at once. There he wields the spade instead of the rifle.

"There are the N. C. O.'s doing their bit," said their commander, an officer with a strip of colours on his breast, who had been in several campaigns and was so badly wounded in this war that he was hardly fit for active service. "They get the same pay as the men in the trenches and the same rations, with the extra allowance of meat which is given to the labourers' corps."

At the time the N.C.C.'s were engaged in some railway work. Virtually all are men unused to manual labour; but though it was pretty hard at first, they said they would be inured to it in time. One was a B.A. of Cambridge University. None had any complaints to make. The majority were clerks, and those who were not were usually shopkeepers. Many were members of the Plymouth Brethren, a sect which holds much the same views as the Quakers. These said that it was against their creed to fight and they would not renounce their creed. They spoke quite frankly about the charge of cowardice which is made against them.

"I do not want to kill anybody. I do not believe in war," one said. As an exponent of passive resistance he was ready to work at command, but no powers could make him fight. "If we are sent over to work under shell fire I think that you will find that most of us will not flinch," he added.

One of the unmilitary characteristics which amuse the average British soldier is that the N.C.O.'s all address one another as "Mister." One mentioned that their conversation around the mess table was very "intellectual" and thoroughly enjoyable.

A shirker may not suddenly become a conscientious objector in order to escape service. Any one who aspires to the N. C. C. must prove that he held conscientious scruples against fighting before the war. One conscientious objector has already deserted. This back-slider decided to fight, and he is back in England drilling in a line regiment.

Women of France Fight Drink Evil

By C. F. Bertelli.

The dawn of a new area of prosperity for France after the war is assured by the crushing of the drink evil, against which the women of France are now working strenuously. No doubt at all is felt here about the success of their campaign. It is no idle saying that the power of women in France is increasing daily. While they are not devoting themselves for the moment to the suffrage question with the same ardor as the women of the United States and England, they are concentrating all their energies on the national drink scourge, which they regard as a far more vital question at the present time than that of votes.

Their first step has been to send an appeal—not only to every women throughout France but to all ministers, senators and deputies. That heed will be paid to their attack on alcohol is all the more certain, inasmuch as to a very great extent France at this moment derives her economic strength from the work of women and, therefore, their activity in public question cannot be ignored by politicians. For instance, it is recognized that they would no longer do munitions work or other tasks connected with the army unless the Government took action against the drink evil, either the Government would give way or the army could not go on fighting.

CONSCIOUS OF THEIR POWER

It is because they are conscious of their tremendous economic power at this moment that the Union nat French Women has just addressed the following flat to Parliament: —

"We await victory with a firm heart despite our anguish and our most painful sacrifices.

"Thanks to our husbands, sons and brothers, France will be delivered from the invading barbarian; if you will act, she will also be delivered from the internal scourge, ALCOHOL.

"No more half measures; no more compromises. Drink continues its ravages; you must save the COUNTRY from them.

"We expect you to deliver the country from drink by the abolition of the distilling privilege and the suppression of the use of alcohol as a beverage, while developing its commercial employment. Private interests must give way before the interests of the whole country.

"Millions of lives are at stake! France has a right to expect physical and moral strength from all her children.

"You are responsible for her future. The time is most opportune for action. To-morrow our armies will return covered with glory. To-morrow families will be reunited and children will again be given to France, who has passed through such a cruel trial. Let not these children be victims of alcohol! Protect them! Save the French race! Deliver France from drink!"

The national appeal delivered in every French home, is as follows:—

APPEAL TO WOMEN

"Frenchwomen!—The country asks the cruellest sacrifices of us.

"To defend her we have given our nearest and dearest.

"Our husbands, sons and brothers are fighting and dying for her.

"We accept these trials without weakening, because we are certain they will save France, and that our heroes will make her greater, more beautiful, stronger.

"But the German is not the only enemy. Here at home reigns a powerful scourge that degrades and kills—ALCOHOL.

"Frenchwomen. To arms! Banish drink from our sacred soil! Set a good example by banning it from your homes; fight against prejudice, exert pressure on the public authorities.

"We have an absolute duty! Let us become sisters in anguish and suffering let us unite in preparation for this other victory—THE DELIVERANCE OF FRANCE FROM ALCOHOL."

The strongest case against alcohol that has ever come from a Frenchwoman was made out by Mme. Maria Verone, the leading woman lawyer who addressing a fashionable gathering at the Paris Sorbonne, said:

WANT HEALTHY CHILDREN

"Mothers and wives throughout France are mourning the loss of men folk who have died from slight wounds aggravated by the effects of alcohol drinking. Wounds that scarcely affect normally healthy men are deadly in the case of drinkers. This is the invariable experience of army surgeons.

"The Government is asking us women to give children to the country. Yes! Frenchwomen will do their duty, but only on condition that these children shall not die at birth or come into the world an easy prey to all the terrible ills that await them in life. We will no longer tolerate from our parliamentarians the want of courage and initiative they have always hitherto shown in handling this drink problem. Bereaved mothers and widows from behind their mourning veils cry out to you to prohibit alcohol as a beverage. If you don't yield to them, they will turn you out at the next elections.

"EARLESS PETER" IS A TERROR TO TEUTON ENEMY

By Baron Lomax.

PETROGRAD, June 9.—Guerrilla King "Earless Peter," not Czar Nicholas and not Gen. Brusiloff, Evert, or Kuropatkin, is the grimmest foe of Hindenburg and Archduke Frederick. Even the unbeaten Hindenburg dreads Earless Peter; and his chief of staff has offered $30,000 for Peter, dead or alive.

Peter at different periods rages all over the 1,000 mile front between the Baltic and Bukovina; raids, kills, burns, eats railroads and telegraph, spies, escapes in incredible ways, and does everything done by Christian De Wet in Africa, but does it with double zeal and a picturesque spicing of Tartar ferocity.

RIDES THROUGH FOES' LINES.

Just now Earless Peter is raging in Galicia. His last exploit was to get right behind Pflannser-Baltin's lines, cut off an outpost and circumvent a much stronger force sent to relieve the outpost. Peter and his horsemen rode through the foe.

They lost twenty men out of eighty, but on their wild ride home they cut to bits a picket and carried the picketas' caps as trophies into Tarnopol town, where Peter got gloriously drunk, smashed a mirror with his sabre and threatened to slay the persistent newspaper men who worried him to tell them yarns.

All over the thousand mile front guerilla warfare is being waged and for months at a time the slaughter done by guerillas exceeds the slaughter done by the inert trench warriors. Austria's guerillas are the Cracow Polish legion, who are all men from western Galicia, with a sprinkling of fugitive Russian Poles.

GUERRILLAS ON BOTH SIDES

Hindenburg had seven battalions of volunteer guerrillas, men over 45, from compulsory service, but picked men of Junker and farmer class, who can ride, shoot and wield cold steel.

Best off is Russia. Russia has a vast healthly male population too numerous to be uniformed and armed, ready and eager to fight, and fit to bear the hardships which guerrilla fighting brings. Captured enemy rifles scraps of lost enemy accoutrements, and miscellaneous ammunition are all these warriors need.

In nationality they are as mixed as in equipment. There are Russians, Little Russians, Siberians, Tartars, Tchuvrahes, Mingrelians, Georgians and bloodthirsty Turcomans, and Caucasus Tchtchentsi. With this tough crowd is a leaven of educated ex-art students and once idle spoilt young aristocrats who want to help their fatherland and slaughter the foe.

ARISTOCRATS IN BAND.

Among the aristocrats are two Princess Galitsin, a Count Schemeretieff, and a nephew of Prince Orloff, the Czar's greatest friend. Altogether there are 50,000 guerrillas, organized in about 300 brave bands, with grim and relentless leaders.

Bravest is the band of Earless Peter and grimmest, most relentless of leaders is Peter himself.

"Earless Peter" is in Russian 'Piotr Besukhi'. Both of Peter's ears exist and are painfully sound. Peter, in fact, can hear, smell, see and feel with the abnormal intensity of a Pawnee. He is 'Earless' merely because he is deaf to appeals for mercy.

Earless Peter's two brothers were killed at the battle of Kransnik, the first stiff fight between Russians and Austrians; and to-day Peter gives no quarter and asks for none. He slaughters no prisoners, but he refuses to take them. If an enemy wants to surrender Peter gives him a fair fight, which often ends in the enemy going under, for Peter tolerates in his band only picked fighters.

DEAF TO ENTREATIES.

Peter is careful about his men's food, clothes, arms, accoutrements. Having private funds he outshines in them details the hardup rival guerrilla chiefs. He punishes ruthlessly any of his own men who shirk or offend. In general, he shows himself as earless to Russian weaknesses as he does to the cries for quarter of German and Austrian foes.

Earless Peter's biography is a parody of the perverted, whimsical, and extravagant Russians found in Dostoevsky and Gleb Uspensky.

Peters' real name is Levachoff, and he is the 36 year old son of a rich Smolensk manufacturer. He is religious, a drunkard, charitable, fierce, grim, frivolous, and pleasure loving.

Levachoff, his father, sent Peter to a good secondary school; afterwards to Moscow University, where he got the diploma candidate of law. At Moscow Peter became known as "the reckless Levachoff".

WILL AVENGE BROTHERS

Peter got money from his rich father who was in despair at the loss of the two sons, and gave their fortunes to Peter on condition the money should be spent in fight ng Russia's invaders. Peter was much attached to his brothers. He went to Smolensk, prayed with his father and vowed that he would slay 2,000 Germans and Austrians for each brother killed.

This was a big order for a band numbering eighty. Peter began in winter near Dvinsk. His eighty men were in white uniforms or covered with sheets their boots were covered with white fur, and their rifles were painted white, so that nothing but dark eyelids showed.

They began by approaching enemy outposts, sniping or pouring in volleys and running away. Later they got bolder for they found that on moonless nights they could approach silently and invisibly to within a few yards of the Germans without being detected.

But Peter is no invulnerable. When Ivanoff began the New York offensive Galicia, Peter nearly perished. His band was surrounded by Austrians, thirty were killed and twelve wounded. Peter himself got a bullet in his thigh.

PRISONERS ARE RESCUED BY ARMED AUTOS

The first detailed story of the dramatic rescue of the Duke of Westminster of the survivors of the steamship Tara in the Egyptian desert among hostile Senussi was brought to Holyhead by survivors of the Tara who have just arrived there, says the Schenectady Gazette. The detailed story of the adventures of the Tara's crew follows:

"At about 10 A. M. on November 5, a shout was raised, 'We are torpedoed'. he word was passed immediately. 'Away all boats, and the wheel was put hard to port. We were struck on the starboard side, the torpedo crashing through the engine room, smashing the starboard engine and killing the second and fourth engineers, chief stoker and greaser. Our wireless was carried away by the explosion. Of 10 boats only three succeeded in getting away, and when we were all in the boats the submarine took us in tow and eventually landed us on the rocks, where the Turks swarmed around us, keeping us all close together. We found that our total casualties were 11 missing and the cook, who lay dead in one of the boats. He had been severely wounded and had expired after we had left the ship. We buried him there on the beach.

FORCED TO MARCH 175 MILES

"On the following day commenced a long march of 175 miles. Reaching the summit of a hill a few miles on we dropped like logs, but after an hour's rest we were compelled to push on for another miles or two, where we came to some dugouts. Here we remained for three days. We were tired, worn out and hungry, and looked forward to a good meal, but to our dismay all we received was about two spoonfuls of rice, which we boiled in a bucket. We were then turned into the dugouts like sheep into a pen. Our meat ration was one goat every other day—between 90 men. Sometimes we were fortunate enough to get some tomatoes. Water was very scarce, just enough for cooking purposes being available.

"While here we were visited by Wenri Pasha, a brother of Enver Pasha, who photographed us and told use we would be all right. After this we became a bit more cheerful. Then a cloud fell over us. Our quartermaster, ho had had a broken leg, had it amputated, but he did not survive, and we buried him next day. The day after we again moved off and marched for ten days and after a short rest we were told we would have to march eight hours a day. We proceeded through gullies full of jagged rocks, and we were soon crippled. At night we would prepare a pot of rice and sleep in the open.

"We eventually found ourselves on the western side of the Libyan desert, arriving at a place called 'Red Doctor'. Three miles beyond this we came to a well called by the natives the 'White Doctor' and here we were told we would be kept for months. Our hardships were even greater now, as we were compelled to work hard all day, which was even more difficult than the marching had been. We had to clean out the wells, which were very deep and large, and at times our guards urged us on with blows from rhinoceros hide whips. We took about a month to clean out the 'Red Doctor'.

HAD TO EAT SNAILS TO LIVE

"We had given up all hope of getting out of this awful place alive; no food, no comfort, death stalking among us, and no means of staying it. Those who were stricken with disease were left to die like dogs in a ditch. The food supply became so low that we were compelled to eat snails in order to live. These were now our staple food. Then we used to boil a little plant which grew in small quantities around us and was eaten by the natives. During our stay at the 'White Doctor' the Turks handed us over to the Senussi tribe of Arabs. They did not ill treat us in any way, but took no steps to obtain food for us. Among the many things we used to make were needles from camels bones and also bits of glass and on one occasion we found a salmon tin opener, out of which we improvised a needle.

Sub-Lieut. W. T. Griffith- relates how Capt Gwatkin Williams, the commander attempted to escape.

"He was well supplied with dates and Arab bread and had a goatskin of water. we officers having given him a good share of what we had, and goodness knows our share was little enough. He got all information as to the track for Solltum, but he was stranded and gave himself up to passing Arabs. A few days later (we thought he had got through) we heard rifle shots and the sentry informed us (Mad Mullah included.) and started to march, when to our surprise we saw a man on horseback with Capt. Williams walking alongside. It gave us all a great shock. The priest—black as the devil—gave him about seven blows on the back with a rhinoceros whip. As a result of this attempt all liberty was stopped and the camp well guarded."

RESCUE ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY

Describing the rescue John H. Swaine said:

"St. Patrick's Day will ever be a memorable one for us, for it was on March 17 we were seated on the sands hoping that stores would soon arrive. Suddenly we heard the hum of motor engines in the distance and thought it was the long looked for food. But to our intense surprise our guards began to behave in the most peculiar manner. They became highly excited, running about among their tents like wild men, rifles in hand, and their women running with them. We looked across the desert and saw a car approaching in the distance. This was followed by another, and then another, until there was a long line of them.

"As they got nearer we could see that they were armored cars and as they approached they moved out in the shape of a fan. After the first shock we commenced to dance and shout for joy. Who could blame us? We had been in the most awful captivity for over four months, and the possibility of relief had never entered our heads. We did not think it possible that we would ever get away before the end of the war or until death claimed us. When the cars were close enough they opened fire and our guards, instead of waiting, bolted as fast as they could, their women and children following. The cars followed them up and then returned for us.

"As soon as they stopped the Tommies began to unload packing cases from the cars. We were nearly mad at the sight of these, as we knew they contained food. We were like wolves in our ravenousness. Bread, biscuits, bully beef, jam, boiled fowl and tinned milk disappeared like magic—we had soon devoured three days ration. We were then clothed, placed in the cars and taken a long journey to a military camp, where the Tommies all turned out to cheer our arrival. Some of us went on our knees and thanked the Almighty for our safe deliverance and then we sang that old Welsh hymn 'O Fryniau Caersalem.'

"Our drive to Solltum was made in a terrible blizzard and some of the cars lost their way, but we all arrived safely at last. The Tommies there could not do enough for us—they simply overwhelmed us."

Was So Weak and Run Down

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak, and the nerves unstrung, it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties. The least little exertion or excitement leaves her in an exhausted condition, and not fit to do anything.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, you will be wise if you start to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

This remedy will act directly on the disordered heart making it beat strong and regular, and will also invigorate and strengthen the nerves so as to make them steady and firm.

Mrs J. A. Williams, Tillsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down. I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original remedy for all heart and nerve troubles. Price 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

BULGAR ARMY READY BUT WILL NOT ATTACK

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS OF THE BULGARIAN ARMY AT KUESTENDIL, June 12. — General Nicolai Jekoff, Commander-in-Chief of the Bulgarian army, intimated that he had no present intention of engaging in an offensive campaign against the Allies in Greece. "If the Greek Government," he said, "can stand the Anglo-French forces on its territory, I am sure we can."

The correspondent, who was permitted by General Jekoff to make a tour of the Bulgar-German front, found the Bulgarian troops well equipped and in fine physical condition. Attached to the various divisional staffs were German officers. Major-General Todoroff, commander of the second Bulgarian Army, has six German officers in his service; General Zlatareff, Second Division, has three, and General Guechoff, Eleventh Division, has two. These officers have no voice in tactical or administrative matters. Their duties are entirely confined to instructing the Bulgarians in trench building and other technical details of modern warfare. As far as the observation of the correspondent went, the relations between the German and Bulgarian officers seemed to be cordial.

At the beginning of the operation in the Balkans the Bulgarian Army was handicapped by a lack of proper transportation facilities. Most of the few railroads in Serbia and Macedonia had been destroyed by the Serbs. As a result the Bulgarian troops suffered considerably during last winter, when their ox-wagon transportation failed totally. Since then the Germans have placed 500 motor trucks at the disposal of the Bulgarian Army and a German military field railroad, connecting the terrain between the Struma and Vardar Rivers with the town of Dubnitza, has almost been completed. Dubnitza is about fifty miles south-east of Belgrade.

The Bulgarian officers are unanimous in their opinion that the Anglo-French forces now in Salonika are entirely inadequate to undertake a successful offensive. Some of them went so far as to say that the Entente would need 2,000,000 men to reconquer Serbia.

Bulgaria proposes to meet the further cost of the war with funds raised at home instead of by loans made in Germany, as heretofore. The Sobranje, which meets in the second week of June, will be asked by the Government to consider ways and means for obtaining the money needed for the maintenance of the army in the field. The issue of treasury notes or an internal loan are the two methods under consideration.

The last loan made in Germany for war purposes has not yet been exhausted, the final monthly installment of 50,000,000 levas, or francs, being due on November 1. This monthly sum is the minimum required for the expenses of the army under the present conditions, when it is practically resting on its arms. If fighting on a large scale should recommence a much greater sum would, of course, be needed.

The discussion in the Sobranje of war appropriations will give an opportunity for the opponents of the administration of Premier Radoslavoff to be heard. It is not considered likely, however, that any opposition to the Government which may develop will affect its policy or change the military aspect in the Balkan Peninsula.

HAD A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN COULD NOT SLEEP OR WORK

Is Now Cured and Attributes His Recovery to the Use of Dr. Chase's Medicines

Some splendid results have been reported to us from the combined use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. It complicated cases they work together with great success.

While the Kidney-Liver Pills arouse the action of liver, kidneys, and bowels, and so overcome, derangements of these organs, the Nerve Food enriches the blood, strengthens the nerves and builds up the system in a general way.

Mr. R. B. Hillman, Purbrook, Muskoka Ont., writes: "About four years ago I was all run down and could not work, and as to writing a letter, I could not do it on account of my hand shaking so badly. My nerves were unstrung and I was troubled with a nervous breakdown. I could not sleep soundly and would start up so suddenly so to almost jump out of bed. My kidneys were bad, too, and I had awful pains in the back all day. I doctored with our family doctor, but he did not seem to know what I needed. I was recommended to try Dr Chase's Nerve Food, and could sleep well three nights after, starting the use of the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I take great pleasure in recommending these medicines as I have proved that they do all that is claimed for them."

When used together the Nerve Food should be used after each meal and at bed-time, and the Kidney-Liver Pills only as often as is necessary to keep the bowels in healthy condition. Dr. Chase's medicines are for sale by all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

A dress of marked simplicity always has its advantages, because of the possibilities for adding little touches to convert it into a garment that will serve for more than one particular purpose; another reason for its popularity is that it saves laundry bills. With several sets of collars and cuffs for such garment, a woman knows that she may be always neatly and becomingly dressed. No. 7,763 is a garment on the order of the one talked about, one can hardly say just what is first or last in this model, but it attracts at once as a smart becoming style. Perhaps the cut of the right front, giving a tab extension where it laps the left, is the novelty. Two buttons close the dress at this point and appropriately decorate the waist. The collar and cuffs are of material in another weave and color and the four gored skirt is built on a raised waistline and made with a stitched seam down the centre front.

The pattern is cut in sizes 34 to 44 bust. To copy the design in size 38 will require 4¾ yards goods in 36 inch width if with a nap, 4⅝ yards if without a nap, ⅝ yard contrasting goods for collar and cuffs.

You may obtain the pattern by sending ten cents to the office of this publication.

Careless Use of Soap Spoils the Hair

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Don't use soaps and prepared shampoos that contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff, and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

GOOD RULES FOR FARM BUYING

When buying a farm remember that farming is as much of a business as making bricks is, and investigate as closely as if you were about to buy a business. If you satisfy the following six essential rules, you cannot go far wrong:

1. Be perfectly certain that your neighbours are congenial, for farming in an uncongenial neighbourhood is impossible.
2. Locate near a school and a church — you can get labour easier even if you do not use them yourself.
3. Be sure the country is healthful—and the water pure.
4. Look well into the transportation facilities; roads, railroads and rates.
5. Find out where the markets are.
6. Then buy a good piece of farm land.

If you fulfill these six conditions, and there are plenty of such places in Canada—and you are willing to work, really work — you will find health and prosperity and abounding happiness on a farm.

TENDER MEMORIES

In a certain town a man went into a restaurant for his noonday meal, and it being a cold day the door was closed. He sat down at a few tables from the door. Presently another man came in who neglected to shut the door.

The first man noticed it and yelled to him gruffly: "Shut that door. Were you raised in a barn?" After a few moments he glanced over to where the other man was sitting and noticed he was subdued. He went over and apologized for talking to such a manner.

"I didn't mean to [illegible] you if you had been raised in a barn."

"That's it that's it," the other subdued "I was raised in a barn, and it makes me homesick every time I hear an axe bray."—The Christian Herald.

THE RUSSIANS ARE ADVANCING ON LEMBERG

ENEMY'S LOSSES HAVE BEEN VERY LARGE

The Russians Are Making Giant Strides Towards Lemberg Now

General Brusiloff's Armies Are Sweeping All Before Them in Their Onward March---The Austrians Falling Back in Disorder---Estimated That the Austrian Armies on the East Front Have Lost a Third of Their Effective Strength Since the Russian Offensive Began on June 4th

ENEMY LOSSES HAVE BEEN VERY HEAVY

PETROGRAD, June 13.—Hurling westward with seeming superhuman vigor, the Russian armies of General Brussiloff are now hammering their way toward Lemberg, the Galician capital, in giant strides.

The demoralized Austrian defenders are rolling back before them.

It is now estimated that more than one-third of the men in the Austrian armies on the East front have been killed, wounded, or taken prisoners since the giant offensive started June 4th.

Approximately 120,000 Austrians have been imprisoned to date. In actions such as the Russians are engaged, the estimate of conservative critics is two killed or injured for every prisoner.

This would mean that a total of 360,000 Austrians have been put out of the fighting since June 4.

The Austrian army on the Eastern front had been variously estimated at from 700,000 to one million men.

Germans Make Slight Advance at Verdun

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 13.—(French Official Communique).—The Germans in night attacks on the east bank of the Meuse penetrated some advanced French trenches east of Hill 321, according to the official statement of the French War Office to-day.

At all other points the attacks were repulsed.

Infantry charges were made along the entire sector east of Thiaumont Farm.

Officers' List Now Increased To 309

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., June 13.—Another officers' casualty list received at the Militia Department this morning gives the names of 14 officers killed, wounded and missing, bringing the total up to 309.

Lieut.-Col. Hay, of Port Arthur, formerly reported as wounded, is now included in the missing. This makes the sixth officer of high rank lost during the battle of Hooge. Major-General Mercer and Brigadier-General Williams, and Lieut.-Colonels Buller, Shaw, Baker, M.P., and Hay. The majority of the officers whose names figure in to-day's report belong to Nova Scotia, although Ontario, Western Canada, Montreal, and St. Johns, Que., are also represented.

The list included: Wounded, shell shock, Lieut. E. H. Keen, 2nd Battalion, Eastern Ontario.

Jennings has been in the Invalided Soldiers' Home here until recently, and has enlisted again for overseas service in the 63rd Battery. His wife will shortly return to England, again to continue the work of caring for the wounded Canadian soldiers. Jenning's three brothers are oversens.

LAST WEEK OF LIQUIDATORS' SALE

According to announcement in another page, this will be the last week of The Liquidators' Sale in the store formerly known as Mrs. Byrne's Hair Works, opposite the Examiner. GOOD CONDUCT BADGES FOR THE LOCAL POLICE FORCE

Men Will be Rewarded For Good Conduct and Continuous Service—Commissioners Grant a Fifty Dollar Increase For the Men

THE NEW SCALE

The Board of Police Commissioners met last evening to consider the request of the members of the Police Force for an increase in pay. After due deliberation it was decided to grant an increase of fifty dollars a year to each member of the force with the exception of Chief Thompson who will receive an increase of one hundred dollars a year. The latter did did not sign the petition which was presented to the Commissioners. Magistrate Dumble said he as willing to grant the chief an increase of two hundred dollars a year so long as he serves the public as well as he has been doing.

EULOGY FOR THE CHIEF

The Commissioners were unanimous in their approval of the chief Thompson's administration. The new rate which takes effect July 1st will bring the scale up to the following amounts:

Chief Thompson	$1,600
Detective Newhall	1,050
Detective Meagher	900
Sergeant Brown	950
Patrol Sergeant Kidd	875
Patrol Sergeant Reid	875
1st Class Constables	850
2d Class Constables	800
3rd Class Constables	700

GOOD CONDUCT BADGES

The Commissioners decided to adopt a system of good conduct badges whereby a man after eight years continuous service shall receive an increase in pay of ten cents a day and a good conduct badge; after fifteen years another ten cents a day and after twenty years service an additional ten cents a day. This system has been in use in Brantford for some time and has proven very successful. The new system will effect men who have already served eight or more years on the local police force. Detectives Newhall and Meagher are two likely prospects for the first issue of badges.

OVERSEAS TOBACCO FUND

Now that the Belgian Relief and 93rd Funds are collected, don't forget the men in the trenches. They want tobacco and cigarettes. There are about 600 Peterborough men in the trenches and the Peterborough branch of the Tobacco Fund have been supplying only 200 of these men with smokes. After what these brave fellows have been doing in the last two weeks, are you going to let them go without smokes? Turn in that quarter to-day. Don't delay.

Important meeting Tuesday at 8 p. m. Bank of Montreal chambers. All members of the Overseas Club and any other interested in this work are asked to be present. Come along and help send some smokes.

TRIBUTE PAID TO KITCHENER OF KHARTOUM

LONDON, June 13.—The late Earl Kitchener, Great Britain's premier soldier, lost when the cruiser Hampshire was mined near the Orkney Islands, was to-day paid a tribute as great as Britain has ever given to her heroes departed.

The service was in St. Paul's Cathedral. The King and Queen and many persons attached to the Royal house, many peers, soldiers, and statesmen attended, jamming the mighty Cathedral to the doors, while thousands stood outside in the rain with heads bare. The streets in every direction from the Cathedral were jammed by autos and traffic was impeded by throngs of mourners. Men and women, drenched to the skin, lined the Royal route and bared their heads in memory of K. of K.

Many were in deep mourning, expressing the loss as personal.

MANY LOCAL MEN JOINING RANKS OF ARMY SERVICE CORPS

Fine Opportunity For Rejected Men to Do Their Bit With a Chance if They Wish of Going Overseas---Twenty Enrolled This Morning---93rd Recruits Leave For Barriefield---To-day's General Military News.

The large number of Peterborough men who have tried in vain to get into khaki and have been barred for some physical ailment or other are having their innings to-day. Lieut. Lennox of the Canadian Army Service Corps is in Peterborough to-day enlisting recruits for that unit. Men who have been rejected by overseas battalions will be accepted for this corps, and by present appearances Peterborough will have a big representation with the C.A.S.C. Twenty local men were enrolled the first hour this morning, and as Lieut. Lennox will be here this afternoon and to-night this number will be largely increased.

The Army Service Corps wants teamsters, men to take care of horses, motor car drivers, carpenters, mechanics, bakers; in fact handy men of all kinds. The pay is the same as for other Canadian units, with separation allowance for married men. While the men are being signed on primarily for service in Canada they will be given a chance to go overseas with the Army Service Corps as well if they desire, which opens a way for many who have repeatedly tried to get over. They will go to Barriefiled and Petawawa camps and will leave Peterborough almost immediately. All local men who have been rejected as physically unfit will be welcomed. Lieut. Lennox informed the Examiner that he could place seventy-five Peterborough men in the C.A.S.C. There is no doubt that he can get this number here in the course of a day or two, judging by the response to-day.

Lieut. Lennox, the recruiting officer for the C.A.S.C., will be at the recruiting office, corner of George and Hunter Streets, this afternoon, and also to-night from 7.30 o'clock to 10. All rejected men unable to get into the 93rd or other battalions, should call into the recruiting station to-night.

More Recruits Leave.

This morning saw the departure of another group of Peterborough citizens who have declared themselves ready to fight the Empire's battles, when the first draft of recruits for the 93rd to leave since the departure of the battalion entrained for Barriefield. The party was composed of Wm. Doughty, Geo. Sidey, Gordon Elliott, Hugh W. Watson, A. McCall, Geo. Irwin, Robert Glover, Philip Sturgeon, F. Clapper, Ed. King, F. Doughty and E. Woods. They were in charge of Sergts. Toone, Mitchell, and Theobald. The men fell in at the recruiting rooms at 7.45 o'clock and were marched to the G.T.R. station, headed by the 57th Band playing "O Canada." At the station a large number of friends had gathered and the men were kept busy shaking hands until the train pulled out. Mayor Duffus was among the citizens on hand to say good-bye to the men. As the train drew out of the station the band played, "The Girl I Left Behind Me." Many non-coms. and men of the 93rd who were home on leave, also left for Barriefield camp this morning.

The Kingston Standard says: Having obtained the kind permission of Lieut.-Col. Fee, O. C. 109th Battalion, Barriefield, the battalion band will give a grand concert in the armouries on Monday, June 19th. The object of the concert is to raise funds for the payment of the bandsmen's fares from the camp, and if the proceeds of the initial concert must that object, the band will return to Lindsay monthly, giving a concert in the armuries. The bandsmen rely on the generosity of their friends to make the concert a success.

The following is from the Kingston Standard: The dental staff are working on the men of the 93rd Battalion. The 109th will be the next battalion to receive dental attention. Last week there were 750 teeth extracted and filled by the camp dental clinic. There are five dental surgeons, four sergeants, and three orderlies on the staff of the dental corps in camp.

The Kingston Standard says: It is well understood that at least one brigade will be retained at Barriefield camp, and the other two brigades will be sent to Camp Borden and Valcartier, when these camps are ready to receive troops.

KINGSTON, June 12.—The streets of the city were lined on Saturday afternoon and evening with soldiers from the camp, and places of business particularly restaurants, were patronized to such an extent by the men in khaki that it was impossible for a civilian to get in. And yet, in spite of the fact that a great part of the 10,000 men in camp at Barriefield were in the city, the streets were quite and the conduct of the men was beyond complaint or reproach. The cutting out of the sale of liquor to soldiers and civilians has had a wonderful effect on local conditions. Niagara was offered the same proposition as Kingston, and it was refused by the license holders, and the license commissioners closed them up altogether. To the Wise move of the local license inspector Mr. McCammon is due largely the results that have been secured in Kingston. The sale of beer only to men for a short time has produced a effect that few dreamed was possible, and there has been little work for the civilian or military police in Kingston. Another significant fact, which is no doubt due to the prohibition of the sale of liquor to soldiers, is the report of the field hospital in camp yesterday morning. Only 15 were reported on sick parade on Sunday morning, which number was unusually low, and astonishingly small. Usually on Sunday morning, the sick parade has been large in connection with Barriefield camp, due no doubt to the free use of hard liquor on Saturday. Lt.-Col. Wilson reduced the city piquet from 100 men to 50, and later to 25, and even with this number there is little or nothing to do, and the matter of further reduction in the strength of the piquet is being seriously considered. The number of punishments for drunkenness in camp by commanding officers has been reduced to a point that is really astonishing. The men are sober, working hard, interested in their work, and rendering excellent service.

Manufacturers Favour Registration System

Canadian Manufacturers' Association Strongly Opposed to Present Voluntary System of Recruiting Men For Overseas Service.

WANT SELECTION METHOD

Special to The Examiner:

HAMILTON, Ont., June 13.—Members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association are strongly opposed to the present volunteer system of recruiting men for overseas service and the convention will likely go on record in favour of registration when the matter is discussed on Thursday during a trip to Niagara camp. Not a single member could be found who did not favour a system of registration and selection.

"I am sure that the Assembly will go on record as favouring registration," said President J. H. Sherrard, of Montreal. "The selection method is the only way. This of course means compulsion."

"There is no doubt but that registration is the only method," said Hon. Col. Thomas Cantley, of the Nova Scotia Steel Co., who will likely be the next President of the Association. "I am strongly in favour of registration, and so are nearly all the manufacturers."

PTE. CHAS. STENNER OF ORIGINAL PATS ON WOUNDED LIST

Douro Member of the Famous Regiment Who Has Been Through Many Months of Fighting is Officially Reported Wounded

IS WELL KNOWN HERE

No. 270 Pte. Chas. Stenner, a resident of Douro township, who enlisted in August, 1914, a few days after the outbreak of the war with the famous Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, is to-day officially reported wounded. Pte. Stenner was one of the few men who originally formed the Princess Pats who were still on duty when the regiment went into the big battle at Hooge, ten days ago. He has been at the front for many months, escaping without a scratch until the recent battle. By sporting fans Pte. Stenner will be remembered by his plucky showing in the big walking match in Brock street rink a few years ago when Champion Hoagland made his first visit to Peterborough. Stenner was one of the contestants and although he lacked the speed to get into the first flight he stuck gamely for the weeks' race and was loudly cheered every night. He was a member of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons and accompanied them to camp several years.

What Women Are Doing In England

Peterborough women will be interested in learning what their sisters in the old country are doing. Mr. Parsons of the Bank of Commerce, showed the Examiner a hand bill he has received from England, on which is advertised a public demonstration for women under the auspices of the Women's War Service and War Agricultural committees for Devon at Budlake Farm, Killerton. The bill announces that prizes would be awarded for ploughing, harrowing, rolling, spreading of farm yard manure, harnessing and driving of horses in harvest waggons, sheep shearing and milking. All these competitions were for women only.

Colthurst Guilty of Triple Murder

Irish Captain Convicted of Killing Skeffington and Two Others

LONDON, June 13.—The court-martial which tried Captain Bowen-Colthurst on a charge of shooting F. Sheehy Skeffington, editor of The Irish Citizen, and two others during the recent rebellion in Ireland, has found him guilty, but insane at the time of the shooting, says a Central News despatch from Dublin.

Captain Bowen-Colthurst was charged with the murder and, alternatively, with the manslaughter of Skeffington and Thomas Dickson and Fred McIntyre. The court found him guilty of the murder of the three men. The finding has been confirmed by General Maxwell, commanding the military forces.

As Captain Bowen-Colthurst was found insane, following the usual procedure in such cases, he probably will be ordered "confined during the King's pleasure."

Won't Kill Another Boy If Judge Will Forgive Him Now

ALBANY, June 12.—Frank Harrington, the confessed slayer of 8-year-old Billy Clarke, whose mutilated body was found in the woods near the city several weeks after his disappearance, on March 25, has been arraigned on a charge of murder. Harrington told the court he was sorry he killed the boy, and would not do anything of the kind again if the judge would forgive him.

District Attorney Alexander stated that alienists reported Harrington had the mental development of a 7-year-old child. The prisoner was committed to jail to await a formal hearing.

"Peterborough Property Pays"

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1916

THE WORK OF THE HOUR.

The oliquial proverb says, we can't keep a good man down. Sir Sam Hughes is an example of this At the time the Examiner was remarking Sir Sam's unusual reticence—when we hoped that he was modelling his vocal activities upon the taciturn Kitchener, we see that the was preparing to break out in a new way. Instead of imitating Kitchener, and taking lessons in his school of silence, we find that Sir Sam was preparing the wonderful statement that he was giving lessons to Kitchener. In an evidently authoritative, if not suggested, interview printed in an Ottawa paper, Sir Sam plays the role of schoolmaster to Kitchener. He tells the wonderful story that he advised Kitchener to abandon the Ypres salient and thus save the lives of Canadians who were adding painfully to the casualty lists.

We get a new light upon the unbending Kitchener. Sir Sam says that when he was lecturing K. of K. the latter wept; when Sir Sam came from the banks of the Seugog, via Ottawa, and told the great war minister what was going on in Europe; told him how the war should be run, and of the wickedness of putting "my men" in a position where they were in danger of being hurt—"there were tears in Kitchener's eyes."

We all have a great admiration for Sir Sam Hughes; we honour his zeal, but reserve opinion as to his discretion. His most enthusiastic admirer, cannot bring himself to the point of regarding "with a straight face" the role of Sir Sam putting Kitchener through his paces. But, perhaps, we are mistaken in this; we don't know what Canada and the Empire missed by two things happening. Before Sir Sam could make Kitchener sit up, he was urgently called to Canada to defend the Shells Committee salient and cover the retreat of Allison; and before Kitchener could fully digest Sir Sam's advice, and make up his mind to abandon a military policy which he and Sir Douglas Haig and the War Council of the Allies decided was the right policy, a part of a general coordination of effort, he was called home. If Sir Sam had not been so hurriedly called home, too, and knowing that it would be Lord Kitchener might have listened to the voice of reason; might have called off the Canadians from Ypres; the Germans might have been well on the way to Calais and Dover; and the Canadians would not, as they have done for the second time, have "saved the situation" and added a new chapter to Canada's glorious work in this war.

It seems humiliating that while Canadian soldiers are adding to the credit of Canada, a Canadian Minister of Militia should be making Canada ridiculous and telling the Germans that they should put in their "best digs" to capture a military position that the Canadian Minister of War told Kitchener to his teeth was "untenable."

We all deplore the Canadian death rate at Ypres. It is a bloody business holding this point, but those who know think that it is worth holding; and, knowing that it would be sterility behind it is no small honour to Canadians that they were the troops chosen to hold a position where bravery, fighting quality and resource were needed. We sent our Canadian soldiers to Europe to help save the Empire; and knowing their quality and spirit, we are certain that if they had been held in reserve, out of danger, to keep them from getting hurt and from hurting the enemy, the Canadians, loyal as they are, would have mutinied and started home—if they did not go to Europe to fight, what in heaven's name did they go for? What would we think if the whole Canadian contingent came home without a scratch? We shouldn't be proud of them. Of course the Canadians are being hard hit, but if we get the other details of casualties as promptly and fully as we get the casualties of our own men we should find that all along the line held by the British there has been, and is, a similar death roll. War is a stern business and to win victories there must be fighting, and with fighting there is loss. Per ardua ad astra.

Canada's present concern is to get the remainder of her quota of 500,000 properly equipped men into the field. There the duty of our Government and military authorities practically ends. Canadian soldiers under the leadership of skilled and seasoned commanders, who, being on the spot and in relation with the military council of the Allies, know what should be done—will do the rest. Instead of the pupils teaching the masters, the pupils should be busy putting recruiting in Canada on a business basis. The Minister of Militia, instead of airily asserting that recruiting half a million men is child's play, should make it man's work by registering and ear-marking the military population of Canada, and replacing haphazard methods, by system; making recruiting the sole purpose and work of the government, instead of leaving it to popular initiative and the patriotic sacrifices of private individuals. The British war lords and the allied military experts, in close touch with the situation in Europe, on every yard of every battle front, are not pining for pointers from the strategist of the Seugog. Sir Sam is a good man in his place; and his place just now is at the head of an earnest, systematic and energetic campaign of recruiting.

PARTIZANSHIP AND PIFFLE.

Great minds think alike. Sir Sam Hughes dumped an interview upon the Ottawa Journal; and instantly another great man, the representative of West Peterborough, inflicts the following upon that same Journal and the public:

It seems to me as one on the ground that a frightful injury is being done to our men in preparation by the relentless and demoniacal pursuit of the Government at this critical juncture. For God's sake let the pursuers have some mercy at least on our soldiers.

Mr Burnham, in his capacity of lawyer, should be called upon to file a bill of particulars. In what way does this "relentless and demoniacal pursuit of the government" appear, and in what way does it do "a frightful injury to our men in preparation"? It does not seem to be half so bad an injury to our men "in preparation" and on service as rotten boots and spavined horses. Nobody has been pursuing the government, unless it is admitted that the Minister of Militia, around whom a little exploratory and explantory investigation has recently revolved, is the government. The Liberal party has loyally supported the Government in providing money for war purposes has stood by the Government when it was right. But, if the true and loyal friends of the Government are to be appraised by the jocular standard of the late Sir John Macdonald, who "hanked," not on the party loyalty that supported him when he was right, but by the loyalty that stood by him "when he was wrong," the Liberal party has been "relentless and demoniacal in its pursuit of the Government.' Doesn't it rather ill-become our member to deprecate partizanship when he can't even send a little story of Barriefield Camp to a local paper, without stuffing it full of partizanship. He ascribes the mud at Barriefield and the inefficient water supply to the Carwell inquiry at Ottawa, and emphasizes his fahmaelitish loyalty to his own party friends, as shown in the Auburn Mills inquiry, by throwing the whole blame on the "Threatened bolt of Conservative members, some of whom, such as R. B. Bennett and Andrew Border, have a load of responsibility upon their shoulders that should compel their withdrawal from parliament."

If independence of sentiment and action constitute grounds of "withdrawal from parliament," surely idiocy of sentiment and action should constitute as strong a ground. If criticism of a government, when it is wrong, is dmonical, what shall be said of the criticism by a member of the Canadian government of the high command of the British armies, a criticism which declares them a set of blunderers and incompetents. Is it a help to recruiting to have it said, officially, in Canada that British and allied generals are sending Canadians to hold an "untenable position? If we should have freedom from partizanship in this war in Canada, how can the member for West Peterborough justify his lugging partizanship into almost everything he says and does?

The need of the hour is recruits to take the places of the Canadians who have fallen bravely doing their duty, as thousands have done in the British and other allied armies. The Canadians have fallen for our protection and we are proud of their work as we are grieved at their loss. From all over Canada comes the call for the adoption of system in recruiting—the call for the Government to take an interest and hand in recruiting.

Madam, Is Your Boy in Uniform?

In every issue of every paper you will find lists of the names of hundreds of brave men who have been killed or wounded fighting for the world's freedom and for your protection. Look at that long roll of men who have spilt their blood to save you from the fate that has befallen many a Belgian and Serbian and Armenian mother.

The Canadians at the front are not less dear to the hearts of their mothers than your boy is to you. The mothers of the fallen loved their sons too well to hold them back from doing their plain duty. Can you, in this time of crisis, justify to yourself the selfish love that sets duty aside and shuts the ear against its call?

Thousands of men are needed AT ONCE to take the places of those upon the honour roll. Tell your boy that if he wants to serve he will go with your sanction and your blessing. Thousands of men are needed now. Why not let your own boy become your defender and representative in the fight for freedom? Tell him you are willing he shall JOIN TO-DAY.

To What Extent Permanent Peace Depends Upon Canada

The number proposed by the Dominion Government as Canada's contribution in men to the cause of the allies is 500,000. We are now in the eleventh month of the second year of the war, and the total number of men so far enlisted is under 350,000.

Nor, in the opinion of those best qualified to judge, is there much likelihood of the desired 500,000 mark being attained under our present system, or rather lack of system. The possibilities of haphazard recruiting seem to have been pretty well exhausted. An organized system, Government-controlled and Government-directed, is needed to replace it, and in our often-expresse view, the taking of a national register is a condition precedent to the efficient working of such an organized system.

Let no person think that it is a matter of small concern whether the enlistment in this country shall reach the half million promised by the Government, or shall fall below it by some 150,000. With the coming into being of general conscription Great Britain has exhausted the supply of men within her own boundaries. If we are to make certain that peace, when it comes, shall be a proper and a permanent, and not an inconclusive peace, other resources of the British Empire, hitherto largely untapped, must be more fully drawn on.

There is one standard by which, from the viewpoint of citizens of the British Empire, the terms of peace, when it comes, will have to be tested: 'Are the terms such as to make it impossible in the future for Germany to attack a single-handed British Empire?' If an affirmative answer can be given, then we shall have a proper and permanent peace but anything short of a complete affirmative will result in an inconclusive peace. And the difference of 150,000 men from Canada may mean the difference between the two kinds of peace. Let every man in this country of military age and suitability ponder these things in his heart.

Let him think what an inconclusive peace with Germany would mean. It would undoubtedly mean the maintenance in arms of large forces in this country, and in every other country forming part of the Empire, with yet larger reserves waiting to be called on. It would mean the perpetuation of war taxes, quite possibly permanent conscription, and the retardation, to an appalling extent, of Canada's development along every line.

We have suggested that the terms of a satisfactory peace must be such as to make it impossible in the future for Germany to attack a single handed British Empire. For common sense requires us to take account of the possibility that if ever Germany, again grown strong, should endeavour to revenge herself upon the one power which, more than any other, has thwarted her criminal plans, the British Empire might have to meet that attack without he assistance of our present allies. We might have such allies, or we might not.

If, then, Germany secures a peace which would enable her to recover her military strength to this extent it would be a very bad peace indeed, a peace containing within itself the seeds of future war. And we need to enlist every available man to put beyond the bounds of possibility such as calamitous consummation of all the toil and travail of the war.—Toronto Star.

If the Governmet took steps to record our eligible fighting men; to replace haphazard and unofficial, but splendidly patriotic, private work, by system, the petty squabblers of petty partizanship, whether by party papers, ministers of the Crown, or members of parliament, would fade and die.

HAVELOCK BOY REPORTED KILLED IN ACTION MAY 19th

Trooper Cecil W. Duke Made the Supreme Sacrifice—Court of Revision Held in Havelock—Belmont School Report for the Month of May

Death of Mrs. Buchanan.

The death occurred on Wednesday afternoon of last week of Mrs. Harry Buhanan in her 36th year after an illness of some weeks' duration. The New Home Treatment For Ugly, Hairy Growths

(Boudoir Secrets)

Here is a simple, yet very effective method for removing hair and fuzz from the face, neck and arms: Cover the objectionable hairs with a paste made by mixing some water with a little powdered delatone. Leave this on for 2 or 3 minutes, then rub off, wash the skin and the hairs have vanished. No pain or inconvenience attends this treatment, but results will be certain if you are sure to get real delatone.

SIR SAM SEES CARDINAL IN REGARD TO RECRUITS

Is Assured That His Eminence Will Consider Seriously.

QUEBEC, June 13. — General Sir Sam Hughes, minister of militia, arrived at Levis, crossed over to Quebec and had audience with His Eminence Cardinal Begin with regard to recruiting in this province.

The cardinal, who listened with the utmost attention throughout the conference, promised to give these matters his most serious consideration.

As soon as the audience was completed Sir Sam proceeded by special train to Valcartier.

11,000 TROOPS QUARTERED AT BARRIEFIELD CAMP

Nine Battalions, With Other Units, Already There---Col. Hemming in Command--Abundant Water Supply Assured---Electric Pump Installed--Excellent Order Preserved and Liquor Sale is Well Controlled.

KINGSTON, June 13.—There are now 11,000 troops encamped on Barriefield Heights, opposite Kingston. The infantry for overseas and their strength are as follows:—93rd Battalion, Peterborough, 998; 109th Battalion, Lindsay, 1,086; 130th Battalion, Perth, 1,012; 136th Battalion, Port Hope, 775; 139th Battalion, Cobourg, 954; 146th Battalion, Kingston, 1,000; 154th Battalion, Cornwall, 1,133; 155th Battalion, Belleville, 1,210; 158th Battalion, Brockville, 1,558.

With the staff and the various other units, including the Army Service Corps, the Army Medical Corps, the Engineers and the Army Dental Corps, the total camp population reaches 11,000.

Opening Delayed by Heavy Rains.

Owing to the heavy rains a fortnight ago the opening of the camp was delayed, so far as the outside battalions were concerned. The 146th of Kingston went in on scheduled time after the Army Service Corps and Engineers had things in pretty fair condition. Lieut.-Col. Burritt, district engineering officer commanding, has had a big task, owing to the fact that it was uncertain how many units would come to Barriefield. The Militia Department, so it is stated, had planned to make Barriefield a small camp this year, but evidently it altered its original intention and sent the whole nine units of the Third Military District to the heights, overlooking Fort Henry, where more than 500 Germans are interned. Several places in the district would have liked this camp, but Barriefield is one of the oldest military camping grounds in Canada and Kingston a military centre, and it was but natural that No. 3 district camp should be at headquarters.

Electric Pump Installed.

It was only recently that sufficient water was being pumped to the camp for the 11,000 khaki inhabitants. Artesian wells have for some years supplied Barriefield militia camps, but last year, when the total camp population reacher 4,500, the wells had all they could do to supply the demand. When it was decided that nearly three times that number might be sent here, the engineers had to figure upon a new source of supply. Col. Burritt secured an electric pump and placed it on Cartwright's Point, on the river just below the heights, and the Kingston Utilities, with the aid of the camp engineers, soon had the city's power line extended to the river, and the camp is geting all the water it requires.

Col. Hemming in Command.

The camp is commanded by Col. T. D. R. Hemming, formerly of Toronto, one of the best district commanding officers in the country. Col. Hemming's division claims the honour of having to this date recruited the largest number of overseas soldiers of any division in Canada in proportion to population. Eighty per cent. of its share of Premier Borden's half million of any army has been raised up to the end of May. The camp commandant has been a permanent force soldier for nearly thirty-five years.

City Unwilling to Light Camp.

The city last year erected a number of arc lamps along the roadway up to the camp at its own expense. It was suggested that this year it light the big camp at an estimated cost of between $12,000 and $15,000, but so far the City Council is not disposed to expend that amount of money for a "white way" in Camp Barriefield. It is paying the cost of extending the power line for water supply, and canteen.

thinks the Militia Department should do the lighting, since the camp is thre miles outside the city limits. Kingston makes a lot of money out of the troops, but Mayor Richardson figures that only five per cent. of the people get any direct benefit, and he does not favour taxing the citizens in general to electrify the war camp. If the Militia Department would announce that the camp would not be reduced when Camp Borden is ready to receive its thousands, then the Council might make the necessary expenditure, but Kingston is as canny as the proverbial Scot.

Means of Communication.

To reach the camp one must cross a temporary wooden bridge which spans the Rideau River. The new Government causeway will not be completed this year, and the traffic over this small wooden structure is tremendous. The causeway was to have been finished last month, but defective work was done, and some of the piers of concrete had to be blown out and must now be replaced. There is an excellent taxi service to and from the camp, and the traffic is pretty well regulated

Success In Controlling Liquor.

Col. Hemming has had great success with regard to liquor restriction. Last week an order came forth stating that if hotels abused their privileges they would be placed out of bounds. A couple of days ago the hotelkeepers decided that not only would they refuse to sell anything but beer to soldiers after 6 p.m., but they would include civilians in this prohibition, and the result is that between 6 and 8 p.m. no hard liquors can be bought in the city bars.

Order Is Excellent.

Two military guard houses have been opened in the city—at the Armouries and in the old Market building. Military police to the number of 100 do patrol duty, and thus far the order maintained has been excellent.

Camp Notes.

Some of the battalions which are still under strength are making vigorous efforts to reach their complement —1,158. During the past two weeks the number of recruits enlisted in the military district exceeded that in the two previous weeks, and it is expected that recruiting will be steady.

The bayonet instruction work at Barriefield is under the direction of Lieut. James Bews, physical instructor of Queen's University, who took the recent course held in Montreal.

The machine gun section of the 109th Battalion, Lindsay, is conceded to be the best in camp. It is commanded by Lieut. P. Ingledew, formerly of Kingston, and a veteran of the Boer war.

Wooden floors are being put in the tents of every battalion, and everything possible will be done in the interests of the health of the men. There are some 200 tents in each battalion, and it costs only $800 to floor them. The work is being carried on rapidly.

The Bank of Montreal has opened a branch at the camp for the convenience of the soldiers. The advisability of having a savings bank at the camp is being discussed.

The School of Cookery will soon reopen under the direction of Sergt-Major Kerrison of the Royal Military College. The Infantry School of Instructions is in operation and has 75 officers and probationary officers and N.C.O.'s in attendance. It is likely that the school will be enlarged.

The Y. M. C. A. is doing excellent work and has fitted up a splendid

ALDERMEN MAKE CHARGES AGAINST POLICE OFFICERS

Board of Control Refers Them to Controller Ross For Inquiry

MONTREAL, June 13.—More charges against two members of the city police force, who are alleged to have frequented a well-known gambling house and witnessed the illegal sale of liquor, were laid before the Board of Control by Alderman Blumenthal. Without discussion the complaint, which includes copies of evidence given in connection with a similar case as well as affidavits from two individuals who swear they saw the police officers in the house, was referred to Controller Ross, who is in charge of the police department for study and report. Controller Ross informed Mr. Blumenthal a week or so ago that if the aldermen submitted any specific complaints regarding the police department to him they would be investigated. Ald. Blumenthal in the report laid before the Board asks for a judicial investigation into his charges.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

STREETS WILL BE SWEPT BY A DUSTLESS SWEEPER

Local Concern Will Be Given a Contract to Keep the Paved Streets of the City Clean—Huge Motor-Driven Vacuum Will Do the Work—Present Cost of the Work Will Not Be Increased to Any Appreciable Extent.

WILL ELIMINATE STREET WATERING

After nearly two hours' deliberation, the committee of the Whole Council last evening decided to give the Dominion Dustless Sweeper Company, Limited, an opportunity of sweeping the paved streets of the city at a weekly cost to the city of one hundred and fifty dollars. This is in keeping with the present cost of the work. If the work is done to the satisfaction of the Council, it will mean the elimination of street watering so far as the paved streets of the city is concerned. It will also release about eight men and a team of horses for other work which the city is undertaking. A deputation headed by Ex-Mayor Buller waited upon the committee on behalf of the Dustless Sweeper Company with a proposal to do the work at a weekly cost of two hundred and ten dollars, which is at the rate of thirty-five dollars a day. The Company agreed to keep the streets thoroughly swept and free from refuse of all kinds. The elimination of street watering will also increase the life of the pavement, according to various authorities. At the Committee's request the deputation retired to the ante room while the present cost of the work was investigated. It was finally decided that between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and fifty dollars would be about the right price for the work.

The Division.

On motion of Aldermen McIntyre and Duncan, it was decided to offer the Company one hundred and fifty dollars a week for the work. An amendment which was moved by Ald. Dobbin and seconded by Ald. Evans, fixing the cost at one hundred and twenty-five dollars a week, was defeated. A second attempt to force an unanimous vote contrary to rule 23 of the Rules of Order of the Municipal Council of Peterborough was defeated.

The deputation was informed that the Council was willing to draw up a contract for the work at a weekly cost of one hundred and fifty dollars. This is to cover the paved section of the city and the work to be done in accordance with the wishes of City Engineer Parsons.

The Dominion Dustless Sweeper Company, Ltd., is a local industry that is in its infancy. The machine at present in use is mounted on a huge motor driven truck. It resembles a large vacuum cleaner and will operate on wet as well as dry pavements.

NOT A G. T. R. EMPLOYEE KILLED

Favourable Record For the Month of May is Shown

The following circular has been issued by the Grand Trunk Railway

Belleville, Ont., June 9, 1916
Circular No. 39

To all concerned,—I am glad to be able to call your attention to the fact that during the month of May not a single employee was killed on the Grand Trunk. There was only one case of an employee losing a limb, and no cases involving loss of eye or other injuries of a serious nature, so far as can be judged from the reports received at Safety Engineer's Office.

This favourable record is brought to your attention, and at the same time it is desired to impress upon all employees the necessity of constant compliance with the Company's rules and for the exercise of all proper precautions in the performance of your duties.

CHAIRMAN

FELL DOWN CELLAR BROKE HER WRIST

Mrs. Hazelwood, mother of Mrs. Jas. Dundas, of Oakwood, met with a painful accident on Sunday. Mrs. Hazelwood in some manner fell down cellar and broke her wrist. Dr. J. W. Hall of Little Britain was called to attend the injured lady. The injury was of so painful a nature that anesthetic was required.

Mother Sees Child Ground By Wheels of Freight Train

19-Months-Old Baby of Mrs. Frank Miles Killed

CHILDREN PLAYING ON TRACK RUSH CLEAR, LEAVING LITTLE ONE ON TRACK.

LISTOWEL, June 13.—A pathetic accident happened at Britain, a flag station five miles south of here on the Grand Trunk Railway, when Mrs. Frank Miles, the sectionman's wife, saw her 19-months'-old baby girl crushed to death by a heavy freight train.

The child, with others, was playing on the track. On the approach of the train all got out of the way, but the little one, which, seated between the rails, was unnoticed by Engineer Morrison of Stratford or Conductor Bender of Owen Sound, who were in charge of the train.

The mother saw the child's predicament and rushed to save it, but, realizing that time was too short to permit her getting clear of the train, had to stand back and see the child ground beneath the wheels.

VISIONS OF HOME IN TOBACCO SMOKE

A neutral newspaper man returned from the front writes, "I used to visit the hospitals in Paris and Calais. When I first arrived I took them cigarettes. When I got experience of the wounded I took only cigarettes. That odour of gassing well is dull, hard to describe pending pain. There is little conversation. Like as not the man in the next cot has no energy for talk and the nurses are chary of admitting visitors. A cigarette, with the gentle comfort which tobacco brings, helps wonderfully to pass the time while the nurses are knitting, and helps the wounded man forget that constant irritating pain which accompanies the return of life to dead flesh."

Canada's Tobacco Fund is in urgent need of funds. With the constant increase in men arriving at the front the work of trying to supply all Canada's soldiers with smoking material has become increasingly difficult and unless the public contribute more generously, many, many soldiers, strong and healthy as well as sick and wounded, will be deprived of their comforting smokes.

The Editor of the Examiner or any local Post Office or Bank will receive your contribution to Canada's Tobacco Fund of which the entire cost of organization and administration is borne by the Overseas Club.

For every quarter contributed some soldier on active service receives a packet of Canadian manufactured Tobacco, 50 best quality Canadian made cigarettes and a box of matches. Those of our readers who can help in this matter are invited to write to Mr. Francis R. Jones the organizing secretary, Windsor Hotel, Montreal. The Toronto Office is at 318 Stair Building.

ORDER-IN-COUNCIL REMITTING FINE

An order-in-Council has been issued, under the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, remitting the fine of $50 imposed by the Justices of the Peace at Cannington on the detective, Corrian, who was recently charged with being drunk in that village.

William Schmidt, Escaped German, Caught at Windsor

Made His Get-away From Fort Henry

MAN WHO WANTED TO JOIN "KAISER'S ARMY" TRIES TO LEAVE CANADA.

WINDSOR, June 13—Wm. Schmidt, aged 30, German, who was arrested here last fall and sent to Fort Henry prison farm, from which place he escaped seven days ago, was recaptured in the Michigan Central railroad yards here. Schmidt had made several attempts to get through the tunnel, even going so far as to hide himself in the water tank of a locomotive, but each time was detected, and turned back. He will be held until the authorities at Fort Henry are heard from.

Schmidt is the man who created a sensation here last October when he stepped from a Detroit ferry boat and announced that he had come to join the Kaiser's army. The man had made the mistake of crossing to Windsor after he had arrived in Detroit from Los Angeles, from which place he is said to have come on funds provided by Albert Kaltschmidt of Detroit. He declared he had been informed that when he "crossed the water" he would be back in the fatherland, and concluded that Canada must be a part of the Kaiser's domain.

AMERICA MEANS WHAT SHE SAYS

So President Wilson Tells the West Point Graduate Class

Examiner Special:

WEST POINT, N.Y., June 13. — "The world is going to know that when America speaks she means what she says." President Wilson told the American Academy graduating class to-day. The moment before he had said: "Undoubtedly, gentlemen, this is the duty of America to be prepared."

President Wilson promised, on behalf of the United States, to uphold the Munroe Doctrine. He promised, too, what he did not promise when he made the recent peace league speech: "That when the time comes America would be ready to join the other nations to see that that kind of justice that we believe in, prevails everywhere."

"To be military does not mean militaristic," the President said. He asked the West Point men not to forget that they are citizens first.

"UNDILUTED AMERICANISM"

That is to Be the Slogan of Republican Nominee For U.S. Presidency

NEW YORK, June 13.—"Undiluted Americanism" is to be the slogan of Charles Evans Hughes, the Republican nominee for President of the United States. He coined this phrase in talking with newspaper men this morning. He talked with much vigour, and bit off his words sharply. He said: "My platform is one of undiluted Americanism. Any one who supports me supports an out-and-out American policy and nothing else.

UNION DEBATE STILL CONTINUES

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, June 13.—In the Presbyterian General Assembly to-day there was a continuation of a vigorous debate on church union. It is expected that the vote will be reached before adjournment to-night.

Crew Rescued By Volunteer Life-Savers

East Side Park, N. J., June 12.—With a volunteer life saving crew recruited along the beach, Captain Martin McCarthy, the sole member of the Coast guard crew who has been left on duty during the summer months, rescued the crew of the full rigged Norwegian ship Artemis, which ran aground off shore here.

A breeches buoy was shot to the stranded ship and after the crew of 18 had come ashore the ship's commander availed himself of the life line commander Capt R.G. Sodahl, also availed himself of the life line. Several hours afterwards he returned to the ship by means of the breeches buoy and came back soon after, reporting that the vessel was in good shape and would probably be got off without much difficulty.

The Artemis was bound from Glasgow to New York in ballast. She is said to be under charter to the Standard Oil Company to carry oil in cases to Scottish ports.

ADMIRALTY PAID $25 PER TON

For Ammunition That Was Sold By Canadian Militia Department to Col. Allison for $20

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 13.—John Fraser Auditor General in the Davidson Commission, this morning produced a cable from Colonial Secretary Bonar Law, which stated that the British Admiralty paid $25 per thousand for small arms ammunition sold by the Canadian Militia Department to Col J. Wesley Allison, for $20 per thousand, and the Admiralty paid all expenses of insurance, cartage, etc.

It had been concluded that no commission had been charged on the transaction, but that by mistake a charge was made for insurance, etc., which charge was afterwards withdrawn.

Mr. Hutcheson asked if there was another transaction which might be confused in the communication. Mr. Fraser declared that he was not aware of any. The letter of the Governor-General's Secretary, asking for information was specific. Mr Bonar Law had identified the transaction or he would not have sent a reply.

"The description was specific," said Sir Charles Davidson.

Col. J. F. MacDonald, Chief Ordnance Officer of the Militia Department, was cross-examined to-day by Mr. Dewart.

"Was the Minister of Militia cognisant of the destination of the ammunition" Mr. Dewart asked.

"He put his initials on the letter," the witness replied.

NEARLY MILLION BID FOR CITY'S GARBAGE

Peterboro and other cities would do well to take notice that New York city has received an offer of $900,000 in hard cash for its garbage accumulations during the next five years. In the past New York city has been one of the cities which lacked the foresight to see that the collection and removal of the garbage might be made a source of revenue instead of an annual expense.

The offer which has been made to New York is ostensibly inspired by the prospect of greater profits due to war conditions; but the possibility of converting garbage from an item of expense to one of municipal income was known and discussed long before the war began and a failure by most cities to test the question is merely a measure of current municipal negligence and inefficiency.

PARK STREET SEWER PASSING THE G. T. R.

The Park street sewer is now nearing the end of Parnell street. On Sunday the G.T.R. rails were lifted and huge beams implanted across the excavation, and the ties and rails were relaid on this temporary structure. The workmen have struck a deep seam of sand that permits better progress. The concrete pipe is approaching close to the railway crossing and in fact may have passed beneath it to-day.

Windsor Milkmen May Be Prosecuted

Action Threatened Under War Measures Act to Compel Lower Price

WINDSOR, June 13.—Unless the dairymen of Windsor and vicinity can show good cause for the recent increase in the price of milk, action will be taken against them by the Government under the war measures act, according to word received by Mayor Jackson from Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor.

Mayor Jackson has mailed the following letter to the milk dealers and dairymen:

"Take notice that we have a communication regarding the high price of milk from Hon. Thomas W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, in which he makes the following statement:

"I am advised that milk is selling in Windsor at ten cents per quart, with one or two exceptions, which is higher than any other place in Ontario. Unless it can be shown that there are good reasons why milk should be sold at such a high price in Windsor, it will be necessary under the war measures act to compel the dealers to reduce the price, unless they voluntarily do so themselves."

At least one dairy is charging twelve cents a quart, and others were prevented from increasing their prices from ten to twelve cents by Mayor Jackson taking the matter up with the Government.

Trouble is never particular about hitting below the belt.

WILL TAKE THREE MONTHS TO GET 1916 CROP OFF

Present Rate of Movement of Grain on C.N.R. is Slow.

WINNIPEG, June 13.—At the present rate of the movement of grain due on the Canadian Northern Railway, it will take until October to get the 1915 crop off. Nearly 3,000,000 bushels are in temporary bins, thus liable to damage in the hot weather if not shipped, so Mr. W. H. McWilliams informed the Dominion Railway Board at its sitting here to-day. He stated that the Grand Trunk Pacific was willing to handle 200 cars daily from the C.N.R., and suggested the C. P. R. might possibly handle some also. No decision was reached on the matter to-day.

BASIL L. SAWERS, SON OF PETERBORO' MAN PROMOTED ON FIELD

Enlisted as a Private in Vancouver, is Now Captain in Royal Engineers

Captain Basil L. Sawers, son of Mr. C. W. Sawers a former Peterborough lawyer, and a nephew of Mr. Gus Sawers and Mrs. W. H. Moore, rose from the ranks and received his final promotion on the battlefield. The Vancouver Daily Province refers to him as follows:—

Information was received yesterday by Mr. C. W. Sawers, 1834 Barclay street, that his son Basil L., who left here in February, 1914 as a sapper in the 6th Co. Canadian Field Engineers, has been promoted to a captaincy in the 177th Cr. Royal Engineers, 9th Corps, B.E.F.

The rapid rise in the ranks of this young Vancouver youth has been phenomenal as he gained his promotion through sheer determination and merit on the firing line. He did not reach the front until almost a year after he signed with the colors but a few days after he arrived in France he was made lance-corporal. Sawer's was justly proud of his promotion at the time, but his sterling fighting ability on the battlefield and his quiet, unassuming manners behind the lines soon caught the eyes of the military authorities in France and he was transferred after being under fire by the Germans for four weeks to the Royal Engineers, one of the best known English regiments. When transferred to the Royals he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant and was only with them a short time before being awarded his lieutenancy. Now that he has been officially gazetted captain with the 177th R. E. F. Sawers' legion of friends in British Columbia will welcome the announcement with great pleasure.

He is only twenty-four years of age and is one of the three sons sent to the front by Mr. C. W. Sawers. The others, Owen and Norman, have been through some severe fighting. The former has been on the missing list for a long time and while slight hope is entertained for his ultimate discovery by his parents, many of his friends believe that he has been killed. Norman is serving as a lieutenant with the 48th Battalion, C. E. F., and has been wounded twice within the last three months.

The Sawer family is well known in rowing, rugby and athletic circles in British Columbia, Washington and California, and their extraordinary coolness in important sporting events was always the chief characteristic of their displays.

It was chiefly through the brilliant work of Captain Basil Sawers that Vancouver was able to win the Pacific Coast rugbq championship from the University of California on the frozen Brocton Point grounds five winters ago and those who had the privilege to witnessing the youngster's display at full back at that time will not forget it for a long time to come. In shilling events the trio had always been to the fore sporting the colours of the Vancouver Rowing Club.

GERANIUM DISPLAY AT VICTORIA PARK

Over three hundred geraniums of seven named varieites have been set out in the central beds at Victoria Park and are offering a splendid picture these days in their wealth of bloom and shades of colour. It will also be noticed that the beds around the central circle have been made of uniform size and position, thereby greatly improving the appearance of that section of the park. But those who are interested in geraniums will appreciate the plants that Mr. O Cable, of the Peterborough Floral Co. recently planted. There is a white, a red, several shades of pinks and a striking scarlet, and others. The observer will notice that the pinks are most conspicuous at a distance and will likely be the favourites of many, but the rich scarlet is a splendid bloom and a new variety.

Rev. F. J. O'Sullivan of Port Hope at Church of Sacred Heart To-night

An eloquent sermon by Rev. Father McCarthy of Norwood on the subject of daily communion as a means to a better and more sanctified life was a feature of the Forty Hours devotion at the Church of the Sacred Heart last night. The church held a capacity congregation and it is expected that Rev. F. J. O'Sullivan of Port Hope will speak to a large crowd to-night at 7.30 o'clock. Rev. Father McCarthy's subject followed in regular sequence that presented Rev. Dean McColl on Sunday night.

WILLIAM BEUTEL, WHO RESIDED ON LOCKPORT ROAD NEAR WALMORE, HANGS HIMSELF.

North Tonawanda, June 12.—Wm Beutel, 43 years old, who lived on a farm on the Lockport road, near Walmore, six miles from North Tonawanda, took his own life by hanging himself with a rope in the barn on his farm.

Earlier in the day he had sent his wife and two children to Niagara Falls to do some shopping. He said he was unable to go himself because of pains in his head.

When they returned the boys went to the barn and found their father's body hanging from a rafter. Beutel had been a patient at the Buffalo State hospital. Coroner J. E. Helwig of this city took charge of the case.

Creation of Dissention Among Classes of The King's Subjects, Is Also Sedition Said Judge Huycke

In his address to the Grand Jury this afternoon at the opening of the June sessions of the County Court, His Honour Judge Huycke referred to the matter of seditious utterances, reports of which had come to him from various parts of the country, both near and remote from the city. He did not wish to magnify the matter, but he had found that while many of the reports were groundless, there was a certain number based on actual facts. Hence, His honour desired the Grand Jurors as representatives of the county as a whole to acquaint him or any officer of the Crown of any seditious remarks that may come to their attention. A serious matter at any period, it was particularly serious at this time of times, and Judge Huycke remarked that he court of this county would not tolerate anything of this kind. Both in the county and city there had been reports of sedition and in order that the jurymen should clearly understand the seriousness of this offence Judge Huycke read the definition of the word and the penalties that may be inflicted.

Sedition applies not only to acts and expressions of contempt, disloyalty, etc., against the King, the Government, or of upholding the King's enemies or denouncing the King's forces in addition that which stirs up dissention within the meaning of sedition. And, commented His Honour, this has not been unknown in Canada. There is no provocation whatever for sedious utterances.

Judge Huycke referred to recent momentous events, the long battle at Verdun, the sea battle off Jutland, and the Canadian stand at Hooge. He also mentioned the deaths of Kitchener and Galleni, whose expression, "Unto the End" when he refused to enter an hospital for treatment that would have cured the disease that took him off, has become the battle cry of the valorous French from Arras to Verdun.

His Honour made reference marked by deep feeling, to the recent sorrow that had come to many Canadian homes. Many Canadians had done their duty he said, and added with something of a sigh, that many others had failed. They must be their own judges, he said with finality and passed to the usual instructions to the Jury regarding the inspection of public buildings.

The Grand Jurors are as follows:

Arthur Ash, Edzar Burnham, Thos Beatty, John Coward, John Cary, F. M. Dela Foase, Thos. Flynn, Geo. Taylor, S. T. Wellock, H. Phelan, John Gillespie, Geo. Kenyon, Geo Baird.

Late this afternoon the jury in the breach of promise suit of Sloan vs. Butler, brought in a verdict awarding plaintiff one thousand dollars and costs, which was the full amount asked. Laura Sloan, a housemaid, sued for damages from John Butler plumber, whom she charged with a breach of promise and seduction under promise of marriage. The defendant made a complete denial in his reply. Gordon and Widdifield appeared for the plaintiff and D. O'Connell for defendant.

School Friends, Scattered To All Parts of World, Meet in Detroit And Join Ranks of 91st Batt.

Hotel clerks are usually the most blase persons in existence, and are accustomed to all manner of strange meetings of old friends in front of their desks, but the air of sophistication and perpetual boredom suddenly left the face of the man behind the desk at the Pontchartrain hotel in Detroit, Thursday, as he witnessed one of the strangest gatherings of his career.

Months of correspondence were needed by S. C. Williams, construction superintendent in the employ of the United States government at Panama; R. A. M. Rankie, foreman of his uncle's sheep ranch in the Argentine Republic; Jack Oliver, mining engineer from South Africa; Dick (he objects to being called Richard) Verran, owner of a sheep ranch in New Zealand; and James Kitson, foreman at the Timken-Detroit Axle Co., in Detroit, to arrange the meeting which took place in front of the hotel desk.

WERE SCHOOL MATES.

They were school mates together and one of them wrote to the others, announcing his intention of joining the Canadian Expeditionary forces. The cables were kept busy but after the others had received their letters, and after considerable letter writing, it was arranged for all to meet in the lobby of the hotel Pontchartrain on the afternoon of June 8th.

Although Rankine had been in Detroit for a couple of days he avoided the meeting place in order that all would come out as scheduled. Promptly at noon the men entered the hotel and there was such a round of handshaking and exchanging of experiences as had never been seen before in the big hostelry.

All the men had made great sacrifices in order to join the biggest adventure of their career, and on Thursday afternoon came to Windsor. To Lieut. Olle, who is recruiting here for the Royal Canadian Dragoons, they announced their intention of enlisting.

He attempted to induce them to join the cavalry brigade but the men insisted on quick action and asked to be attached to a regiment about to leave for the front.

All were signed up with the 91st battalion, with headquarters at St. Thomas, which is due to leave for the front in a week. They went to that city on Friday morning to get their equipment and start training.

The men are well educated and of the highest type. They announced that they would put their case up before the officer commanding the 91st battalion and request that they be kept together in the same platoon, because, as one put it, "We know we can depend on one another to the end."

OPTICAL EMBARGO IS ON.

German Forbids Even Neutral Civilians Getting Instruments.

In order to prevent German optical instruments of military value from reaching the Allies through neutrals who may be able to smuggle them out of the country, the various military district commands have issued an order, according to the Cologne Gazette, forbidding the sale or gift of certain instruments to the civilians, namely, prismatic glasses of all kinds, target and terrestrial telescopes, Galilean telescopes magnifying fourfold or more, or any parts of such instruments, also photographic objectives with an intensity of light of 3.5 by f and a focal distance of over 18 centimeters. Military men may buy or be presented with such instruments on production of a special authorization showing that they are required for military purposes.

Pte. Fred. Worboy Shot While Aiding The Wounded

Peterboro' Soldier Died a Heroic Death – Lived About Thirty Minutes After Being Wounded

SHOCK TO HIS FRIENDS

The following letters, relative to the death, at the front, of Pte. Fred Warboy, were received by Mr. J Warboy and Miss Stella Warboy 507 Aylmer Street, respectively. Both letters were written by a comrade of the late Pte. Warboy.

The letters follow

May 28, 1916

Mr J. Warboy.

Dear Sir,—I am sending you a few lines, as I promised Fred I would if anything happened to him, if possible.

You will have received the sad news of his death by this time. He was carrying out a wounded man (by the name of Sandole) from the front line, when he was hit, and lived about thirty minutes afterwards. I was speaking to him five minutes before he was wounded. Jerry gave the Doctor all the particulars, such as address and next of kin, before he passed away. The Doctor told me he was the gamest man he ever attended, and that means something when there are from 25 to 100 and upwards a day.

I buried Fred the next day after he died. We had one of the Brigade and Church chaplains to officiate. We placed a cross on his grave and he has a lovely grave on the field. If I come back to Canada I will tell you more fully where your son and my friend lies, but we are not allowed to send it in letters. We are going back to the same trenches in a couple of days, and I will see that his grave is fixed up as good as possible. I will close with my sincere sympathy to yourself and family. I remain

Yours,

J. E. RUSSELL.

HAD A PASS TO ENGLAND.

Belgium, May 27, 1916.

Dear Friend,—Just come out of the trenches and now have time to write and explain how your dear brother Jerry, was killed. I suppose the only news you received was that he was killed in action. I was never so surprised in all my life when I heard of poor Fred getting it. We were going into the front line to relieve his Company when one of the men told me he was killed. Well, say, I nearly dropped on the spot. Poor fellow, he was helping to carry out a wounded man in the 18th, when he was shot through the stomach, and only lived about half an hour after. I heard that he died a very brave boy. The last words I said to him was 'Good-bye Jerry, I will see you when you come out again.' We were such good friends always together, and just think he had a pass to go to England if he had come out safely. The boys here take it pretty hard as they all thought a lot of him, for he was such a jolly fellow. I know it will be quite a blow to you, but still we must all be prepared for news, good or bad. There are a terrible lot of casualties among Peterborough boys. Well, dear friend, I have told you all for this time, but hope to come back to tell you more about it. I will close now and must express my warmest sympathy to you all. I remain,

Your friend,

Lance-Corp. A. Laplante.

MURDERS GIRL, THEN COMMITS SUICIDE

SIXTEEN YEAR OLD EVELYN HALL OF ELLICOTT SLAIN BY EDWARD R. HALLSEN.

Jamestown, June 12.—Edward R. Hallsen, 30 years old, and Evelyn Hall, 16 years old, are dead, they having died two hours apart as a result of bullet wounds inflicted by Hallsen, who was in love with the girl.

The shooting occurred yesterday in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Johnson, in the town of Ellicott, about a mile from the city. Mrs. Johnson, Evelyn's mother, and a sister Edna, who were present when Hallsen fired as he also aimed shots at them. Hallsen until a week ago, was a boarder at the Johnson home.

He left and returned yesterday. He was under the influence of liquor, according to the dead girl's mother, and demanded that the girl marry him. Mrs. Johnson shut the door in his face and later he returned kicked in the door and shot Evelyn. Walking into the kitchen of the house, he shot himself in the head. The girl was wounded in the left lung, and he had two bullet wounds.

Both were brought to the Jones General Hospital in this city. Hallsen died at 7.30 o'clock, and the girl passed away two hours later. Neither of them regained consciousness. Mrs. Johnson, too broken hearted to give a clear story, says that Hallsen fired nine shots in all.

RUSSIAN OBJECTIVE

Further Indentation of the Austrian Line Will Give Russians Access to Important Railway Centres Back of the Present Austrian Lines

APPROACHED KOVEL

LONDON, June 14.—Kovel, next to Lemberg, the most imeprtant railroad centre back of the eastern Austrian line, is now, with Lemberg and Czernowitz in Bukowina, one of the immediate objectives of the Russian drive.

Its capture would prove a serious embarrassement to the lines of the Germans toward Riga and these of the Austrians to the south.

The Russians have approached Kovel closest in the territory west of Lutsk. Further indentation of the Austrian line here would give them an opportunity to gain their objective by both a frontal attack from Rafalowka and a flanking from the south.

At these points the Russian attackers can be kept constantly munitioned by their own railroad lines running back to the bases.

Czernowitz is still in the hands of the Austrians, but its evacuation is hourly expected. Russian cavalry has already driven past it about ten miles to the north.

Governor Stanley, of Kentucky and Others in Smash at Owensboro.

OWENSBORO, Ky., June 14.—Passenger train No. 145 on the Louisville, Henderson and St. Louis Railroad, was wrecked three blocks from the Owensboro station early to-day. Three sleepers left the rails, one being destroyed by fire. No one was killed, but a number of the passengers were injured.

The Kentucky delegation to the Democratic Convention at St. Louis, including Governor A. O. Stanley and former Governor McCreary, were on the wrecked train. That no one was killed is remarkable, as one of the sleepers turned completely over. It was necessary to cut the vestibule of the car with axes to liberate the passengers. Spreading of rails caused the wreck.

Twenty-Five Per Cent. Cut In Ontario's Cereal Crops

Wet Weather Has Caused Considerable Anxiety—York County Hit —Hay Crop May Be New Value Record

PASTURAGE ABOUT BEST EVER; FARMERS RETURNING TO LIVE STOCK RAISING.

While to the average city dweller who has any opinioons at all on such matters, this season may bear the appearance of a lean year from the agricultural standpoint, Mr. W. Bert Roadhouse, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, expressed the opinion that there was still the possibility that the year would be a good one for the farmers. Hay this year promises to set a new record of value, while pasturage is good, and the farmers are taking once more to the raising of live stock.

Cereal crops, however, are anything but promising at least as regards quality.

Some sections of York County, in particular, seems to have suffered from the heavy wet hond of the Weather Man. From various parts of the rain-soaked county, as well as from scattered districts throughout the Province, it seems that the only relief may be founr by the farmers in root crops, buckwheat etc. Week after week of rain is causing anxiety and there are some indications that real hardships will result in the coming Winter especially among men who do not own their farms.

Many farmers who succeeded in planting early now regard themselves as less fortunate than their neighbours who ore still awaiting an opportunity to sow, for young grain and seed are being rooted by the excess of moisture.

"According to our reports," Mr. Roadhouse, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, stated yesterday "twenty-five per cent. of the land in the Province usually seeded to cereals has not been so seeded this year. This is largely on account of the weather, with the shortage of labour as a slight contributing factor.

"This does not mean necessarily that there will be a decrease of 25 per cent. in the agricultural returns, because the land will be utilized to a considerable extent for corn, roots, buckwheat, millet, and green fodder crops, as well as for pasture.

"Fall wheat is in pretty good shape. I was in a field last week up to my knees in as healthy fall wheat as you could see anywhere.

HAY PROMISES BIG RETURNS.

"Hay and clover are exceptionally goood, and in this Province a good crop in hay is a big thing. In 1912 we had 5,220,000 tons of hay and clover, worth $61,000,000. In 1913 there was only 4,259,000 tons and most of the best quality. The average value of our hay crop is about $50,000,000: Ours this year, if the remoinder of the season is favourable, we may strike a new record.

"When you remember that the hay crop constitutes twenty-five per cent. of the total value of our field crops and when, as at present, there is outlook for a bumper crop you can see that at least we are off to a good start.

"Taken all around the conditions in fruit are promising. Late reports from some sections indicate that the blossoms on apple and pear trees, which were very profuse, did not set for fruit to as large an extent as was expected, and consequently there may not be as large a crop as was predicted early in the season. On the whole, however, conditions are still good. Berries also are in good shape.

BACK TO BUTTER AND BEEF

"As to livestock, the excellent shape of pasturage this year has helped to stop the tendency on the part of some farmers early in the season to dispose of their dairy cattle. On the whole, the farmers are now holding their young stock, both dairy and beef and this year will see a considerable increase in this branch of farming, which with the high prices prevailing, will be a good thing for the Province. There was need of something of the sort to turn us back to stock-raising and dairying. If we can believe all we hear about the decrease in stock-breeding in Europe, we may look for a good demand in the future from America.

"There is no reason yet why we should not expect a reasonable average return from the farms of the Province this year."

It is thought that there is another steamer nearby, and that the Hydronic knocked her wheel off on this when she hit some object last week.

The Big Thing for Breakfast

And it's BIG in more ways than one.

First, there's that wonderful flavour. The crisp, nutty granules of Grape-Nuts food combine the sweets of whole wheat with the smack of malted barley—a flavour that no mere wheat food can rival.

Next comes the remarkable digestive quality. (Malted barley contains a natural digestive element.) Grape-Nuts digests quickly, and weak as well as strong stomachs handle it comfortably.

And then comes the wonderful nourishing value. No other cereal food puts the vim and vigour into body and brain that Grape-Nuts does.

This food-standby tells its own story after trial.

ITALY'S AIR HERO RETURNS TO THE FRONT FOR A REST

With a multitude of efficient airmen in her service, Italy has one air hero. Captain Oreste Salomone, a Jew, had so often confronted death in the performance of notable military undertakings that his name was becoming a household word throughout the peninsula when suddenly the Italian public was electrified by the announcement of a new and astounding exploit which put Capt. Salomone in the very first rank among the aviation leaders of the world.

The piloting of a great three motor aeroplane far into the enemy's country, with three passengers and half a ton of explosives; the carrying out of his mission to drop the explosives on the supply sheds at the headquarters of the Austrians in Laibach, through a hail of projectiles from two attacking air squadrons aloft and from aircraft guns below and the return to his own base, wounded himself and with all his passengers dead, the body of one lying over his shoulder and that of another over his arms as he steered the air machine, constituted a feat of coolness, courage and endurance such as rarely has been paralleled.

Modest and simple in demeanor, Capt. Salomone before the war was quietly and obscurely working at his vocation and preparing himself for the performance of eminent service when the hour should arrive. He is thin and seemingly frail, with an emaciated, pallid face and bony hands. It is not easy for the superficial observer to conceive him as the man of almost superhuman spirit and endurance and of nerves of steel, who refused to be turned back by overwhelming odds from the path of duty which led through a thick hail of death, and who miraculously returned to his own camp with a cargo of dead bodies, his military task, however, accomplished.

DEATH AVOIDS HIM

It has indeed become a saying that death avoids Captain Salomone. At Centocelle he gave an exhibition flight on a monoplane before the Queen Mother Margherita. From a height of about a hundred feet his machine suddenly turned over in the air and fell headlong to the ground.

"The moment it turned," he later narrated, "I said to myself, This time I'm done for." The monoplane was smashed and I had great trouble in pushing my way through the debris. Arising slowly and gingerly, I felt my legs, my arms, my breast, my head, believing that I could not possibly have escaped injury.

Many persons rushed up and I was placed in an automobile and driven to the Queen's presence.

"Where is the pilot" she asked with concern.

"He is safe" I replied.

"Impossible" she exclaimed.

"It is really the case, Your Majesty for I am the pilot."

"The Queen congratulated me earnestly on my escape from what she thought was certain death. Death really does not seem to want me," Capt Solomone added with a smile.

It has been almost impossible to induce the aviator to speak in any detail on the exploit which has made him an international figure. An Italian writer, who has been a friend of his for years, Signor Ottavio de Sica, has finally succeeded in drawing from him some interesting facts regarding the great raid and publishes them in the Rome Tribuna.

"The first of my companions in the machine to die," said Captain Salomone, "was Colonel Barbieri. His body fell on the steering wheel. He had a wound in the neck from which the blood was spouting. The strong wind, blowing against me sprayed the warm blood all over my face. The weight of his body interfered with my movements and I had to keep throwing his forward with my elbow. It was positive anguish for me to have to repel by force that body, which I would have liked to lift tenderly in my arms.

WOULD NOT BE DISSUADED.

"And to think" he added pensively, "that Colonel Barbieri should not have taken part in that flight. On the previous day he had asked me to take him with me on the trip which he knew was intended, and I begged of him not to think of such a thing.

You weigh 180 pounds, I said, and I would have to leave four large bombs behind.

"You would have four bombs less, but you would have two eyes more, he answered and as I persisted in requesting him to give up the idea he turned away rather aggrieved. He had his mind set on the trip, so he addresses himself to Captain Bailo, who was to take part in the raid, and the latter promised that arrangements would be made for the colonel to accompany us.

"We had to reduce the cargo of bombs and to take some of smaller dimensions.

"About five o'clock next morning half an hour before we were to set out, the colonel came to me smiling and rubbing his hands.

"I am going to fly with you in spite of your opposition,' he said jokingly.

"He was a brave man and exceedingly agreeable personally. Besides the military qualities which he possessed in the erudition and a limitless culture in the arts. When Gabriele d'Annunzio came to call on us on one occasion the colonel did the honors at a luncheon, and he recited most oppositely so many extracts from the poet's odes that the latter was deeply touched and expressed his sincere appreciation.

"Captain Bailo was not killed instantaneously like the colonel. He survived his wound for eight or ten minutes. He fell on my neck from behind and remained there without being able to utter a word.

"His fiancee, who has the illusion that he gave me some message for her before he died, writes to me every day. Her letters are pathetic in the extreme and it is a daily grief for me to read them. To-day's letter has already arrived," he added drawing from his pocket an envelope boardered with black.

It had been said that during the raid Captain Salomonne had turned his machine downward to give the Austrians the impression that he was going to land in order to stop their fierce attacks. This however, he denies.

RIFLE AND ARTILLERY ATTACK

"If I had attempted to simulate a landing," he said, "I should never have been able to reach the necessary altitude again. The two enemy aeroplanes which hung on to me the longest, the one above my machine, the 'Caproni' and the other below it, abandoned the attack only when they had run out of ammunition. They landed for the evident purpose of getting supplies to continue the attack.

WHY WOMEN WRITE LETTERS

To Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

Women who are ill often ask "Are the letters which the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. are continually publishing, genuine?" "Are they truthful?" "Why do women write such letters?"

In answer we say that never have we published a fictitious letter or name. Never, knowingly, have we published an untruthful letter, or one without the full and written consent of the woman who wrote it.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and suffering.

It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, nervousness, weakness, stomach troubles and from the blues.

It is impossible for any woman who is well and who has never suffered to realize how these poor, suffering women feel when restored to health; their keen desire to help other women who are suffering as they did.

Fat Folks.—When the cold facts and figures of the insurance actuaries get after people they usually sit up and take notice. Hit any big corporation in the cash box and it will find out how and why the blow was given. We have all heard the saying, "Laugh and grow fat," and also the Shakespearian philosophy regarding the safety of dealing with fat, sleek, well fed man and the danger that may arise from people with a lean and hungry look ,also the joke about "Nobody loves a fat man," and we sometimes wonder about all these things.

The life insurance companies, however, make it their business to find out the why and the wherefore. I have often told you that most people that were over-weight were so simply because they ate too much, do not properly masticate their food but wash it down with liquids. As a rule such people are happy, good natured and do a great deal of talking while eating. One cannot well do two things at once. Talking with a mouthful of food is frequently attempted, but both the talking and eating is a failure as far as efficiency is concerned, and as the good entertainer enjoys an abundance of food and his or her friends at the same time the habit of washing down the unchewed food is soon formed.

The life insurance companies find that long life is to the lean. "A short life and a merry one" may sound good but after a few years of the merry life the disagreeable features of obesity and the suffering of short breath and the fear of early death become more real and actual suffering increases.

The statistics show that the risk of life insurance companies on persons overweight is very greatly in excess of those that are under-weight. Many companies refuse to insure such people and others will take them only at greatly increased charges. These things are all matters of simple, easily demonstrated fact, and the person that is over-fat and stays so, is simply shutting his eyes to the fact that he is flirting with his own future discomforts as well as with disease and early death.

The principal reason why one eats so much more when the food is not properly masticated is that the sense of taste and appetite is not satisfied. The person that eats rapidly usually eats much more than one that eats slowly, also one that forces liquids to do the work that should be done by the teeth, eats a much greater quantity and at the same time robs the stomach of the digestive juices that would be naturally secreted in the mouth during the process of thorough mastication.

In Vol. 3 of my Home Health Club books I have given a simple and practical method of disposing of the excess fat without any impairment of strength or danger of illness that frequently follows the taking of anti-fat remedies. Taking the advertised remedies for Obesity is about as sensible as trying to freeze a pail of water by fanning it.

Nature always attends to the cure whenever the cause of any discomfort or disease is overcome. One that removes the fat by removing the cause will remain in normal flesh and health while those that attempt the process through drugs will lose the health whether they do the fat or not.

BULGARS SET EXAMPLE

Unlike Germans, Respected Red Cross on Lady Paget's Hospital

There was a large party at King's Cross to welcome Lady Paget and fifty-four other members of the Serbian Relief Fund Hospital staff at Uskub on their return to London. A well-known member of Lady Paget's party said: "We have travelled back to England via Roumania, Russia, Sweden and Norway. On October 22 the Bulgarians entered Uskub. Their advance was so rapid that there was no possibility of getting the patients safely out of the hospital. Lady Paget pluckily decided to stay behind to look after them. The line of battle went right through the hospital buildings, but the Bulgarians respected the Red Cross flag.

"There were 800 patients, about half of them being Serbs, and the other half Bulgars. The Bulgarians, I believe, did what they could to help. They told us they were anxious to stand well in English eyes. The refugee population, kept alive from the relief fund stores, numbered many thousands. Lady Paget organized daily relief for about 4,000 people.

"King Ferdinand, and both the young princes came to Uskub before we were permitted to leave. None of them, however, came to the hospital. After leaving Uskub we were detained in sofia for a month. Lady Paget was the guest of the Queen of Belgium. I was allowed to visit the British prisoners—of whom there were about thirty—and they all spoke well of their general treatment. Two prisoners we were able to bring away, Private Morris and Private Woodbine, the latter being blind."

OATS OF BARBED STEEL

German Slim Trick to Kill the British Horses

Barbed oats are the instruments of offence invented by Germans. The War Office has had to issue to responsible officers in charge of cavalry and other mounted forces an order that every bushel of oats now must be examined carefully before it is used. It has been discovered that some of the sacks of oats purchased in the United States contained little pieces of steel, shaped like oats, and painted yellow. These are barbed, and a horse that swallowed one would have little chance of life. The placing of the barbed oats in the food is considered to be the work of Germans who have obtained employment in American granaries in order to kill the horses at 5,000 miles range.

FOR OILY HAIR.

Very oily, straight hair that clings limpy to the scalp may be shampooed weekly without injury, for such hair collects dust readily, and it is hard to brush out.

The dry shampoo of orris and corn meal, brushed into and out of the hair restores it to fluffiness temporarily, but not more than once or twice should this means be resorted to, for some of the powder will lodge under the hair against the scalp, and must be thoroughly washed out within a fortnight, or it will retard the healthy growth of the hair.

To apply the dry shampoo arrange the hair in a loose pompadour all round the head. Do not part it anywhere, for it is not desirable to have the powder penetrate to the scalp itself.

Shake the mixture of orris and cornmeal thickly over the hair, holding the head over a basin or bathtub, so that the powder will not fly about, on the carpet and be trodden in.

When the head is well covered with powder, pat the hands lightly against the pompadour, all around to settle the powder in. Then loosen the hair and shake it well over the basin or tub.

After this brush and brush, and brush it, cleaning the powder from the brush frequently. The locks will be delightfully soft and fluffy, every separate hair standing up from the scalp as healthy young hair does.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

His Affinity

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

"Jim," said my friend Mrs. Mowbry, "why don't you get married?"

"Nonsense, Helen! You know as well as I that we men don't marry the women; they marry us."

"But," Helen persisted, "if no woman chooses to take the trouble to bring you down and you don't care to remain single, deprived of wife, children and the comforts of a home, it seems to me that you had better bestir yourself."

Helen was a matchmaker. I knew she had some scheme on hand and waited for her to declare it.

"I can make it easy for you," she continued. "I know a girl who, like you, has put off matrimony too long and has begun to realize that she is drifting toward a lonely old spinsterhood. I have offered to help her out. I have invited her to spend July and August with me at Fernwood. I shall have other guests during the summer, both men and women. I shall tell her that I have a man in view for her. How would you like to be that man?"

"Helen," I exclaimed admiringly, "you are the queen of matchmakers! Had you told me you had a girl for me and introduced me to her, she and I, knowing of your plan, would doubtless have spurned each other. Your proposal is delightful. I enter into it with all my heart. But why do you assume that there will be a natural selection between us?"

"I don't. I simply assume that you are persons of opposite sex who seek a mate. The mate being at hand, perhaps you will recognise it if you are left to yourselves to do so."

I spent a number of week ends at Helen's country seat, besides two weeks in August.

I fancied she had got up the scheme to make a match between me and some dear friend of hers, and I believed that I might find out the young lady by the fact that she was some one Helen adored. But I knew that Helen would conceal this adoration from me.

I settled upon a Miss Jewett, one of her guests during the summer whom I had heard her speak of quite often before as the lady between whom and me there was to be a natural selection. Miss Jewett was evidently a young woman not especially of beauty or endowed with such lightweight frivolities as are usually attractive to men. In other words, there was a lot to her, though I admit the words are a very poor description. I met her at a week end visit early in the summer and, having settled upon her as the lady intended for me, showed her considerable attention. To tell the truth, she interested me in conversation and I preferred her company.

I met her at Helen's again in July and was counting on further pleasant moments with her, but this time she was principally taken up with a Mr. Judkins, whom she seemed never to tire of. If I were talking with her and Judkins came up she would dismiss me with a nod, accompanied by a smile, and I was thus commanded to give place to him. After three days at Fernwood I went back to town disgruntled.

During the longer period I spent at Fernwood Miss Jewett was again a visitor there. She seemed delighted to meet me again, and we were getting on nicely when that fellow Judkins reappeared, and again my association with Miss Jewett was broken up.

"I suppose," I grumbled to my hostess, "that you've got another couple besides me and my unknown to bring together—Miss Jewett and that cad Judkins. What she can see in him"—

Helen smiled and turned away without listening to the rest of it, and I went off to hunt up some of the other spinsters, none of whom interested me in the least. Judkins went away Sunday evening in a tete-a-tete with "his selection," which was what I considered her. She had the tact to ignore him now that he was gone, and I had never known her to be so entertaining.

Not long after this I told Helen that her selection plan for me must have gone awry, since I had evidently run across Judkins' affinity. But she turned the subject, giving me no satisfaction.

The summer passed without any selection between me and a girl, so far as I could see, but during the winter I saw a great deal of Miss Jewett. I ceased to be interfered with by Judkins and—well, to make a long story short, I made a match with Miss Jewett. Tom Mowbry and his wife were at the wedding, and after the ceremony Tom handed his wife a valuable pearl necklace. I asked how he came to give it to her on that especial occasion.

"She won it on a bet. Last winter she bet me that within a year she would make a match between you and the wife you have just married."

I turned to Helen: "You played me false. My affinity was in your secret."

"Of course she was. Didn't you say, 'We men don't marry the women; they marry us?'"

"Thank you very much, Helen," said my wife, "for helping me out. I am sure we shall be very happy."

"How about Judkins?" I asked in wonderment.

"Stool pigeon!" shouted Tom.

"Great Scott!" I exclaimed. "Is there no honor among women?"

"Yes," said Helen; "the same honor there is among thieves."

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

GERMANS IN JAVA COMPLAIN.

Declare They Will Leave Dutch West Indies When War is Over.

Bitter complaints about the strong anti-German feeling in the Dutch East Indies are voiced by a prominent German merchant of Surabaya, Java, in a letter printed in a recent number of the Hamburger Nachrichten, excerpts from which follow:

"As before, we continue to be fed with lies and malice from morning to night here. Even if we are becoming inured to this, still it hurts our feelings to encounter so much hatred for the Fatherland in the country that we have made our second home. This has sorely grieved many Germans out here and has made them so disgusted with Java that they will certainly pack up and leave after the war is over.

"I had always believed that the German successes would slowly change the sentiment here. This has not been the case, however—the news service of our enemies' functions too Pro Veritate, Oorlogsberichten uit well. The worst papers here are the Surabayasch Handelsblad and the Nieuws van den Dag. They try to outdo each other in making low attacks upon the Germans in Java.

"We have made good progress with our German publications here, so that now we have the reports of the Paul. Pro Veritate, Oorlogsberichten uit Duitsche Bladen, and the Deutsche Wacht. Our collections for the good cause are also being kept up. The Germans in the Dutch East Indies have already raised almost 300,000 florins. (about $120,000)."

ZEPPELINS A BOOMERANG

Why They aHve Done the Germans More Harm Than Good

Comparison of the aerial defences of Paris with those of London to the detriment of the latter have followed every successful Zeppelin raid upon the Imperial metropolis. Critics have pointed to the immunity of Paris as proof of the incompetence of the British air service and of the inadequacy of defence provisions by the War Office. The reason for the apparent superiority of the French authorities in the defence of their capital was, however, stated in an interview given by Prince Poniatowski, an attache of the French War Office, upon his arrival in New York to purchase aeronautical supplies for his Government. "London is as well off as far as equipment goes to ward off Zeppelin raids as Paris," he said. "The reason that they are made on England instead of on Paris is that to make a successful raid on the French capital and return safely, they must cross the firing lines twice. Paris also can get an adequate warning. In attacks on London, on the other hand, the Zeppelins have no firing lines to cross and can descend upon the English city without warning."

In the Prince's opinion, the Zeppelins have done the German cause more harm than good and he sums up their efforts in a few brief but pointed sentences: "The Zeppelins, as an engine of war, have acted as a boomerang for these reasons: They have aroused England to a high pitch of patriotism in quicker time than would otherwise have been possible; they have meant an enormous cost, they have obtained no military results; and they have aroused the disgust of the neutral nations. The Germans argue that their Zeppelin raids are a part of their military offensive. If this is so, why don't the Zeppelins fly over the firing lines and drop bombs on the soldiers, instead of flying over cities far afield and dropping bombs on women and children."

Huns Fooling the Dutch

Revelations are accumulating about the cunning character of the German intrigue to arouse feeling against the allies. Baron von Kuhlmann, the notorious German publicity agent, is clearly indicated as the author of the insidiously spread canard, now fully exposed, that the allies intended to land troops in Holland. Some of the Dutch papers are pointing out that this palpable lie obscured the vital issue about the torpedoing of the Dutch ships by the German submarines.

Serb in Anglican Pulpit

A Serbian priest, Father Nicolia Velimirovcie, has been preaching at St. Margaret's, Westminster. Russian music was sung by the choir before the sermon. The church was quite full half an hour before the service began. Taking as his subject "The Slav Orthodoxy," the preacher said he looked upon Anglicanism as a true religion lived by the people, but it seemed to him less vivid, less compelling, and less national than the religion of the Russian Church. He would welcome a union between the churches which would bind the Russian and the British races in a true brotherhood.

CALLOUS ENEMY

German Submarine Crew and Agony of Their Victims

The "Echo de Paris" received details from Corfu of the loss of the French torpedo boat destroyer Renaudin in the Adriatic. The vessel was cruising when an explosion cut the ship in two. While the survivors were struggling in the water a large submarine of a new type appeared. The officers and sailors remained indifferent to the agony of the swimmers. A French torpedo boat destroyer cruising in the neighborhood hastened to the scene, whereupon the submarine disappeared. The destroyer took the thirty-eight men rescued to Brindisi.

Prince of Wales in Cairo

The Prince of Wales' visit to Egypt resulted in many beggars of Cairo blessing his name, though he is ignorant of the fact. A correspondent saw the Prince making some purchases in the bazaar, and, when the business was concluded, he approached the merchant and asked him if he knew whom he had had the honor of serving. The merchant shook his head, and when informed of the truth he burst into loud lamentations. He had shamelessly overcharged the Prince, and nothing could convince that he could not suffer an ignominious death. The correspondent promised that if the merchant distributed largesse to the poor in the Prince's name he himself would personally intercede with the Prince on the merchant's behalf. The merchant thankfully agreed.

GERMANS COMPLAIN OF SUGAR SHORTAGE

Housewives May Have to Accept Less Than Present Monthly Allowance

GOVERNMENT CRITICISED FOR REDUCING BEET ACREAGE AND PREVENTING CO-OPERATION.

Reports from the principal beet raising districts of Germany appearing in recent issues of German newspapers indicate that the German hausfrau may have to make ends meet with even less than the monthly allowance of a kilo (2.2 pounds) a head fixed by the Imperial Sugar Bureau and that the failure of the farmers to increase their acreage to any great extent will hardly be equalized by the decision of the food dictator, von Batocki, to restrict the consumption of sugar to human beings, as reported in a special cablegram from Berlin to The New York Times on June 8.

It appears that the appeal issued by the Prussian Minister of Agriculture last December calling upon the farmers to increase their acreage of sugar beets did not meet with enthusiastic response, as there was more money to be made in raising grain and potatoes. A shortage of sugar will be especially hard on the fruit canners and the families that make their own preserves and will have an unfavorable reaction on the demand for meat and fat which has been largely covered by the substitution of sweets.

Writing from Magdenburg, a correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung, reports in part:—

"It is still uncertain how much larger the coming sugar acreage will be. According to reports received by the refineries, there are some districts that count on an increase of 20 to 30 per cent., but these are in the minority. On the other hand there are districts where the acreage will be about the same as last year and in some cases will be even smaller. So the pernicious reduction of last year will hardly be half made good this year, even though at the same time the cultivation of sugar beets has been favoured by price increases, although it has not yet been sufficient protected against the competition of other root vegetables. Our only hope is that the weather may be favourable for a good crop and permit its satisfactory gathering."

DAMAGE BY STORM.

Since this report from Madgeburg was sent out there have been cablegrams received here telling of heavy storms that swept over some of the most important agricultural parts of Germany doing immense damage to the growing crops and washing out entire fields of potatoes etc. Commenting on the new sugar regulations, the Madgeburg correspondent says:—

"People consider the fixing the monthly consumption at one kilo a head an unfortunate arrangement. Meat, bread, and potatoes are consumed in about the same way all year around but with us sugar is not that kind of a staple, as its consumption rises and falls with the different seasons of the year and according to the good or poor results of the fruit crop. Furthermore, we must consider the variations of the demand in the different districts for which an inexperienced Imperial Bureau is hardly likely to make timely provision.

"The particular regulations made necessary by the war would have been worked out much more simply and cheaply if the business circles concerned had not been denied the opportunity of efficient co-operation.

A Berlin dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung makes suggestions regarding the manner in which the consumption of sugar may be limited, pointing out that in the making of lemonade and other articles requiring no real food substances saccharine may be used as a substitute. In connection with the criticism directed at the sugar card system it is stated that there is little doubt that supplementary card will be issued during the preserving season.

In view of the development of the situation the German hausfrau is not expected in the future to pay much attention to statements issued by the Association of German Sugar Refiners, as that body sent out a notice to the trade the last week in February declaring that there was no danger of a shortage, and that the housewives had no cause to lay in extraordinary supplies. A lack of sugar in Germany, the great beet sugar producing country stirs the Berliner Vorwarts to the following comment: —

"What a grotesque occurrence! At the beginning of the war, Germany was smothering in sugar. A third of the sugar produced in Germany formerly went abroad, because the German consumption or sugar and the development of the industries entailing the use of sugar were artificially hampered in Germany by the high tax on sugar. The order prohibiting the export of sugar caused the manufacturers, who feared a drop in price on the domestic market, to storm the Imperial Ministry of the Interior. Dr. Delbruck yielded to the pressure, and if public opinion had not unanimously opposed it, England, as the North German Gazette asserted, would have been indirectly supplied through neutral countries with sugar by Germany, 'without injury to the interests of the domestic demand.'

SUGAR EXPORT 'UNTHINKABLE'

"To-day permission to export sugar is quite unthinkable. The sugar beet acreage last year was 31.6 per cent., less than that of the last year of peace, and the product per hectare also fell off noticeably. The sixth supplement of the memorial on the economic measures due to the war estimates the crop as 3,830,000 tons at the most, against 5,850,000 tons in the season of 1912-13.

"This falling off is explained by the fact that the cultivation of the sugar beet requires deep plowing and careful attendance, something which, because of the shortage of fertilisers, horses, and men, was hard to accomplish. There were also other reasons that can not be attributed to an act of God, but to the Government's neglect. Through the exorbitant prices for cattle and meat the prices of all fodder were enormously advanced. Consequently, the farmer found it more profitable to raise fodder, beets and potatoes, in place of sugar beets and to use his crop of sugar beets for fodder, despite their low percentage of albumen, than to take them to the sugar mill. Therefore, the downright exorbitant prices for meat stand in a causative connection with the present shortage of sugar.

"As a consequence of the shortage of fodder, sugar was used as a substitute for oats. In the season of 1914-15 there were 522,300 tons used as fodder. Besides some 187,000 tons were used in the production of spirits, etc. All this caused the rich stocks to shrink so seriously that, together with the new crop, they seemed only just sufficient to cover the demand. But to all appearance the supply unfortunately is not large enough to carry us through, unless the sugar refiners or dealers are holding back their stocks for speculation purposes. This assumption is probably true."

A "Scotch" Bull—A speaker at a Prohibition convention in Glasgow made the following remark:—"If we had been Irish, the people of Scotland would have had it long ago." And it passed by without even a smile from the audience.

NERVY FRENCH OFFICER

Business and Resource Through Long Period Gave Him Freedom

French journals print a remarkable account of a French officer who succeeded in escaping, after being severely wounded, from captivity in Germany. The officer, who was a captain in an African regiment, went through the battle of Charleroi in August, 1914, and a few days later, during the retreat, had orders to capture a German battery. During the charge he was wounded in the chest with a bullet. His men left him for dead after removing his papers, but he was picked up by the German Red Cross.

A week later he was suffering from pleurisy. Even after two months his wound was still discharging, and he was so weak that he could not stand. Day after day, with great difficulty, he regained strength by gradually increasing exercise in his room. He let his beard grow and stopped washing, so as to be able to pass as a tramp. A village girl, a nurse, gradually brought him civilian clothes, gave him money, and procured him a key of a secret door.

He escaped one dark night and, passing as a Belgian refugee, got rough farm work, and in return bought food and board. The wound, however, re-opened, and at all costs he had to get attention, so he forged a pass and got into the town. There he found an old French doctor, who treated him. He was employed in the town in all sorts of odd jobs, as stableman, clerk, grocer's assistant, etc. During this period all men between eighteen and fifty had to go before the Military Governor, but he was not suspected.

In March, 1915, nearly cured, the officer determined to get back to France. For this a passport was necessary, but obviously impossible to get. He had, however, made the acquaintance of an old smuggler, whom he persuaded to get him a passport. The smuggler got him a passport for a town near the Belgian frontier. He got into relations with a peasant, to whom he had an introduction, and who gave him a heavy cart to drive over the frontier. As the cart crossed it stuck in the mud, and a German sentry himself helped get it out. In Belgium he got papers as a Belgian citizen and permission to travel near frontier towns. He finally managed to reach Holland. To get a passport to England was an easy matter, but once there he was arrested as a German spy, because of his curious clothing. He was released almost at once, and on his return to Paris was able to give valuable information to the military authorities. Having already been decorated with the Legion of Honor he was awarded the Croix de Guerre.

Prince and Little Girl

When Prince Alexander, of Serbia, visited the front near Verdun, he received a large bunch of wild flowers from the children of a village near the firing line. To the little girl who made the presentation he said: "And now, in return, I will give you my photograph and sign my name to it." The little girl nodded, all smiles and dimples; but when he drew out a photograph—his very latest—she suddenly burst into tears. "Whatever is the matter?" he asked. "I wanted you to sign my picture. It is much, much prettier," sobbed the child. And she drew from her pocket a crumpled picture postcard showing the Prince with pink cheeks, sky blue eyes and raven hair. "Yes," agreed the Prince, "that is much prettier;" and signed it forthwith. And the little maid departed, all smiles again.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SACK APRON.

By Anabel Worthington.

The desire for an apron that would assert its serviceability by its cut may be gratified by following the guidance of the pattern No. 7,755—a very practical style for the work that requires time and effort. Canning may be thought of as work that would require this type of apron—and there is other work for which we need an apron that will cover us completely when we are, as we say, "up to our necks." To relieve the plainness it will be well to introduce a little contrasting goods, perhaps to bind the collar and wristband cuffs. The garment buttons at the back and may have long or short sleeves and be given round, low or high neck. A generous pocket in either side of the skirt portion will have more use than the picture tells. Especially when the weather is warm an apron like this may be worn without a dress.

The pattern is cut in small, medium and large sizes. For the medium size it will take to reproduce the design 4½ yards of 36 inch material, with ½ yard contrasting goods.

You may obtain the patron by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

ERZERUM'S FALL SHOCK TO GERMANS

Paul Harms Wants to Know Why von Hindenburg is Kept in the Background.

Much more importance is attached by the German press to the fall of the Turkish stronghold of Erzerum before the advancing hosts of the Czar than is indicated by the semi-official assurances sent out by the Government press agency to the effect that the loss of the city is of no great consequence. Numerous articles in recent issues of German newspapers reveal a strong undercurrent of dissatisfaction with the conduct of the campaign in the Caucasian region and show considerable apprehension regarding future developments in that section. Furthermore, it is hinted rather openly that the German public is tired of seeing Field Marshal von Hindenburg remain comparatively inactive and would like to see him sent either to Turkey or to the fighting front in the West.

What is probably the most important of the articles so far published on the Erzerum question was written by Paul Harms, the well-known publicist, and appeared in the Berliner Tageblatt of Feb. 20. After assuring his readers that the loss of Erzerum does not affect Germany as much as the retreat from the Aisne, the evacuation of Belgrade, or the fall of Przemysl, Herr Harms invites them to consider the full political significance of the event and to reconsider the question as to what is the real meaning of the war in the southeast for Germany.

Doubt as to Campaign's Meaning.

He says that at the beginning of the war it was thought that the genius of Bismarck and Moltke had returned and that Germany's military and political forces, through perfect co-operation, were about to free Central Europe and clear the road toward Asia, and continues:

"To-day we must ask whether this view was right, and whether perhaps we gave too far extended a meaning to the war. Perhaps, after all, we understand the meaning of the war better if we say that it never was a question of opening up the roads to the future of German economic expansion. Perhaps the meaning of the war was only that we should win and fortify for our allies in the Balkans the positions for which they were striving before the war, but which they could not maintain alone against the Anglo-Russian intrigues with Serbia, and which they undoubtedly must have if the war was to have any sense for them."

The writer then emphasizes the need for patience and says that Germany can only wait to see "whether her military achievements will bring in corresponding political and economic fruits," and alludes to the possibility of Germany failing to win the conditions necessary for her economic future and being compelled to fall back upon the hope that a new generation, hardened by its experiences in the trenches, will prove more efficient than the men now ruling Germany.

Herr Harms is not overoptimistic regarding the prospects of the recapture of Erzerum, and recommends caution in connection with German activities in Turkey in the following language:

"We shall be heartily glad if it is true that the Russians will fare with Erzerum as they did with Przemysl. But in so far as there is a question of German support in driving out the Russians, one would like to recommend caution. We have recently heard much from close observers about the just self-confidence of the revived Turkey. In face of this, we ought really to be cautious in any reference to the possibility of giving a brave people help which it may not want. In the present case we should do this all the more because the just desire of Turkey henceforward to maintain herself by her own strength is by no means contrary to what we shall in future have to recognize as the line upon which to pursue our interests.

Constantinople's Security Vital.

"The security of Constantinople is for us, for the sake of our allies, a political vital interest. But if a decision cannot at present be reached in the Eastern Mediterranean, and after the war the old status quo at the Golden Horn, with its glorious and profitable intrigues, were once more a gnaw at the vitals of strengthened Turkey, the question of Erzerum would remain for us a matter by no means of indifference, but it would assuredly no longer be a vital interest. We should have to put up with it, as we shall have to put up with other things."

In justifying his statements about Erzerum the writer says that they may not harmonize with the tone which has become customary in Germany during the war, but that "we do not live in this serious and great time for the purpose of shirking its most pregnant problems by means of a few cheap phrases." He then declares that, although the people are willing to hope that everything is for the best, they are astonished at present by the fact that a great leader who enjoys the full confidence of the public has for the last year been tied up with duties which apparently could have been performed by some one else. Further on Herr Harms says:

"We wonder, although of course we say at once that there must be some good reason for these things. We are not quite so perfectly convinced as the generation of 1870 was that in every case the best man in Germany is in the right post. Of course, we do not doubt that there is the best will to fill every post most appropriately, and we do not even abandon this faith when things go otherwise than we unreasonably supposed that they would go.

"Only one thing could disturb our faith—if the opinion were to be allowed to grow that this war and all its military and political events were matters which did not concern the people. According to this view the people is expected to perform quietly its appointed labour, however long it may last, and to wait patiently—not with the patience which comes of self-discipline, but with that tortoise-like patience which is the sign of the depression of intellectual life to the level of the beasts—for the moment when the people shall be informed that the war is now over, and that it may again open its eyes and look around.

"We desire now already to try to see with our own eyes things which have happened and from which we now stand at a certain distance. And we desire to make a special effort in this direction if for important reasons it is not possible to disclose the whole connection of events in public. It is the duty of the citizen to share to the best of his ability in the understanding of the events of the war, and, although it may be inconvenient, he cannot escape this duty, especially when he gets a warning from so serious an incident as the conquest of Erzerum by the Russians undoubtedly is."

"Strategic Defensive" Suggested.

In a leading editorial the Frankurter Zeitung suggests that the fall of Erzerum may compel the Turks to adopt "a strategic defensive," and says that the course to be pursued will have to be decided in Constantinople and Germany. The Frankfurter Zeitung's military correspondent says:

"Determined leadership and considerable reinforcements are necessary for the Turks, and nothing could be more purposeless, or, indeed, more dangerous, than attempts to hush the matter up. Nothing will help here but clearness of judgment and will."

Colonel Medicus, a military correspondent of the Neueste Nachrichten of Munich, admits that the fall of Erzerum has a military as well as a political importance, but thinks Russian successes in the south-east will not seriously affect the general situation, and concludes that the more Russian troops are held in Asia the better it is for the Central Powers in the West.

The Hamburger Nachrichten ends a long history of the campaign in Asia by saying:

"Erzerum, the most important north-eastern fortress of Turkey, has fallen. We and our allies must put up with this, whatever the effect may be on the enemy and on friendly foreign countries. Turkey has already done so with unequalled calm, by reporting that on the Irak and Caucasus fronts there is no news of importance."

The Cologne Gazette remarked in its issue of Feb. 19 that the fall of Erzerum was "the most important event of recent times," but asserted that the Allies were exaggerating its importance and declared that "the force of the Armenian population has been too seriously weakened for there to be any real co-operation on their part in an uprising."

The Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger insisted that "the fall of Erzerum has only a certain local importance and nobody can talk seriously of an immediately unfavourable reaction upon the situation of the Turks in Mesopotamia."

GERMANY'S PREPARATION FOR WAR.

Confirmation of Germany's responsibility for the present war comes from many strange sources. In Canada we had evidence of it in the fact that the year before the war Germany was importing immense quantities of wheat from this country. Another instance was related recently by a witness before a United States Senate Committee having under consideration a water power bill. He stated that in February, 1914, six months before the outbreak of war, the Norwegian Nitrogen Manufacturing Company received an immense order for nitric acid from Germany for use in the manufacture of ammunition.—Montreal Herald.

VISIONS FORCE OF 100,000 PLANES IN BRITAIN SOON

By William G. Shepherd.

London, (By mail.)—Pemberton-Billing, who is trying to awaken England in the matter of the mastery of the air and who made the charge in the British parliament to which he has been recently elected that British airmen were being murdered wore a purple dressing gown and called me "old sport," as he sat at his breakfast table being interviewed.

Once or twice he called to his secretary standing near by. "Where in the world is my breakfast? Why does not someone bring me my breakfast?"

"Have you ever been in the United States?"

"Yes."

"Do you suppose the United States could be wakened up in the matter of air service?"

"Not until you begin to get some hard bumps. You will get them some day, too, from the Japanese."

Pemberton-Billing has raised such a tumult, conversationally, in England about the air service that his ideas of how great and extensive the air service should be are of interest.

SEES BIG SERVICE.

His idea is to have the air service the greatest arm of the British forces. He believes that it can be made more powerful than any navy.

"I contemplate a force of 100,000 aeroplanes soon, and a force of 250,000 within the next ten years. In general there ought to be five different kinds of aeroplanes. First, there will be a small and very fast. Another will be a heavier machine, armored, for bomb dropping, carrying, perhaps one bomb.

"The third sort will be a cheap and large machine made in vast quantities, for ordinary battle purposes.

"A transport aeroplane will rank next in importance. It will be capable of carrying from 15 to 25 men from one part of the battle line to another, and also of moving guns, ammunition and other supplies; it will probably have five or six decks." Such a machine would rank as the army motor bus.

HUGE BATTLEPLANES.

"There are going to be huge battleplanes in the future, that will carry batteries of perhaps four five-inch guns or three six-inch guns with fire control like battleships and with a captain and crew."

"Get your army and your navy, too, into the sky. Make your enemy come into the sky to fight. Move your troops in the sky; feed them in the sky; let them live in the sky, just as Napoleon used to force his opponents to give battle on fields which he himself had selected, so let the generals of the war-to-be force their enemies to come up into the sky to meet them."

This is the philosophy of Pemberton-Billing's campaign.

He has a very definite idea of the plane that would be made for the use of the ordinary "infantryman" of the sky, the machine that would make up the bulk of the sky flotilla.

We would stamp the wings out of metal by the thousands. The parts would be standardized. The frames would be made of steel tubing and the things could be put together quickly, strongly and scientifically, like you in America put together your small, popular automobiles that you make by the thousands. The pre-war cost of such aeroplanes would have been about a thousand dollars apiece."

"But could you develop pilots to many so many air machines?"

"I can guarantee to develp 5,000 pilots in England within the next six months. I would use a cycle track, and automobile speedway, and a riding track for horses.

"First, I would put my pupils on the cycle track and have them learn the sense of balance. Then I would put them in automobiles to have them gain a sense of speed.

TRAIN ON TRACK.

The cycle track and the automobile track would give them head training. Then by controlling horses their hands would be trained and they would be ready to take up flying very shortly."

From details the new member of parliament passed again to generalities. He put forth the old argument that the more terrible war becomes owing to the improvements in the methods of killing, the less likely the world would be to see war.

"War can be wiped out absolutely," he declared energetically, "by the development of the air service. Two nations with a hundred thousand aeroplanes each would not dare to fight each other. One could wipe out the other over night and facing such terrible chances no wish would wish to begin war. I prophesy that within the next ten years it will be possible for nations to use at least 100,000 aeroplanes in warfare. War is developing in that direction."

"Have you an idea as to the possibility of awakening the United States to the importance of air preparedness?"

"I think you're like the English, old sport. You know what the Irishmen said about that? He said you speak to an Englishman once and the English won't answer. You speak to him the second time and he doesn't answer. Then you hit him on the side of the head with a brick and he looks around and says, 'I beg your pardon. You spoke to me, didn't you.'"

It was at this point that Pemberton-Billing said that sooner or later the United States would have to look out for Japan.

"They're able people," he said.

HOW CAN YOU SLEEP

(G. E. C. in New York Tribune)

How can you sleep, Lord of the Teuton race
When in the night, alone, you have to face
The Voice of Conscience, that with bated breath
Whispers—or does it sob?—the one word, "Death!"
Kaiser, how can you sleep.

How can you sleep, when over all the land
Are broken hearts, broken by your command;
The hordes of thousands crumbling into dust,
And all to satisfy Ambition—Lust.
Kaiser, how can you sleep.

How when you see your troops go marching by,
And know how many of them soon must die;
Brave men, but falsely taught the "Hymn of Hate".
How can you send them forth to such a fate?
Kaiser, how can you sleep.

Kaiser, some day the people of your race
Will learn the lesson—learn to hate the face
Of him who preaches War—and in that day
Peace will return—and Peace will come to stay.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter, and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly entirely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

KITCHENER.

Not on the field, to music of the guns
He loved so well, nor yet in formal state,
Has passed this Lord of England's soldier sons.
To seek his mansion through the heroe's gate.
No solemn throng has watched him to his rest.
No Abbey holds his form till Judgment Day.
Yet is he clasped to England's breathing breast—
The sea—her own till time shall pass away.
The Hampshire holds him in her strong steel shell
A coffin fitting one as great as he!
There shall he slumber dreamlessly and well—
An English heart sleeps soundest in the sea.

HAD SALT RHEUM ON HANDS.

Could Not Do Her Work.

Eczema or salt rheum is one of the most common of all skin diseases. It may centre itself on any part of the body, but there are certain places where it most usually begins, such as the bends of the elbows, the backs of the knees, the groove behind the ears, the scalp, on the palms of the hands, between the fingers, or on the soles of the feet.

It is, as a rule, not dangerous, but is very irritating and annoying to the sufferer on account of the terrible itching and burning sensation it causes.

It is impossible to eradicate this trouble from the system by external applications, as it is caused by the blood being in an impure state. What you need is a good blood cleansing medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. A medicine that will drive out all the foulness from the blood and make it pure and rich.

Mrs. Adelard Theriault, Theriault, N.B., writes: "Some time ago I was troubled with salt rheum on my hands, and it was so bad I could not do my work. I tried several medicines, but they all failed to help me. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got a bottle, and before I had taken it my hands were better. I am not afraid to recommend B.B.B. to anyone."

B.B.B. has been on the market for the past forty years, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CANADIANS WIN BACK LOST GROUND

"Made Gallant and Successful Assault"--Sir Douglas Haig

Night Attack By the Canadians Resulted in Complete Success

At 1:30 O'clock in the Morning Sir Douglas Haig Reports the Canadians Recaptured Lost Positions Around Sanctuary Wood Taking a Front of 1500 Yards---German Counter Attack Was Beaten Off and Canadians Are Consolidating Their Positions in Spite of Heavy Bombardment.

RUSSIAN SUCCESSES ARE CONTINUING

LONDON, June 14.—Canadian troops, in what the British official statement describes as a "gallant and successful assault," southeast of Zillebeke, recaptured a former British position over a front of more than 1,500 yards. Notwithstanding a severe shelling, the Canadians retained the ground gained, which is being consolidated.

The text of Sir Douglas Haig's statement reads:

"At 1:30 in the morning the Canadian troops made a gallant and successful assault southeast of Zillebeke. Their objective was our old position in that neighbourhood, all of which was captured on the front attacked, extending from the southern portion of Sanctuary Wood to a point about 1,000 yards north of Hill 60—a total front of over 1,500 yards.

"Our troops were subjected to a severe shelling for several hours after gaining the position, but were well supported by our artillery, and retain the ground gained, which is being consolidated. Heavy bombardments by the enemy have continued during the day, to which our artillery replied effectively.

"Attempts of the hostile infantry to counter-attack were frustrated by our artillery fire.

"Last night our troops carried out successful raids northeast of Ypres and south of the Bois Grenier. At the latter place a party of Australian troops entered the enemy trenches, causing him a known loss of twelve killed, and probably others, and capturing six prisonefs. Two trench mortars were destroyed. The raiding party returned safely, the only casualty being one officer and one man, both slightly wounded.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing of importance to report. The enemy put 300 shells into Maricourt during the day. Our artillery bombarded hostile positions about La Boisselle.

"There was less shelling than usual around Souchez and the Loos salient."

List Has Now Grown to a Total of 320

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., June 14.—Eleven additional names of officers wounded brings the total number of casualties among the officers at the battle of Sanctuary Wood up to 320. No word has been yet received at the department in regard to the recent successful offensive on the part of Canadian forces, which according to cables resulted in their regaining the ground. Particulars are expected to-night or to-morrow.

No Infantry Attacks Around Verdun Forts

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 14.—There were no infantry attacks on either banks of the Meuse last night, according to the French official communique to-day. East of Soissons the French by infantry attacks captured a small German post. French airmen made a successful raid near Ventzel in Vosges.

A French sorties at Soigern resulted in the capture of some prisoners.

Berlin Admits Gain Made By Canadians

Examiner Special:

BERLIN, June 14.—At the German Army Headquarters to-day the following was issued.

Western Front—In the heights southeast of Zillebeke a portion of our new position was lost during the course of yesterday's fighting.

This confirms the British official statement that Canadian troops yesterday recaptured more than 1,500 yards of a position which was lost in the battle of June 2 and 3.

Russians Have Taken 6000 More Austrian Prisoners

Special to the Examiner.

PETROGRAD, June 14.—In their advance upon Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, the Russians have occupied the village of Sniatyn, 20 miles northwest of the city, the War Office announced to-day.

In addition to their previous captures the Russians have taken 20 officers, 4,000 men, 6 guns, and 10 machine guns.

This makes a total of prisoners taken since June 4 as 121,000.

The Russians' offensive, which has been directed against the southern portion of the eastern front, broke out yesterday against Field Marshal Von Hindenburg's forces at a point 75 miles north of Pinsk. The Russians made seven successive attacks with masses of infantry. The Berlin War Office announcement of to-day says they were repulsed.

A VIOLENT BOMBARDMENT.

ROME, June 14.—The Italian fleet is now engaged in a violent bombardment of the Austrian positions on the Istrian coast in the vicinity of Parenzo and Trieste, says an official announcement.

Picking the Winners in New York

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 14.—The biggest betting campaign on record is looked for by the bookies this year, once the candidates get their strumming under way. Chester Thompson a curb operator has $60,000 to wager against $50,000 that Hughes will be elected with no takers in sight.

Convention Will Be a Love Feast

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 14. — Although the delegates gathering for the Democratic Convention to nominate a candidate for the Presidency, and making the usual noise about it, too, it is very much a matter of form, as Wilson for President, and Marshall for Vice-President, are the only names likely to get the slightest show. On the whole the convention is likely to be just a little love feast.

AUBURN CASE IS BEING HEARD AT OTTAWA NOW

Further Investigation Into Supply of Khaki For Great Coat—Analyst Pronounces Meterial Good But Below Sample

EVIDENCE IS HEARD

OTTAWA, June 13.—The supply of alleged shoddy material for uniforms by the Auburn Woollen Mills, of Peterborough, to the Government was further investigated by the Davidson Commission this afternoon. Dr. Milton Hersey, of Montreal, an analyst employed to examine the goods at the instance of Sir Charles Davidson, testified that they were 15 per cent. inferior to the sealed sample supplied by the Militia Department. The case will be continued.

A complaint against the quality of the khaki cloth supplied by the Auburn firm was originally made by an ex-foreman of that concern. It was brought to the notice of the Government by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and referred to the Davidson Commission. It has already been investigated in Peterborough, and the reason for to-day's sitting, Sir Charles announced, was that there were a few points in the case which needed to be cleared up.

Mr. James Kendrey, ex-M.P., and president of the Auburn Woollen Mills, of Peterborough, was called and examined in connection with a statement put in showing the quantities and prices of cloth sold to the Militia Department by his company. It did not include, he said, a contract now under execution.

Dr. Hersey, consulting chemist of the Hersey Company of Montreal, said he had made an examination and analysis of the goods in question in this investigation.

15 Per Cent. Inferior.

Exploded Mine Under Part of 2nd Battalion

Lance-Corp. Dingman Tells of An Exciting Battle on the Western Front

Mrs. Robert Snelgrove, George Street, has received the following most interesting letter from her brother, Lance-Corp. W. A. Dingman, who has been at the front with the 2nd Battalion since that unit landed in France. His letter is written on May 28th, just before the big battle and tells something of the shelling that preceded the onslaught:

Dear Sister,—A few lines to let you know I am still able to eat my three 'squares' a day; therefore there can't be very much wrong with me, eh?

We have been kept pretty busy lately. The Huns got busy the other day and tried to send the old 2nd Battalion to Kingdom Come, but failed. You may have seen an account of it in the papers. I did, in a paper from Western Canada, and you would think when reading it, it was a mere trifle. I don't think the people realize what those few words meant. If they did I am sure they would all rush to enlist and help us make a clean-up of the Bosches.

For your own benefit I will give it to you, as nearly like the paper as I remember, in case you didn't see it, and then I will give you a few details. Compare them for yourself:

(Large heading) "Germans Blow up Large Mines on British Lines at —, held by Canadians, but were easily repulsed."

They blew up the mines, burying alive a number of our boys, and then commenced a terrific bombardment. Well, what was left of us stuck to our post, remember not knowing when our turn would come. If not with a mine, perhaps a minner wafer or high explosive shell, bomb etc. At that there was a number of us that were covered up, but dug out, and believe me we were waiting for Old Fritz. He never got into our part of the trench at all, but he pierced in another part held by one of our companies, after killing them all, or making the trench uninhabitable from high explosive shells. Well he only stayed for about five minutes as our platoons that were in reserve rushed up and bombed him out. He gained nothing at all. Just simply slaughered his troops. Of course our casualties were pretty heavy, but really nothing considering the preprarations he had made.

Voted in Favour of Church Union

WINNIPEG, June 14.—There was no debate on church union at the Presbyterian General Assembly this morning but immediately after devotional exercises a vote was taken on Prof Falconer's amendment against the minority report. The result was 383 to 108 in favor of Falconer's amendment. There was no applause when the vote was announced; Immediately a large number arose and proposed other amendments and there was considerable confusion. Church unionist leaders were plainly surprised and disappointed at the large number who voted with the minority.

Voting on other amendments regarding church union resulted as follows. First vote 333 to 103 in favour of union. Second vote 339 to 170 in favour of union.

The larger vote at second call was the result of a sharp scolding given some members for not voting.

It was decided to take final vote this afternoon, but it is not likely to be materially changed from above figures.

The message received to-day by his mother states that Pte. Lindsey was admitted to No. 4 General Hospital Camieres, on June 4th.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 14, 1916

DOING THEIR BIT.

To-day twenty-one men left Peterborough at 1.30 p.m. for Barrisfield, to do their bit in the best way they can do it. They were men who were declared physically unfit for the rough-and-tumble life of the trenches. They were called medically unfit, but they were fit in heart and soul. They will be attached to the Army Service Corps, and if they never smell powder nor sniff gas, they will release men from the Service Corps who are physically fit, and permit them to take their place in the fighting ranks. These men left good positions of employment, and some of them are fathers of two or three sons already in the ranks. These men, though they may not be stalwarts in body, are giants in heart and soul, and set a splendid example for all of us. We can't all fight, but we can all do something to help the cause. How can the young men, physically sound, respect himself, or expect the respect of his neighbours, if they are not stirred to duty by the spectacle of such men leaving home and job, to do the work they can do in winning this war. If they hold back they should, if they have red blood enough to raise a blush, blush at the position they place themselves in, by staying at home, idle and indifferent so far as the great work of the hour is concerned.

BRAVO, 93RD.

Peterborough had good reason to be proud of the boys of the 93rd while they were with us. We admired their stalwart, soldierly appearance as they marched through our streets. We were not only proud of their physical fitness, but we were sure that there khaki buttoned over stout hearts, and that their uniforms enclosed a fighting spirit, but we also had evidence of their high moral qualities. Their excellent behaviour in barracks, on parade and in the streets, showed that when they put off their civilian garb they did not put off the qualities of gentlemen and decent citizens. With all these qualities represented in the 93rd we sent them off to Barriefield camp, with pride and with a sure hope that they would do credit to the city and the forces, in whatever military company they might be placed. They have justified our confidence and seem to have impressed their high character upon the military authorities. Several Peterborough members of the 93rd have been advanced to prominent brigade positions, in emphasis of the positions they held in the battalion. In this way important brigade positions have been given Major Davidson, Chaplain; Sergeant Major Miller, Provost Sergeant Millership, and Bandmaster Hughes. Besides, the boys of the 93rd have captured the honours in the field of sport, and in every way have, so far, and so soon, compiled a record that makes us editorially proud of them and warrants our applause, "Bravo, 93rd!"

A TEMPTATION.

Douglas Jerrold made one of his characters an honest man, conditionally: "Keep temptation from the fingers, hands, eyes, ears and other senses of Job Pippins, and he is as honest a man as lives." The final returns of the Quebec general elections makes the party standing in the Legislature, 73 Liberals and 6 Conservatives. This condition of numerical proportion is in itself a temptation to carry things with the high hand. Though there is nothing in the past record of the Gouin government to warrant the fear that it will take advantage of its strength yet the government and its supporters are only human, and it is better not to tempt human nature too far. The danger of a large majority in the Quebec legislative body is not of its party's own creating. There have been influences at work in Quebec itself, but chiefly in Ontario, that tended to consolidate the electorate upon the side of the party that represented sentiments to attach upon the sentiments, interests and nationality of the electors as a whole.

After all, the effectiveness of a legislative opposition does not depend upon numbers, but upon its vigilance. Theoretically, every government, no matter what its party complexion, needs watching, and a vigilant, wide-awake Opposition, though its voting strength may be inconsiderable, can do yeoman service in keeping straight the ways of governments. In watchfulness there is safety, and there is reason to believe that the new national spirit, evoked by the crisis through which we are passing, will hereafter exercise a restraining influence upon governments as well as individuals. When we see what double dealing, crookedness, and deceit on the part of Germany has brought upon the world, there has been created a popular sentiment of hostility towards all wrong dealing and dishonest methods. This hostility has been demonstrated in many ways in electoral contests in this country, whose results have shown the popular antipathy against, and impatience with, wrong doing, by governments and individuals. Deference to such sentiments and convictions, if not the example of condign punishment inflicted upon bad governments, should warn other governments of the peril of wandering from the straight and narrow path, and tend to make them good.

ALL IN IT.

This war has shown the British empire, from pivot to periphery, to be a magnificent unit. Every member of it, every self-governing dominion, every dependency, is as true as steel, and all have contributed, and are contributing, their share in varying but effective ways, to the fight for liberty and right. Never before in human history have so many races and people been massed in the same fighting ranks. Never before have so many semi-civilised and non-Christian nations stood shoulder to shoulder fighting the battles of Christianity, and the human, civil and religious liberty true Christianity stands for. We are sorry that Newfoundland is not a geographical part of Canada, because the bleak Atlantic island has given us reason to take pride in the imperial patriotism of its people. We have always been able to depend upon Newfoundlanders, hardy as the rocks of their coasts, when we want men for service at the north pole or the south pole, or where hardiness of flesh and spirit, were the needs. Now in the time of the Empire's naval losses, they are at hand. When the Newfoundlanders heard of the battle of Jutland and of the loss of British seamen, before the details had reached the island, a recruiting campaign was begun to furnish a thousand men to help fill the gaps of battle. We are proud of our Newfoundland brothers. They are as brave as they are hardy, and their offer to fill the depleted stations upon British ships should be an inspiration to many young men in Peterborough and Canada to come to the front and help fill the war gaps in the ranks of the Canadian forces at the front. Any young men with red blood in his veins must fairly ache with a desire to take his place in the ranks of Canadians in Flanders, who are showing themselves, as a high commander in the field says, the best soldiers of the Empire, which means the best of the best; and are focusing the glory of courageous conduct, fearless and effective fighting, upon the name of Canada. Every young man should be proud of the name Canada; but only if he lives up to the record compiled by Canadian soldiers in the field; he won't deserve it, if being fit, he does not fit himself into the place waiting from him in the fighting ranks.

MILK AND MORALITY.

It is evident that the milk dealers of Windsor, Ontario, do not deal in the milk of human kindness. Not satisfied with charging ten cents per quart, one dealer has advanced the price to twelve cents and other dealers are to be prevented from making a similar advance, by the action of the mayor of the city, who has involved the interference of the Government. He has notified the milk dealers that he has received a communication from the Ontario Minister of Labour to the effect that unless it can be shown that there are good reasons for the high prices of milk in Windsor, it will be necessary, under the War Measures Act, to compel the dealers to reduce the prices. It is plain that there is nothing in the weather conditions or the scarcity of pastures to warrant such extravagantly high prices. There is abundance or rather super-abundance of pasture. Our Peterborough milkmen are more humane than the Windsor extortionists, and are assumed to make a good profit out of prevailing prices here.

There are moral and patriotic considerations involved in the action of the Windsor dealers. Any man or body of men who will take advantage of opportunities and, without commercial reasons, will hold up prices and the people, deserve to rank as rank extortionists. They have neither patriotism nor conscience and are in the same class as the sharks who, in other industries, work, plan and scheme to make money ont of the empire's agony. There are men in this country, who if strict justice were done — fit punishment meted out — should be stood against a wall and shot. We expect atrocities from the Germans and Turks, but not from civilised Canadians. The spirit in Canada that makes the war an excuse for extorting undue profits, is the same spirit that inspires the horrible atrorities that mark, and have marked, this bloody war. We expect patriotic and Christian Canadians to make sacrifices instead of profits. Our soldiers in the field, and the mothers and wives who suffer from their death and wounding, are making the greatest of sacrifices for our sakes. They are fighting for the integrity of our homes to keep the opportunities we now have of pursuing the peaceful way of life. All we have, and all we are, as free British subjects, would be imperilled and swept away if the Canadian soldiers and the soldiers of the other allies did not stand—and fall—between the ruthless ambition of Germany to conquer and crush and oppress. The raw recruit that we see strutting awkwardly in his new uniform, is one of the timbers in the barrier erected against the attacks of our enemies, and the sacrifice he is facing and will be making hereafter from day to day should be a type of the sacrifice we should all be prepared to make. It is a toss up as to whether the Canadian who extorts more out of the conditions of the war, coining money out of the gold of our soldiers' sacrifices, is worse than the man who takes the cowardly and selfish stand of allowing another to do his fighting, to protect him and save the liberties and rights he is too craven to fight for himself.

PENALTY OF PLUCK.

Had the Canadians at Ypres been less gallant and stubborn fighters they would have suffered less.—Buffalo Express.

"GLORIOUS UNDERTAKING."

"When the war started what should have been the attitude of the Liberal party? I have already told you that the Liberal idea was a passion for right and justice. Britain to-day is fighting in Europe for these ideas. Britain did not seek this war, but rather sought to avoid it, and she could have avoided it if she had wished to accept the shameful proposal of Germany. But she did not do so, and to-day she is fighting for the independence of Belgium and for the integrity of France and to save civilization. This is why I declared that I would support the Government of Canada and that Canada should participate with all her forces in this glorious undertaking."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Montreal.

INTERNATIONALISM

What is the future of German Socialism; or has it any future? The socialism of Karl Marx is dead. Not for the first time German Socialists in immense numbers are ranging themselves against Internationalism and are among the most ardent advocates of war to the knife. There is about every variety of revolutionary democracy in Germany, and about all that the various types have in common is their jealousy of the present ruling classes and the unscrupulousness of their methods. It is this one thing in common which creates so much confusion in the public mind regarding socialism, anarchism and communism which, in their essence, are wide as the poles asunder. Marx died in 1880, but he had outlived Internationalism.

You cannot have Internationalism in a country where there are no Internationalists. In normal times the German Social Democrats preach the community of interest of the working classes all the world over. In war times they are the most savage and relentless upholders of war. Marx himself, was bitterly anti-Russian. German Internationalism has been active in stirring up radical revolutionary movements in many other countries, while earnestly preaching against militarism and in favour of the unity of the working classes of every nation against the common enemy, capitalism.

Even as lately as July, 1914, we find the Social Democrats opposing the present war. At a conference held in Brussels on July 30th Herr Haase said: "Austria appears to think she can count on Germany; but the German Socialists declare that secret treaties do not bind the German proletariat, and that Germany should not intervene, even though Russia may do so." In August, 1914, we find Haase one of the Socialists who in the Reichrag approved of the German war credit. Evidently your German Internationalist would just as soon rob or murder a Belgian working man as he would a German capitalist.

To-day we find the Social Democrats the most strenuous advocates of a fight to a finish and a policy of annexations and plunder "commensurate with the sacrifices" Germany has already made in her attempt to rob Belgium, France and Poland of their property, their territory and their liberty. The German Conservatives are not in it with these professed Internationalists. The whole of Germany rings with such expressions as "territorial expansion," rectification of frontiers," "enlarging our frontiers," "a greater and stronger empire," "a Germany strengthened in its whole position, enlarged beyond its present borders by retaining the greatest amount of those territories which are now occupied." Yet we have the Imperial German Chancellor lifting up his voice and wailing: "What is it gives us strength to continue fighting? Who can seriously believe that it is just for an extension of our frontiers that inspires our storming columns before Verdun and makes them accomplish even more heroic deeds? It is not for a piece of foreign territory that Germany's sons are bleeding and dying." Why! There is not a political party in Germany that does not believe it and say it openly.

Internationalism may be revived but its spiritual home will not be in Germany. German Internationalism is a fake, and Germany is the Ishmael of nations. His hand is against every man, and therefore every man's hand is against him.—Montreal Herald.

Aged Woman Is Dying As A Result Of A Bite From An Infuriated Cat

LONDON, June 14.—Mrs. Sarah Calvary, a widow about 70 years old who lives alone in a small cottage at 22 Wellington Road, is dying in Victoria Hospital as a result of wounds inflicted on her by a pet cat.

Mrs. Calvary goes out to work and when she got home, about 8 o'clock at night, the cat was sitting in a window which was open. Mrs. Calvary put the window down and it fell on the cat's tail. The animal became infuriated and leaping at Mrs. Calvary, sank its teeth deep into her forehead, severing an artery, and causing a wound which required many stitches.

After some minutes Mrs. Calvary succeeded in fighting the animal off and made her way some distance to a neighbour's. She had then lost a large quantity of blood from the severed artery. More time was lost in calling a doctor and when one finally came he found the aged woman had lost so much blood that there is little hope for her recovery.

She suffered greatly from shock and was in such a critical condition in the operating room at Victoria Hospital that was feared her death might occur at any time.

It was thought that the cat might be mad and as soon as the doctor arrived at Mrs. Calvary's home he gave orders that it be shut up and closely guarded.

HERE'S AN INTERESTING PROPOSITION

Fifteen of the leading automobile tire manufacturers have admitted that the methods of the inflation which they have advised motorists to use in the past, are wrong.

Tires should be inflated for the load they carry and not to an arbitrary pressure determined by the cross sectional size of the tire. In other words the manufacturers say that it is foolish to pump up a four inch tire which equips a light roadster to the same pressure that a four inch must carry which equips a 7-passenger touring car.

Heretofore practically all tire manufacturers have advised an arbitrary inflation schedule based upon twenty pounds pressure for every cross sectional inch of the tire. That is to say a three inch tire carries sixty pounds pressure, a four inch tire eighty pounds pressure, and so forth.

This recent announcement shows that it is impractical for the car owner to follow either such an arbitrary inflation schedule or the pressure recommendation molded on the side of every tire.

"What's the poor car owner to do?" you say and well you may.

Only one company, the B. F. Goodrich Company, has really done anything to help the car owner out of his predicament. This company placed upon the market a year ago an instrument known as the "Goodrich Tire Caliper." Instead of gauging the pounds of pressure in the tire, the caliper measures the deflection or flattening of the tire at the point where it rests upon the ground.

Excessive deflection or flattening occurs when tires are overloaded or under-inflated, and it is the theory behind the Goodrich Tire Caliper that the prevention of excessive flattening can best be secured by measuring the outside of the tire than by trying to regulate the number of pounds pressure to which the tire is inflated.

One of the chief advantages of the Goodrich Tire Caliper is its mathematical accuracy, insuring proper inflation for any tire under all conditions of load and temperature,—a decided contrast to the uncertain spring gauge upon which motorists have relied heretofore.

It is interesting to note that every Pierce-Arrow car is fitted with a Goodrich Tire Caliper as part of the ortgiral equipment, and the Nordyke-Marmon Company advise the use of it in their instruction book to motorists.

THE AMAZING BEETLE

One of the most amazing things in natural history is the way in which beetles have triumphed in the struggle for existence. Of all creatures they are by far the most numerous, no fewer than 150,000 distinct species having been identified—three times the number of backboned animals.

Beetles are wonderfully adaptable. They are found practically everywhere—in the frost bound trees of Iceland and in the hot desert sands of Africa; on the highest mountains, under the ground, and as fossils in the deepest strata; on land and in water; on plants, among stones, and in wood and earth; and even in the very craters of volcanoes.

But there is one place where no beetle has yet been found—it is the inhospitable land of Spitzbergen, to the north of Russia. Here are mammals, birds, fish, molluscs, crustaceans, a few insects of varied species, and many spiders, but not a single beetle. While other insects have succeeded in some way in migrating from the mainland, the beetles have apparently been unable to cross the cold, icy waters.

J. E. B. MUNRO, Captain.
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C. E. F.

Mr. R. B. Rogers has received a cablegram from Miss Glassford, in London, Eng., to-day, stating that she has as yet been unable to locate the hospital in which Lieut. Harry G. Rogers has been placed. The cablegram states that Lieut. Rogers was wounded in the leg. Mr. Rogers has also received a letter from his son, Lieut. Rogers, which was written on May 28th, just before the big battle. The letter gives the information that the 3rd Division was shortly to get its divisional rest, and that they were on their last turn in the trenches for some time. A few days later and the division would have escaped the terrible battle in which they acquitted themselves so gloriously.

Writing from Kingston, Pte. Arthur Lewis of Peterborough, who is at Barrietield with the Queen's Field Ambulance, says: "I think this is the best bunch of fellows you could enlist with. There are fourteen fellows from Carleton Place and all of them are of the right sort. The officers are fine, and Capt. Kennedy is a regular brick. We have a good site for a camp and have kept pretty dry. Show this letter to all the fellows who want to enlist. There is lots of room for more fellows from Peterborough. They would be with the very best bunch of fellows and, besides, would be learning something.

Signaller Percy Gray, who has been ill in hospital in France, and had to undergo an operation, sends the following letter to his mother, Mrs. W. Gray, Brock Street.

No. 11 General Hospital, France,
May 30, 1916.

Dear Mother,—Just a few lines to let you know how I am getting along. Am coming along fine. Guess it is because I am young and in good condition. Am still in bed, but guess I will be getting up for a while in the afternoons. I sure do enjoy my meals; they are great after a week of nothing but a milk diet. They sure do go right. Have been feeding on chicken for three or four days; also three eggs a day. Do you know by the time I am ready to go back to the line again this trip will be as good as leave to me. I will have had a complete rest and be all O. K. again. I had a letter from "Mc" yesterday, and he was getting along O. K. He said he was back at the signals again. Don't know what I will be on when I go back up again and am not worrying any over it. The care of the patients here is simply great. A fellow simply has to get well. There is a boy in the bed next to me who lost his hand. He sure is great, as cheerful as a lark, and at present he is busy writing a letter home with his left hand.

Have seen some awful sights since I came down here. Was surprised to see how quickly they get most of the worst cases well enough to ship to England. The Doctor of this Ward is a prince. He takes a great interest in his patients and he is a good surgeon. Haven't had any mail since I came here; but I expect it along any time. I am running short of news so I will close.

Your loving son,
"BUD."

Among the Peterborough men who joined the Army Service Corps here, last night, was Lance Corp. E. Maudsley, recently invalided home from England, where he had been for a year as a member of the 39th Battalion. Lance-Corp. Maudsley might be considered to have done his bit, but as he remarked last night, he doesn't feel satisfied out of the khaki. He will leave with the detachment for Petawawa Camp to-morrow.

Silas Bullied, 231 Princess Street, was among the men who enlisted yesterday with the Army Service Corps. Mr. Bullied has two sons overseas, one Pte. Percy Bullied, with the 39th, and the other, Pte. Victor Bullied, with the Mounted Rifles. The latter was recently wounded.

The Kingston Standard Says:—

Lt.-Col Thompson, C. S. O. is looking closely after the work of the platoons and the platoon commanders. Officers in command of platoons in the various units in camp will be watched in their handling and working of their commands, and those who fail to make good will have to make place for others. Since the change took place getting commissions, compelling promotions from the ranks, there are many qualified officers in the ranks of all units of the C. E. F. and when an officer fails in his work, he will be compelled to stand aside for the qualified man who will be promoted without hesitation.

Mr. Isaac Brady, 124 Park street received official news this morning that his son Pte. Isaac Brady who enlisted here early in 1915 and went overseas with B squadron, 8th, C.M.R., has been officially reported admitted to No. 3 General Hospital, Boulogne, suffering from contusion of the side and shell shock. Pte. Brady is a well known member of the 8th. Before he enlisted he was employed as a plumber by Mr. G. A. Brenton. He is a Canadian born.

PTE. ALBERT H. DANIEL.

Mr. Arthur Daniel of the Munro House was officially notified to-day that his son Pte. Albert H. Daniel, Canadian Infantry is officially reported admitted to No. 11 General Hospital, Camieres, suffering from a gun shot wound in the foot. Pte. Daniel who was formerly employed at the Peterborough Lock Company enlisted here early in 1915 with the 77th detachment 39th Battalion and went overseas with the 39th. After some further training in England he was transferred to another Canadian Battalion at the front.

Expressional Work Was the Subject of Address

A special meeting of the Elementary Graded Union of Sunday School Teachers was held in the Murray street Baptist Sunday school room last evening. Miss Bertha Laine, Superintendent of the Elementary division for Ontario was the speaker of the evening.

The subject chosen was an "Expressional Work." In a most interesting manner Miss Laine set forth handwork as a great need of the child, the elements which stand in the way of its introduction into Sunday school work, and the manner in which they may be overcome. The preventive elements may be said to be lack of time and space, expense and lack of training in teachers. In order to save time almost any officer is a department can master the rudiments of manual training and become handwork director. She can then prepare any materials, distribute and collect them. In more advanced departments most of the work can be done at home or at meetings in the church during the week and the work examined and exhibited on Sunday. With regard to expense, Miss Laine referred to a number of inexpensive books, papers and pictures which could be used in the work. Very little space is needed for handwork. In lieu of tables, cardboard rested on the children's knees would suffice. In the case of the beginners, self expression takes the form mainly of re-telling the lesson story, in their singing, memory verse and little prayer. Miss Laine was earnest in her desire to see handwork in all schools. It was pointed out that it was no mere device for keeping restless scholars busy but has a real aim and purpose.

It was announced that Miss Laine would meet the Elementary teachers in the Baptist Sunday school room, Murray street, at 3 o'clock on Wednesday.

WIDOWS

According to the census of 1910 there were 3,167,232 widows in the United States; 2,026,684 were between fifteen and sixty-four years of age; 702,000 were below age forty-five. Can you picture the struggle of the thousands thrown upon their own resources and fighting for an existance for themselves and their children? How many of the 2,465,3% above the age of forty-five are dependent upon relatives and the public for support? Among all these hundreds of thousands there is not one single inmate of a poor house, home for the aged, or friendless who was provided with a monthly income under a life insurance policy. What a splendid opportunity right now for husbands to protect widows of this land.

Any husband can do so by purchasing a Guaranteed Income policy from THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA. The Company guarantees payment to wife at your death of any sum you choose followed by a like amount on the same day of every month as long as she shall live.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Presentation and Address Made To J. E. S. Goodwill

For Nine Years Mr. Goodwill Filled the Dual Position of Solicitor and Secretary For the Children's Aid Society—A Token of Appreciation.

THE ADDRESS

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Childrens' Aid Society held yesterday afternoon in the Bank of Montreal Chambers, an illuminated address was presented to Mr. J. E. L. Goodwill, who for nine years filled the dual position of Secretary and Solicitor of the Society Those present were Mr. E. A. Peck, Mr. Joseph Wearing, Chief Thompson, Chief Howard, Adjutant McElheney, Rev. Father Phalen, Mr. H Walkey, Mrs. Gibbs, Mrs. Stocker, and Mrs. Hopwood. Mr. C. A. G. Spence, who, on the first of June, was appointed local agent for the Society, was present in his official capacity.

THE ADDRESS.

The adress was read by Mr. Wearing, while the presentation was made by Fire Chief Howard. The address reads as follows:

J. E. L. Goodwill, Esq., B.A., B.C.L. L.L.B., Peterborough, Ont.

Sir,—Your fellow members of the Peterborough Branch of the Children's Aid Society join most heartily in tendering to you this mark of appreciation and regard.

For the past nine years you have filled the important dual position of Solicitor and Secretary of the Society with large benefit to its interests and in the confidence of its members. As the operations and functions of the Society bear on conditions affecting a part of the public it is ever essential that what is done be accomplished with discriminatios, care, and a judicious regard for the rights of all concerned.

This you have done most admirably and in such a way that you have earned the approval and praise of your fellow citizens. A citizen is not one who concerns himself with the duties of his profession or his own affairs entirely, but one who, in addition, gives a share of his energy and time to further objects making for the public good.

We know that the pressure of the duties of your profession are ever present and increasing, and we recognize your wish to be relieved. It ever thus must be, but we trust the mantle you have doffed may fall or shoulders able and willing to follow your admirable example.

It is gratifying to us to know that while you are apart from the work actively we may still have the benefit of your experience, advice and counsel, and that you will ever be sympathetic in the good work. We offer to you this address as an inadequate expression of our esteem, regard and deep respect, assuring you that the pages of the records of the Society inscribed by you will ever remain an evidence of your sense of personal responsibility toward the young, helpless and friendliness, as well as unfortunate.

With renewed wishes for many years of usefulness and prosperity.

Most respectfully and cordially,

E. A. PECK, President

JOSEPH WEARING, Secretary

MR. J. E. L. GOODWILL.

Who yesterday was presented with an illuminated address in recognition of nine years' service as solicitor and secretary for the Children's Aid Society.

Taken by Surprise.

Mr. Goodwill, who was taken by surprise, said he would ever appreciate the token which they had presented him. He thanked his colleagues for their consistent cooperation, and assured them that he would always be willing to advance the interests of the Society.

Auditor Exposes A Big Rake-off On Shell Deals

Fresh Sensation in the Probe into the Allison Deals in Ottawa

OTTAWA, June 13.—John Fraser, Auditor-General, sprang another sensation in the Davidson Commission this morning when he produced a cable from the Colonial Secretary, Bonar Law, which stated that the British Admiralty paid $35 per thousand for the small arms ammunition sold by the Militia Department to Col. J. Wesley Allison for $30 per thousand, and the Admiralty paid all the expenses of insurance, cartage, etc. It had been contended that no commission had been charged on the transaction, but that by mistake a charge was made for insurance, etc., which charge was afterwards withdrawn.

Law's Short Answer.

Mr. Fraser stated that he had written to Col. Stanton, secretary to His Royal Highness the Governor-General, on May 26 last, asking if he could get information from the Admiralty as to what price was paid by them for the ammunition, as to whether it was f.o.b. Canada, and as to whether all charges of insurance, cartage, were paid by the Admiralty.

Col. Stanton had at once communicated Mr. Fraser's query to the Colonial Secretary, who, on June 2 replied as follows: "The price paid by the Admiralty for the three million rounds of ammunition was $35 per thousand, F.O.B. Canada. The Admiralty paid all charges for insurance and carriage. Bonar Law."

Mr. Hutcheson asked if there was another transaction which might be confused in the communication. Mr. Fraser declared that he was not aware of any. The letter of the Governor-General's secretary was specific. Mr. Bonar Law had identified the transaction or he would not have sent a reply. He had a perfect understanding of what was referred to.

Cabled for Information.

"The description was pecific," said Sir Charles Davidson.

When the commission resumed this morning, Mr. Hutcheson stated that he had communicated with R. C. Smith, counsel for F. Orr Lewis, who had declared that he had cabled the Admiralty concerning the cost to them same time ago, but had received no reply. He had cabled again this morning.

"We should have heard by this time," said Sir Charles.

John Fraser, auditor-General, was the first witness called this morning. There was one matter not closed up, he said, that was as to the authority to sell militia stores. The regulations, he said, permitted the sale for our own forces without order-in-Council. Anything of an unusual nature should however be covered by an order-in-Council.

Sale of Clothing.

Mr. Fraser produced three of these orders dated 1916. The first covered the sale of a quantity of blue, red and green militia clothing, now obsolete on account of the universal use of khaki, 493 ankle boots which were used as exhibits before the Boot Committee during the session of 1915 and 40 Ford cars badly used.

"They have sold the harbingers of peace," said Mr. Dewart.

Mr. Hutcheson declared that these articles were exclusively for military use.

"Just the same as the ammunition," said Mr. Fraser.

Referring again to the purchase of ammunition, Mr. Hutcheson, Government counsel, drew the attention of the Auditor-General to the fact that the balance of the Admiralty trust account intact is $68,000. He asked if, in the opinion of Mr. Fraser, this would not mean that the money was for the payment by the Admiralty for an additional two million rounds which Allison endeavoured to receive from the department plus the advance of $5 per one thousand rounds. "Does it not mean," queried Mr. Hutcheson, "that the money has not been paid or distributed?"

Mr. Fraser said he would not like to express an opinion as to that, although it might be the case.

Col. J. F. MacDonald, chief ordnance officer of the Militia Department, whose main examination occurred earlier in the enquiry, was cross-examined by Mr. Dewart.

Col. MacDonald said that when the first purchase of ammunition was made he was cognizant of the fact that its destination was C. A. Searles, London. This information was contained in a letter which Col. Allison wrote to Quartermaster-General MacDonald and which has already been made public.

"Was the Minister of Militia cognizant of the destination of the ammunition?" Mr. Dewart asked. "He put his initials on the letter," witness replied.

On September 10th, witness said there had been no doubt in his mind that the ammunition had been sold to Sir Trevor Dawson, of Vickers house.

Blow Backs Frequent.

Major-General H. M. Elliott Master-General of Ordnance, was then called. He stated that he had been musketry instructor at Camp Hughes last summer when 1910 mark 6 ammunition had been used on the ranges. He declared that blow backs were frequent, but no accidents. This ammunition had been selected as the most reliable of that in store.

Witness had advocated that nothing but 1913 ammunition should be sold to the R.N.W.M.P. However 1915 had been issued to that force. On May 29 last, a board of officers of the Mounted Police had set to enquire into the half million rounds supplied them. They discovered split cases blow backs and defective cartridges. The finding was that the ammunition was defective, but possible of use in the Lee-Enfield carbine, though unadvisable for use in maxim machine gun.

LAKE ONTARIO VESSEL TO CROSS THE OCEAN

The schooners "Charles Marshall" and "J. B. Kinsbury," belonging to George Plunkett, of Cobourg, have been chartered by Montreal firms to cross the ocean with cargoes of lumber. They are at present at Kingston being fitted up, and salt water crews will be in charge. Since the war broke out cargo ships have been almost impossible to obtain, and owners of schooners can now obtain more for carrying cargoes on the ocean than they could previously get for their boats. The cost of carrying these cargoes will run up in the thousands.

LEAVES THE JUNGLE TO FIGHT TEUTONS

Explorer Comes From Peru to Join His Brothers in the Trenches

Talks of His Experience with Indians, Fevers, and Snakes During Several Years in 'Woods.'

NEW YORK, June 10.—After chumming for five and a half years with man-eating jaguars and other fierce animals that make their homes in the Peruvian jungles, Casimir Watkins, the explorer, who stopped in New York for a few days before he sailed for England, said he knew of no good reason why he should be afraid of the Teutons. In fact, Mr. Watkins was very positive that in a few weeks he would be with two of his brothers in the trenches in Northern France, fighting for England.

There is one hurdle Mr. Watkins has put up for himself. Before he sailed he subjected himself to a thorough medical examination to make sure that he wouldn't play a malarial role analogous to that of "Typhoid Mary."

"Really, you see," explained the explorer, "I have become so used to the malarial fevers of South America that I somewhat fear I may carry them about, so to speak, without knowing it. I have been exploring down in South America for seven years, five and a half of them in the 'woods,' as they say, or jungles, down along the Inanbari and the Tambopata Rivers among the savage tribes, making collections for the British Museum and the American Museum of Natural History.

"Fever and the flies are the dangers of the jungle. As one wears only trousers and shirt the flies eat one up, so to speak. One gets used to the millions of them after a while, however.

"Every one contracts some sort of fever in varying degrees of intensity. My brother, whom I left down there, has what is called tersian, a fever that returns every three days. I haven't that, but I have had other varieties and I want to be very careful not to take any of it to the trenches."

Mr. Watkins said he became great friends with the Indians in Peru and didn't at all find them such bad fellows.

"The Quicha Indians are not in any sense savages," he said. "They are descendants of the Incas, and while they have degenerated they have a civilization of their own. They live in the highlands and keep away from the swamps and fevers.

"We also spent much time among the Guarayo Indians who live along the Inambari River. They had a bad reputation and are said to have killed white men. But I have never been killed by them yet. My brother is now collecting among the Campas Indians on the Tambopata River.

"The rivers are full of fish of all sorts and the natives catch a catfish which sometimes weights as much as 300 pounds. When we need food we dynamite the river and soon the surface is covered with a canoe load of all sorts of fish. It is impossible to take a sufficient supply of food for entire trips for the currents are so swift that if one goes on a three-day trip down stream, it takes ten or twelve days to return. Journeys in the jungle are never spoken of in terms of hours but of days, and when a savage tells you of the length of a journey he describes an arc from east to west with his hand. That means one day.

"We never go into the jungle without Indians, for if a white man gets ten or fifteen yards from the track he cannot find his way back. The Indians have very keen senses and find their way by the sun or by breaking twigs as they go along."

Mr. Watkins told about a river of mystery in Peru and the legends of untold wealth in rubber and gold and of the men who went up it, never to return.

"It is the Colorado River," he said. "Great rubber trees line its banks. But the Masoos, a tribe of cannibals, infest it. They will kill a white man on sight. Heavily armed expeditions have gone up this river hunting gold, but none of them ever return. The empty canoes often float down the river, but they are empty."

Speaking of snakes he had met, Mr. Watkins exhibited a roll of snakeskins. He held up a long one.

"This was a baby boa constrictor I shot," he explained. It was 13 feet long. He said some of the constrictors had a girth of more than two feet. He asserted that natives had told him of constrictors 40 meters long.

"Sometimes all night long one can hear the whistles of the boas along the river banks," he said. "They make a sound like a railroad train for several minutes at a time. The savages hunt them for their skins, which the women wear in the dance festivities. That is also the time the savages get intoxicated on a beverage they brew from the yucca.

"One has only to fear snake bites if his blood is not in good condition. I have seen Bolivian rubber pickers who have been bitten repeatedly without ill consequences.

"The savages worship animals and there is one tribe to whom the snake is sacred."

Mr. Watkins said besides his two brothers in France he had a brother in the home service. He declared that when the war was over, if there was anything left for him, he was going back to Peru and that some day he was going to write a book about the things he had seen in the jungles.

PURCHASING COMMITTEE FOR CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Committee Will Have Power to Purchase Supplies For the Children's Shelter---Mr. Cochrane's Resignation as Local Agent Was Accepted---Was Made a Member of the Board---Mr. C. A. G. Spence Appears Before the Board in His Official Capacity.

MR. SPENCE'S DUTIES DEFINED

A purchasing committee, composed of Mrs. Stocker, Mrs. Hopwood, Mrs. Gibbs, Mr. H. Walkey and Fire Chief Howard, was appointed at a meeting of the Executive committee of the Children's Aid Society which was held yesterday afternoon. The committee will have the necessary power to purchase supplies for the use of the Children's Shelter. Since the appointment of Mr. C. A. G. Spence as local agent, the Society has decided to break away from the somewhat antequated method of supplying the wants of the institution through the medium of the superintendent. The present plan is to pay the superintendent a lump sum of five hundred dollars a year and make separate provisions for the purchasing of supplies. That is the method recommended by Mr. Kelso, Provincial Superintendent, and adopted in other centres.

A letter was read from Mr. William Henry, Superintendent of the Shelter, setting forth the terms upon which he will undertake the work under the proposed new arrangement. The letter specified a "high standard" of food, "vegetables in and out of season," et cetera. Reference was also made to the question of domestic help that might be required.

A Lucrative Position.

The Board was anything but satisfied with the "tone" of the letter. An endeavour will be made to meet Mr Henry and if possible draft an agreement that will be satisfactory to all parties. Members of the Board stated that any number of men could be found who would be willing to accept the position at five hundred dollars a year, together with a house to live in and supplies. As Adjutant McElheney pointed out, this was more than the average mechanic could make clear of all expenses.

Mr. Spence addressed the Board relative to a number of matters. He also advised the Board that he had waited upon Mr. Kelso in Toronto and received a definition of his new duties. Under the new arrangement, Mr. Spence has absolute control of the children coming under his supervision, so far as placing them in homes, etc., is concerned, while Mr. Henry is known as caretaker of the Shelter.

The resignation of Mr. Geo. Cochrane as local agent for the Society was accepted. Mr. Cochrane's resignation was made imperative owing to failing health. He was made a member of the Executive committee, where his kindly interest and good judgment will be at the service of the Board.

Those present at the meeting were Mr. E. A. Peck, Mr. Joseph Wearing, Rev. Father Phalen, Mr. H. Walkey, Fire Chief Howard, Chief of Police Thompson, Adjutant McElheney, Mrs. Gibbs, Mrs. Hopwood and Mrs. Stocker.

AUBURN CASE IS BEING HEARD AT OTTAWA NOW

the goods were slightly inferior to the sealed sample from the Militia Department," said the witness. He stated that a mechanical analysis had first been made to see whether the goods were composed of long fibre or short fibre. The latter might be either "wool stock" or "shoddy." Short fibre, if given more "trust," however, might have more tensile strength than long fibre, with less. Aside from that long fibre goods were of course the better. In the case of the cloth in question the mechanical analysis had shown that it was inferior to the sealed sample to the extent of about 15 per cent. The goods had considerably more short fibred wool and contained some cotton, nearly 1 per cent., as compared with 23 in the sealed sample. Such a minute percentage of cotton, however, was negligible. The number of yarns to the inch was less. The tensile strength was less.

"Would the inferiority of 15 per cent. in quality indicate a similar difference in price?" asked Mr. Hutcheson.

"I should think so."

Examined by Mr. Daniel O'Connell, for the Auburn firm, Dr. Hersey said the presence of cotton in the goods examined indicated that it contained "shoddy" or clippings from old cloth.

"We have it in evidence here that the shoddy put in was taken from clippings of new cloth," said Mr. O'Connell.

If it were so and it were not taken from garments with cotton linings it would not make any difference.

The evidence is that this was so, but that the cotton was picked up from the manufacture of the goods in machines where cotton had been made.

Good But Not Up to Standard.

It would be extremely unlikely said the witness. He added, however, that the amount of cotton was not serious. The wool used was of good, but variable quality.

The witness said that a manufacturer should be able to reproduce standard samples of cloth submitted to him.

"Good cloth, but not up to the standard sample," said the witness, finally, in summing up his analysis.

The commission then adjourned till an indefinite date next week.

Admits Kissing "Other Woman" In $250,000 Suit

BASEBALL PLAYER ALLEGES WEAVERSON GREW TO TREAT HIS WIFE LESS CORDIALLY.

CHICAGO, June 13. Frederick Weaverson, the storm centre of the $250,000 alienation suit, on trial before Supreme Court Justice Gavegan, yesterday testified against his wife.

"Mrs. Caroline Frame," he said "never had anything to do with my separation from my wife. We drifted apart because our ideals, studies and interests were different. We were not congenial. She said we had better separate and I agreed with her."

Mrs. Brownie Rathbone Weaverson, a Mandaenan believer, is suing Mrs. Frame, who has the income from more than a $1,000,000, for alleged alienation of Weaverson's affections. The paintiff says her husband was first employed by Mrs Frame, in Christian Science work, but was made dissatisfied with his wife and home by Mrs. Frame's lavish gifts of motor cars, thirty-five acres of land, and a new house. Mrs Frame and Weaverson, who acts as her business manager, deny this.

THOUGHT OF SEPARATION.

"I married Mrs. Weaverson in 1900," testified Weaverson. "In Chicago we had some difficulty and I thought of getting a separation. I thought of it again seriously in New York."

Q. Did Mrs. Frame ever suggest that you get a divorce from your wife?

A. No, she told me not to get a divorce. Mrs. Weaverson once accused Mrs. Frame of trying to induce me to get a divorce. She did so unjustly.

Q. Did Mrs. Frame do or say anything which might cause you to separate from Mrs. Weaverson?

A. No, the only thing she ever said was that it was too bad Mrs. Weaverson was not interested in Christian Science. She said that several times. I had become interested in Christian Science in 1900, and have since continued to study it. I was engaged by Mrs. Frame to help build up the Fourth Church of Christ Scientist.

Q. Did Mrs. Weaverson ever object to your occupation as secretary and business manager for Mrs. Frame?

A. She did not. She urged me to continue.

Q. Were your relations with Mrs. Frame always of a business and social nature?

A. Yes. They reached a point where Mrs. Frame thought of consulting an attorney to see about adopting me as her son.

Weaverson, who is a handsome man of powerful physique, over fifty years old, glanced down at Mrs. Frame, who is twenty years his senior, as he said this.

ADMITS KISSING HER.

Q. Were your relations those of mother and son? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever kiss Mrs. Frame A. Yes, often, openly in the presence of others.

Weaverson was still under examination when the case was adjourned until Monday.

"Big Chief" Meyers, the Indian baseball catcher, testified for Mrs. Weaverson. He said he had often called on the Weaversons in St. Paul, Chicago, and this city. After Weaverson's employment by Mrs. Frame he noticed Weaverson treated his wife less cordially. Sometimes he would not speak to her, he said.

Joseph Seymour, who described himself as the 'handy man' of the country estate of Mrs. Frame at Wildwood, testified that Weaverson cooked pancakes for her and strolled about the grounds with her arm-in-arm. He said Weaverson and Mrs. Frame kissed each other frequently.

"Mrs. Frame told me," he continued, "that Mr. Weaverson was getting more and more tender to her and that she couldn't stand it any longer. She said she was going to take herself out of his life and rest quiet in Europe.

PRUSSIANS AND GERMANS.

Many authorities hold that the original Prussians were not of the same bred as the old, or South Germans, being of the Hunnish or Mongolian stock. The kinship of the English Dutch, Scandinavian and South German is indisputable, but the Prussians (ethnologically speaking) are not included in the Teutonic circle. They are, to say the least, originally of non-Teutonic blood.

RAT BITES SLEEPING WOMAN

VERONA, N.J., June 14. — Mrs Freida Burns of Pompton Avenue, Cedar Grove, was suddenly awakened from her sleep by an excruciating pain in her right arm on Thursday night. At the same time the arm seemed to be held down by a weight from which she could not extricate herself. Calling to her daughter, who quickly turned on a light, it was discovered that the cause of Mrs. Burns' pain was a large rat which could not be pulled away until it fell with its own weight, carrying with it a large piece of flesh.

Annual Gathering of Farmers' Institute At R. N. Scott's Home

Very Pleasant Afternoon at the Farm of Ex-Warden Scott in Smith —Supper in the Big Barn Was Enjoyed Despite the Rain.

Rain pursued the farmers of West Peterborough even to the annual meeting of their Institute at ex-Warden R. N. Scott's home yesterday afternoon. It blew up from the north west with its warning clouds that allowed plenty of time for preparedness. The supper tables were carried into the barn which was almost emptied of last year's crop and on the wide driveway floor they were reset with a grand fare of those dainties the ladies of the farm so generously provide. Hence, while some of the usual features of the annual meeting were disarranged, they were more than compensated by the novelty of the barn supper.

There was quite a large attendance yesterday afternoon and Mr. and Mrs. Scott proved delightful hosts. Mrs. Scott has been unwell for some time but she was able to be around for a short time yesterday while she gave her guests a cordial welcome. As for the ex-Warden he couldn't do enough for the members of the Institute and other visitors and in spite of the rain yesterday's annual meeting was in many respects a memorable one.

Addresses were given by Mr. F. C. McCrae the District representative of Norwood, President J. A. McGregor, Joshua Smithson, H. B. Corvan, Ed. Elliott, Ernie Devell, Allan B. Mann, R. N. Scott and others.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. was a visitor during the afternoon.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The financial report presented by Mr. Allan Mann was as follows:—

RECEIPTS

Balance from last year	$41.24
Membership Fees	30.30
Municipal Grant	25.00
Legislative Grant	25.00
	121.54

Printing and Advertising	39.60
Miscellaneous	2.50
Balance on hand	12.85
	121.54

Messrs. John Buckham and Riddell, auditors, certified the statement as correct.

Of the supper much could be said but Ernie Devell of Otonabee summed up the general satisfaction by asking if one of "these things couldn't be held every other day". President McGregor gave a modest and gratifying report of the past year's work. County Clerk Elliott told a few stories and cleaned up a large share of strawberry pie. Mr. Johnsa Smithson was one of those who contributed dignity to the meeting and a pointed address on present conditions.

Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Gillespie couldn't wait for supper but they weren't neglected. They rode off to the city with sandwiches, pie, etc., providing an ample automobile lunch. Everyone agreed that the ladies of Smith make the best salads in their parts. It is self-evident therefore, that the picnic

Of course the past rains and the crop conditions were among the feature discussions, but after supper all was well with world.

ELEVEN MEETINGS HELD.

Mr. A. B. Mann, reported that during the year eleven meetings were held by the Institute with an aggregate attendance of five hundred.

Mr. J. A. McGregor was re-elected president and Mr. Clayton Telford first vice-president. The appointments were provisional upon a future meeting of the Institute when the complete Board will be elected.

Question of Distributing Prize Money During War Stirs British Naval Men

LONDON, June 11.—It is curious that while the United States naval authorities are considering the offering of extra inducements to navy recruits in view of the likelihood of the new naval construction bill passing the British Government is being charged with the abandonment or withholding of what was in times gone by a very great attraction to men to volunteer for a seafearinig life. This is the payment of prise money for the capture of enemy ships and cargoes.

All rules for service and reward must be revised from time to time to keep in accord with the spirit of the age. It would be quite a mistake to assume that the payment of prise money in the British navy has been stopped because no more men need be induced to volunteer. Similarly, it would be equally erroneous to suppose that the prospect of making handsome sums out of enemy prizes would alone provide sufficent attraction for the 15,000 to 20,000 extra seamen which the American navy would require if the new bill became law.

RECORD PRIZES.

In the old days, however, it was different, and the hope of monetary gain was certainly a powerful motive in the minds of many who went to sea. And there was good reason for this. Naval history records many instances in which officers and men amassed fortunes out of the spoils of the war against the enemy's commerce on the high seas. In what is believed to be the biggest haul of prise money on record as far as individual shares are concerned was the capture of a Spanish galleon in 1761 by the Actaeon and the Favourite. The shares of the captains amounted to £65,000 ($325,000), the lieutenants £13,000 ($65,000), and so on down to £485 ($2,425) for each seaman and marine. This for one day's work.

Although it was only the fortunate few to whom fell such plums, practically every one who was in the service for any length of time had an opportunity at some period of his career of sharing in the proceeds of a captured prise or two. Not only did the knowledge of this add to the inducements to men to serve in the fleet, it also stimulated the exertions of those engaged in the war on enemy trade. The cutting out of a prize in a hostile harbor, the chase in all weathers, the hardships involved in patrolling trade routes for days at a stretch in the hope of making some special haul, all these called out those qualities of audacity, seafearing skill and the like which counted for so much in the character of British seamen.

But other times, other measures. Early in 1914 the Admiralty recommended the government to abolish prise money. They took the high minded view that the private enrichment of individuals by acts of warfare was not compatible with the true conception of the naval profession. Moreover, the old system could hardly be called a fair one ,just one. It was the men in the ships of the line, blockading the hostile fleet, exposed to the same dangers and hasards as their comrades in the frigates on the trade routes, but denied the stimulus and excitement of the latter service, whose work made possible the war upon the enemy's commerce. Yet little or no prise money ever came their way.

NELSON WON ONLY $30,000

So great a man as Nelson made only £6,000 ($30,000) in prise money during the whole of his lifetime, whereas much less distinguished seamen, as has been shown, could gain many times this amount from a single haul.

Thus the announcement that the proceeds of captured ships would be pooled for distribution equally over the whole navy was welcomed. After nearly two years of war, however, as a result of which it is officially stated that the prise fund in the hands of the Paymaster General amounts to £4,420,000 ($22,100,000), no grants have been paid to the seamen, and the Admiralty declares that none can be paid until the war is over. This is hardly calculated to increase the satisfaction of the fleet with the new policy.

If there is anything in the idea of prise money as an additional incentive to men to perform their duty more zealously they certainly should have the benefit of what is due to them as soon as possible. Many unfortunately must lose their lives, as hundreds have already done, before the war closes, and it seems hard that their widows or families should not receive grants out of the huge sum lying in the Paymaster General's office. The only advantage of delay seems to be that the government has the full use of this money, and although the point is not yet settled, it is understood that the interest earned upon it will be added to the capital at the ultimate distribution.

It is true that in the British navy the system of continuous service makes life for the seamen very different, men adopting the calling of a man of war's man as their profession, so that the inducement offered by the prospect of prise money is less urgent. Where, however, continuous service is not the rule, and where, as has been shown in this war, a large augmentation of the naval personnel is necessary, it seems well that such a subject as the chances of the award of money from enemy prizes should not be left for settlement until after hostilities have ended.

EXPERT REPORTS ON ONTARIO WEATHER

How the Weather Man Has Affected Vegetation and Crops--Meteorological Service Weather Man Gives Authentic Details by Trained Observers—Peterborough Conditions

Ontario's weather conditions, and their effects, are splendidly outlined in the monthly weather map of the Meteorogical Society.

During May last the rainfall of old Ontario, according to the map, varied from 4 to 7 inches, while light frosts touched most points, but did little damage.

Toronto.—Vegetation in the vicinity of Toronto continued backward generally until after the 22nd, when, owing doubtless to the high temperatures prevailing, rapid strides were made, and by the 31st its condition was not much below the normal. Owing to frequent rains low clay lands remained very wet, and in many cases seeding was impossible; on light land, however, seeding was completed early in the month. Plum and cherry trees were in bloom about the middle of the month and showed plenty of bloom. Apple trees, which were in bloom ten days later, were also in good condition All trees were in leaf by the 29th, and as they had escaped frost their condition was also excellent. Practically all the summer birds had arrived by the 29th.

Port Arthur.—Water above normal, all vegetation well advanced.

Haileybury.—A late spring,—seeding delayed by frequent though light rains in earl part of month and steady low temperature; the grass came through the winter unusually well and promises to be a good crop

Beatrice, Muskoka.—Good show for fruits; forest trees in full leaf; low lying land still too wet for seeding; hired labour scarce and planting is slow.

Barrie.—Swallows, 11th; grain and forage crops doing well; maples in full leaf by the end of the month.

Southampton.—Very calm weather, but cold with rain and fog, and the farmers could not get their plowing done in time, particularly in the low land. There is a good promise of fruit, cherries and plums show heavy bloom.

Lucknow.—A very wet and backward spring; seeding about all finished at end of the month, the largest on record; meadows, pasture and fall wheat looking good; fruit trees all full of bloom, cherry commenced to bloom on the 15th; plum on 22nd; apples on 23rd, lilac on 26th; rainfall 4.92 inches

Clinton.—Fall wheat looking well. Little seeding until after 24th. Humming birds on the 15th; peach blossom on 20th; thunder on the 6th, 8th, 27th and 29th, aurora 30th

London.—Trees show promising bloom, especially cherry and apple.

Georgetown.—Wheat and pastures are in excellent condition, but much of the seeding remains undone Cultivated currants were in bloom on the 14th; cherries on the 17th, wild strawberries, 20th, apple trees 24th, humming birds seen 26th.

Brockville.—Seeding practically finished in this section; in fact, much which was sown early under good conditions is above the ground, grass is growing rapidly.

Morrisburg.—Many farmers have no seed in the ground yet. Hay looking fine, pastures good

Renfrew.—Fall wheat fair in some places but backward in others. Owing to large quantity of rain pasturage is thick and good with sign of tremendous hay crop; strawberries in bloom in great profusion. Frost blossom betokens very heavy crop, water in river and creek much higher than at the same time last year.

Peterborough.—Fall wheat is looking fairly well. The pasturage is very good Low lying land is still too wet for seeding. The fruit prospects are excellent.

When J. H. Renwick Was a Bandmaster

It will be good news to our townspeople to learn that a Citizen's Band has been organized and the organization is making very favourable progress. Last evening over twenty members turned out to practice. A few years ago under the leadership of Mr J. H Renwick, Port Hope boasted of one of the best town bands in the Province, and we hope soon to see the same standard of efficiency.—Port Hope Guide.

Jury Acquitted George Downer of Incest, But Judge Severely Castigated Him For Loose Living

The County Court was adjourned at noon to-day until July 13th, and twenty jurors were named to attend the hearing of the Glower-Tully action, postponed on acount of the injuries of Miss Edith Tully, sustained in a recent runaway. One panel of the petit-jury brought in a verdict of not guilty in favour of Mr. George Downer, who was charged with incest. The evidence in this case was presented yesterday afternoon, and this morning, Mr. G. N. Gordon, representing Downer, and Crown Attorney Hatton for the prosecution, addressed the jury. His Honour Judge Huycke also reviewed the case and the course the jury should follow in its deliberations. Incidentally, His Honour stated that the alleged crime was one of the most revolting that had come within his experience on the bench.

After the jury had pronounced their acquittal of Downer, it was Judge Huycke's duty to discharge him, and in doing so His Honour flayed him on account of the looseness of his life as disclosed by the evidence. In this respect it was one of the severest condemnations members of the bar were able to recall, according to their comments after court.

In his defence Downer denied the alleged criminal relations with his seventeen year old daughter, and claimed that the charge was an attempt to oust him and bring back a certain Mark Pengelly, thus setting up one of the forms of the triangle from which springs so much sin and so many tragedies. Judge Huycke made no reference to the jury's decisin other than to remark that they had apparently strained the evidence produced by the defence.

Verdict For $1,000.

John Buller offered no defence yesterday afternoon to the story told by Laura Sloan in her action for $1,000 damages for breach of promise and seduction. The jury allowed the full amount of the claim, one of the few instances in which an action for "heart balm" has been successful in quite a while. Mr. Gordon was counsel for Miss Sloan, the plaintiff.

No Bills Returned.

The Grand Jury returned no bills in two cases, one of which was dependent upon the other. The first was that in which M. McLoughlin, of Toronto, at one time a "movie" operator at the "Tiz-It" was charged with having stolen the motion picture machine, and in the second case Lee Peter, one time movie magnate, was charged with having received stolen goods, the said goods being the above mentioned machine. However, the Grand Jury failed to find sufficient evidence to warrant a trial and both actions were dismissed.

This afternoon the Grand Jury is visiting the public institutions in the city and county. It is composed of the following: Arthur Ash, Edgar Burnham, Thos. Beatty, John Coward, John Carey, F. M. Dela Fosse, Thos. Flynn, Geo. Taylor, S. T. Wedlock, H. Phelan, John Gillespie, Geo. Kenyon and Geo. Baird. Mr. Phelan is foreman.

Eighty-five thousand satisfied owners against unproved claims and rosy promises

You judge a man by what he's done—not by what he says he intends to do. Judge a motor car the same way.

Eighty-five thousand and more Canadian built Fords have "made good" in actual service. Since 1904 this sturdy, economical car has stood the test—not only in Canada, but throughout the British possessions.

Every passing year has seen Canadian Ford sales mount by thousands of cars—because, under almost every conceivable condition, the car has proved itself a splendid all-around utility.

It has sold on its record for dependable and economical performance—not on the rosy promises of its makers.

The man who selects a Ford is backed in his judgment by more than eighty-five thousand satisfied motorists in the Empire.

Has this a significance for you?

New York Gets Impatient Waiting For League Leader

Having Been Given Hope by Both Yankees and Giants, Father Knickerbocker is Wondering What is Keeping Back His Baseball Offsprings

NEW YORK, June 11.—Just when Father Knickerbocker and his huge family was getting ready to laud and overload with honours his two baseball representatives in the diamond warfare of the major leagues the aggregations dear to his heart hesitate. Father Knickerbocker is sorely puzzled as much by the ways of the Giants as by the Yankees, for he had cherished the hope that by this time at least one or the other of the two clubs would be resting on the top of the ladder, setting the pace for the rest of the country.

Father Knickerbocker cannot be blamed for having looked forward to a leading baseball candidate. Several times the Giants and Yankees have shown convincing contests that would lead even one not so particularly interested to believe that the proper place would be in front. When a team wins seventeen straight contests and nineteen out of twenty-one away from home it seems impossible that team can be relegated to taking the dust of any other outfit.

The case of the Giants furnishes food for thought. To many it seems almost impossible that a club could sprint along at such terrific speed, get within striking distance of the lead and then disintegrate and fall by the wayside. Also that the Giants can win away from home and still are unable to convince visitors of their prowess is another question that sorely troubles Father Knickerbocker and his children.

McGRAW SEEKING ANSWER TOO

John McGraw was asked to explain why the Giants find it so hard to win at home. He was requested to tell to Manhattan followers why it is that up to date only three victories have come to the Giants at the Polo Ground this year.

"I would give a lot for the reason," was the answer of McGraw. "Baseball now gives the home team no advantage. There may be a feeling among the players that having the crowd with them helps, and in the case of young players this certainly is a fact, but our baseball crowds are so transient most of the time we usually do not run across a rabid, partisan 'fans'. At one time the umpire may have been too cautious and in this way helped the home team, but now with police protection and unlimited power he is not called upon to give decisions excepting the way he sees them. This takes away from the home team any outstanding advantage.

"Of course the team at home gets more chance for morning practice and training. Also the players have their own homes and need not risk their lives and lose sleep riding the trains. The quick jumps help to take the life out of a player. This should favor a club at home.

"Just why the Giants find it hard to win here is beyond me. The pitchers, since returning home, have gone along in tiptop shape. The hitting has been as good as could be expected but somehow or other the opposition has fought back harder. It looks to me as if the other clubs try much harder here than when at home. I think the victory of Saturday over the Cubs will have a big mental help on the players. They like to defeat the Cubs and work to the limit to gain this end. Once we get started at home Brooklyn and the rest of the National League teams had better get out of the way."

Two highly rated teams in the American League are beginning to show the kind of baseball expected from them, and are fast gaining on the leaders. These are Detroit and Boston. Both considered dangerous contenders for B. B. Johnson's gonfalon, it was not until a few days ago that either made itself known. Now, however Boston is booming along at high speed and carrying much of the opposition to one side. Detroit, too, has climbed from obscurity into the sunlight, and is threatening the Yankees and Cleveland.

Speaker Big Factor at Cleveland.

Just as long as 'Tris' Speaker continues to grab for himself five hits a day and Morton, Coumbe, Coveleskie and Bagby pitch as they have been, just so long will Cleveland have to be reckoned with. There seems no let up to the playing of the Forest City outfit.

Brooklyn continues to convince all opponents of its ability to win. C. H. Ebbets is represented by a sterling pitching staff, and it will take a lot of fight to head off the Dodgers. For the first time in thirteen years it seems Brooklyn really has a fine chance for the pennant.

The Boston Braves are slowly but surely, slipping back into that rut they occupied until George Stallings mesmerized or hypnotized the club in 1914. The Boston pitching staff has wilted and gone to pieces which explains why the Braves are not in the running.

Cincinnati seems to have an extra strong club this season, but one just short of championship calibre. With a couple more good pitchers it would be hard to keep the pennant away from Herzog. Chase adds untold strength to that organization.

Although the Yankees have not had any sustained winning streaks, they have been consorting with victory often enough to keep the team among the select few. Since the season opened the Yankees have been consistent winners, only a few paces short of the best in the league, Cleveland. On several occasions a vitory would have landed the Yankees high and dry in first place, but each time this victory has eluded the clutches of Donovan and party.

Right now the Yankees are playing high class baseball. Mogridge, Cullop, Shawkey, Fisher and Keating are pitching perfectly. Gilhooley, Baker, Gedeon, Pipp and Nunamaker are hitting savagely. The entire defensive collection is portraying the best of baseball. There seems no reason why the team should fall down. There is still a lot of strength that as yet has not made an appearance. The Yankees for the first time in years certainly can smile optimistically.

EXPECTS PENNANT FOR GIANTS.

McGraw is a lot more optimistic and confident now than he was during the first thre weeks of the season. Although he will not say so, he expects the Giants to win the pennant going away. The wonderful hitting strength, the catching ability of "Bill" Rariden and pitching of Anderson, Perritt, Benton, "Matty" and Tesreau are equal to anything in the league, in the opinion of McGraw.

About three weeks ago, when the Yankees were striding for the top with leaps and bounds, Colonel Jacob Ruppert spent a lot of minutes each morning looking over the standing of the clubs, hoping to discover his team seting the pace. He watched carefully for several mornings and with discouraging results. Finally he telephoned to "Bill" Donovan.

"How soon will the Yankees be in first place?" queried Colonel Ruppert.

"About October 8," was the serious if short answer from the manager of the team.

From this it can be seen that there are optimists connected with the Yankees as well as with the Giants. Donovan, like McGraw, will not go on record that the Yankees will win the pennant, but he smiles winningly when talking of the strength of the club. One thing is certain, Donovan will be sorely disappointed if the team finishes worse than second.

PROSPECTORS WITHDRAW.

The Standard Oil Company has withdrawn all its prospectors and equipment from Shensi province and has definitely abandoned the boring of wells in search of oil. The last of its drilling crew has returned to Peking, and will sail for the United States in a few days.

While there is still a possibility that the Standard Oil Company and the Chinese government may reach an agreement to conduct some further prospecting some time in the future, there is believed to be but little likelihood that such action will be taken soon.

No announcement has been made as to the success the American company has had in its exploitation work, but it is reported that the results of the drilling were disappointing.

IMPORTANCE OF CHEMISTRY

Chemistry's importance in the future prosperity of the nation has been recognized by University College, London, which has just completed the construction of a new chemical laboratory with an installation and reference library which it is intended shall become one of the most complete and comprehensive of its kind in the world.

The faculty of the college in carrying out its plans for the advancement of chemical science in Britain sought for ideas in the principal modern laboratories both in this country and abroad. The basic idea was to provide for the needs of independent research and the experimental department has been designed for the carrying out of tests on a large scale with the view of utilization of new discoveries in connection with the industries of the country. The government has during the war taken advantage of the facilities offered, and much valuable work has been achieved.

SHIPS THAT PASSED IN THE NIGHT

CAST ADRIFT BY THE KAISER'S SUBMARINE—THE HOPE THAT WAS BORN TO DIE.

Few of know what it is like to be tossing on the sea in an open boat, waiting for a hope of life. A man who was saved from a Japanese mail boat torpedoed in the Mediterranean has given this story of nine hours in a boat.

The German submarine, which torpedoed them without warning, dived down and left them to their fate, as did another vessel which came up and disappeared mysteriously, for reasons not made clear in the report.

We had nothing to eat or drink (the writer says) Just before sunset, with the passengers' permission, I read aloud from my Bible until it got too dark. This comforted me a lot. We then commended ourselves to our Father for the night and for all the future. As soon as it was dark each boat in turn lit a flare to attract attention. The most torturing part of the night was the number of ships we saw gradually getting nearer and nearer till within hailing distance, and then as surely going away again. Even the sailors and the men wept. We were tantalized at least eight times this way in six hours. In one case a ship actually saw us and stopped for some time. The sailors cheered lustily, got their oars out, and started to row to her. In another ten minutes we should have reached her. Imagine our feelings when she suddenly put all light out, and scudded away.

Again and again hope was thus born to die, but in the end help came from a French gunboat.

Anglo-Jap Alliance Is Main Pillar

Statement Made by Nipponese Statesman Regarded as Significant

FORMER MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS DEPLORES ATTACKS ON INSTRUMENT—CONFINED TO POLITICIANS, HE SAYS.

What many Japanese people regard as an important political address was delivered recently by Baron Takaaki Kato, former minister of foreign affairs, and the leader of the government Doshikai party, at the inauguration of the Kioto branch of his party. Alluding to Japan's position in the present war, Baron Kato declared that in his opinion the Anglo-Japanese alliance must remain the main pillar of the nation's diplomacy.

The speaker said that Japan would gain a reasonable compensation in return for the part that she has played in the war but he wished to emphasize that Japan's position was different from that of her allies in Europe, inasmuch as Japan's activities have been restricted to the Orient. The statesman warned his compatriots that should they expect too much from the peace conference they would be disappointed.

Turning his attention to the recent attacks on the Anglo-Japanese alliance Baron Kato expressed his regrets that unfriendly comments should have been made. It was certain, he said that they were confined to politicians and lay academicians. What the scholars voiced was the more dangerous, he declared, because these men may not know much about practical diplomacy, the masses of the people are likely to be mislead by their scholastic attainments, and believe that they are right. The ex-minister added:

"MAIN PILLAR OF DIPLOMACY"

"It would be most regrettable if our people are led to any erroneous conception of the Anglo-Japanese alliance for I regard it the main pillar of our diplomacy."

Baron Kato said he understood that the critics based their objection to the alliance on the attitude of British officials and merchants in China who were alleged to be hindering Japanese undertakings in that country and on their belief that the formation of an alliance with Russia would render the pact with Great Britain useless. It was true, he thought, that some British merchants in China have continually slandered Japan and her people, but he was convinced that these Englishmen did not represent Great Britain.

As for the alliance with Russia, Baron Kato declared it the height of folly to imagine that it could be formed and maintained independently of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. He, for one would welcome an alliance with Russia, he said, but he was convinced that it could be made only on the strength of the pact with Great Britain, and that it must be supplementary to that alliance.

"When the peace conference is held the Anglo-Japanese alliance must be the basis of our policy, and Japan must of course co-operate with Russia and France," Baron Kato concluded. "If Japan goes astray from this policy her position will become very difficult. It is most important that our people should recognize the endeavor to smooth the way that lies before us for the generations to come."

Because of Baron Kato's influence among the men who direct the Japan of to-day his public utterances are regarded by many of his compatriots as more or less representing official opinion.

MISSING SEVEN YEARS.

Peter Robertson Vanished from His Home at Ottawa.

TORONTO, June 14.—If Peter Robertson, formerly clerk in the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, is still alive, he is 62 years of age. He disappeared on Jan. 20, 1909, and has not been seen or heard of since. His relatives believe him dead. His books at the department were in first-rate order, and his work was satisfactory. The only cue to a possible cause of his disappearance is the fact that he has suffered from acute indigestion, and for two months had scarcely been able to sleep.

Yesterday morning application was made before Mr. Justice Middleton for an order declaring him to be presumed dead. He is insured for $2,000 in the A.O.U.W. A brother is provincial librarian in Winnipeg, and two sisters reside in Vancouver.

Mr. Justice Middleton enlarged the matter for further enquiries.

Less than one-half teaspoonful of baking soda put into pancake batter will keep it from getting sour when it stands longer than usual.

WILL CONSTRUED

Before Mr. Justice Middleton in Osgoode Hall, the following case of local interest was decided. It concerns a provision in the will of the late Hon. J. R. Stratton, in reference to the disposition of "The Examiner":

Re Stratton—D. O'Connell, Peterborough, for executors, moved for order construing will. W. N. Tetley, for A. H. Stratton K. R. Hall, Peterborough, for R. M. Glover.

Judgment: The brother declines to become a part purchaser with Glover and claims he then has the right to become sole purchaser. Glover contends that if Stratton declines to accept the joint gift then he (Glover) may accept and so become the sole owner, subject only to the charge. The option to Stratton to become sole purchaser being in his view an option given when both refuse to accept the proffered joint legacy and not when one refuses. I cannot accept this as being either the testator's meaning or as being what he has said. . . The acceptance must follow the offer and be by both. In case both of them do not accept, then successive options are given—to the brother first and to Mr. Glover next. What the testator meant was if you two desire to enter upon this venture jointly, well and good. If you cannot agree my brother has the first chance, if he is unwilling then Mr. Glover is given the opportunity. No order as to cost save that executor may have them out of the estate.

THE RUSSIANS OPEN UP A NEW OFFENSIVE

ADDITIONAL GAINS HAVE BEEN MADE BY THE CANADIANS

Canadians Are Holding All Positions Retaken In Recent Offensive

Several Gains Were Made by the Canadians in Yesterday's Fighting---A Lull in the Fighting at Verdun With Intermittent Artillery Fire---Germans Lost an Auxiliary Cruiser and a Dozen Merchantmen in Naval Battle in the Baltic.

AUSTRIANS ABANDON TERRITORY

LONDON, June 15.—A lull in the fighting at Verdun, due perhaps to the sheer exhaustion of the attackers, and gains by the Canadians in the Ypres sector, were the chief features of the action along the western front yesterday, according to reports of the War offices.

At Ypres, the Canadian contingent has retaken all the positions taken by the Germans in actions extending over several days early in June and is holding fast, despite heavy artillery fire.

At Verdun intermittent artillery fire is going on, with here and there an infantry attack of small volume.

GERMANS LOST IN NAVAL BATTLE.

LONDON, June 15.—In a naval battle in the Baltic Tuesday night the Russians sunk one German destroyer and twelve merchantmen.

AUSTRIANS ABANDON TERRITORY.

ROME, June 15.—Austrians were compelled to abandon forty-five square miles of territory gained during the recent offensive against the Italians.

Russian and German Fleets Clashed in the Baltic Sea

German Squadron Was Attacked By Six Russian Destroyers and Driven Off---Russians Continue to Drive the Austrians Back---Premier Asquith States that the Allies Are in Sight of Complete Success.

LATE WAR DESPATCHES

LONDON, June 15.—Russian and German squadrons clashed in the Baltic, says a Copenhagen despatch. A German squadron comprising eight armoured trawlers, one auxiliary cruiser, and two destroyers, were convoying fourteen steamers. They were attacked by six Russian destroyers and several submarines and driven off.

AUSTRIANS STILL ON THE RUN.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 15.—Official report said that along the whole front from Polesia to Roumania Russians continue driving back and capturing Austrians.

SHARP ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN FLEETS.

LONDON, June 15.—A German trawler entering a Swedish port with wounded men, reports a sharp engagement between small fleets of the British and Germans, in the Baltic last night.

IN SIGHT OF COMPLETE SUCCESS.

LONDON, June 15.—Premier Asquith delivered a very optimistic speech yesterday saying, that the Allies were in sight of complete success.

HUGH J. O'BEIRNE—Diplomat who did much to bring about the Russ-British alliance and who was lost with Kitchener en route to Russia.

MAY BE TURNING POINT

London, June 13.—The military correspondent of the Morning Post, discussing the present war situation, says—"The Russians have shown their usual perspicacity in choosing the time and scene for their new offensive, and their customary adroitness in concealing their plans from the Germans and the Austrians, who appear to have been taken completely by surprise. The country south of the Pripet marshes has recovered from the floods following the spring thaw, and the roads are now in tolerable condition. The Germans are deeply committed to their offensive in France, and the Austrians to their operations on the Italian frontier. It is difficult for either to desist and to withdraw troops with a view to re-establishing the situation in Russia.

"A month ago the case would have been different. The fragmentary way in which the Germans have brought up reinforcements to Verdun, and the necessity they have been under of denuding other parts of the front, would seem to indicate that they have few reserves in hand, while the British force in France has been gaining steadily in strength and efficiency. The transfer of troops to Russia would not only entail the abandonment of the offensive, but would create the opportunity for which the allies have been waiting in France. The events now in progress, in fact, may mark the turning point of the war."

118TH UNIFORM FOUND SHORN OF INSIGNIA AND STRIPES.

BERLIN, June 15.—A uniform belonging to a member of the 118th Battalion was found by a farmer in a woods near the house of refuge. The farmer notified the local police, and one of the force investigated and found that the deserter had torn off all identification marks, including the corporal stripes.

However, he overlooked obliterating his name, which was written in ink on his belt.

COUNCIL WILL ALSO INQUIRE AS TO COMMISSIONS FOR PHARMACISTS.

In order that every druggist in the Province of Ontario might have a full understanding of the various clauses of the prohibition bill which will directly affect them, the Bylaws and Legislation Committee of the Pharmacy Council at their recent meeting decided to mail to every druggist in the province a copy of such clauses. "As the Act is very voluminous," says the recommendation, which was unanimously adopted, "we would urge that the College solicitor dissect the act by taking out all the sections and clauses affecting druggists and arrange the same so that it can be printed and distributed."

The Registrar will be instructed to have 2,000 copies of these printed and to mail one to each druggist in Ontario.

In a communication from J. A. Macdonald, a graduate of the College, who is now on active service in France, the attention of the Council was drawn to the fact that there was no provision for the appointment to commissioned ranks of pharmacists.

It was therefore decided that this condition should be brought to the notice of the Minister of Militia, with the request that official action be promulgated recognizing proper commissioned standing for all graduate com-

"What did ye take the bird for?"

"Sure," said the seedy one, "I took ith for a lark."

Official Notice Received Concerning Former Proprietor of the Hastings "Star"

HASTINGS NEWS

HASTINGS, June 14.—Mrs John Walsh, now of London, Ont., but recently connected with the tannery here, was in town on Thursday. Wedding Bells.

The wedding ceremony which united one of our popular young ladies, Miss Martha Coveney, and Mr. J. Fallon, of Asphodel, took place on Wednesday morning. The nuptial knot was performed by Rev. Father Brethertun in the church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, and was witnessed by a large number of friends and well wishers of the contracting parties.

The bride looked charming in a pretty gown of white silk with large hat and carried a bouquet of white carnations. She was assisted by Miss Nellie Gorman, who was tastefully attired in Belgian blue silk and carried pink carnations.

After the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride and all partook of a very dainty wedding feast. The happy couple motored to Norwood and left via C.P.R. for a short, trip and on their return will take up residence in Asphodel.

Personals.

Mr. and Mrs. Fallon are followed by the best wishes of a host of friends who will be pleased to hear of their future prosperity.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Hamburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work and now feel better than I did for twenty years."

Acreage Nearly Three Millions

Manitoba's wheat crop for this year amounts to 2,994,529 acres. Last year it was 3,664,281 acres, the highest on ecord, and there is therefore a decrease of 669,752 acres.

This was announced by Hon. Val. Winkler, minister of agriculture. The reason for the decrease is ascribed to the high wages asked by farm laborers rather than an actual shortage of help, also to the desire of many harvesters to summer fallow large portions of their land after last year's heavy yield. Many of the low lying fields were too wet for seeding and this has also contributed to the decrease.

Of the total wheat acreage only 2,123 acres are in fall wheat and this area is in the Swan river valley. The fall wheat area in 1915 was 3,351 acres.

The oat area this year is 2,062,411 acres as compared with 2,121,845 acres last year, a slight decrease.

Of barley there are this year 1,153,660 acres as compared with 1,039,849 acres last year.

Other crop figures given out by the minister are as follows:

Flax for 1916, 55,608 acres; for 1915, 64,863 acres.

Rye, for 1916, 32,559 acres; for 1915, 16,699 acres.

The increase in this case is due to the advice to sow rye in order to combat the sow thistle.

Peas, 1916, 3,112 acres; for 1915, 3,803 acres.

Fodder corn, for 1916, 34,960 acres; for 1915, 52,713 acres.

Potatoes, for 1916, 62,581 acres; for 1915, 67,343 acres.

Roots for 1916, 18,581 acres; for 1915, 17,352 acres.

Brome grass, for 1916, 28,753 acres; for 1915, 28,659 acres.

Timothy, for 1916, 103,117 acres; for 1915, 132,802 acres.

Iron with Phosphorus is the Greatest Nerve Tonic Known to Medical Science

Bonized Iron and Phosphorus is a new discovery in nerve tonics.

Doctors are surprised after many years of experience to find that they were unable to find that the real cause of nervous weak run down people was due directly to lack of phosphorus for the nervous system and iron for the blood circulation. The moment that phosphorus is given you can notice the nerves beginning to thicken and you begin to get control of your nerves once again. Without phosphorus the system becomes weakened, your stomach is unable to digest the little food that you eat, your liver becomes torpid, the kidneys start to pain you, the blood becomes clogged with impurities, the color of your face is muddy, then your hands, head and legs begin to shake through loss of control of your nerves. One is taking medicine for kidney trouble another is taking laxative every night, others taking poisonous spring tonics, some can't sleep for twitching nerves and some give up all hopes thinking they are too old and there is no hope for them. You have almost ruined your system and vitality by taking all kinds medicines for something that never talked you and you have no person to blame now but yourself if you do not start on cure by going to your druggist and get a few cents worth of Bonized Phosphorus with iron and take one or two tablets after each good meal. Give yourself a good ice cold bath every morning, rubbing yourself well; eat plenty of good wholesome vegetables, fruit and drink plenty of water every time you think of it. Here is good advice which millionaires are paying specialists thousands of dollars for to look well, eat well, sleep well, work well, digest well look well. As we are here only for a short stay so why not be healthy, strong, vigor and enjoy our short, sweet life. People can talk as they like about all the wonders, life and death, stories about medicines that have cured them, but when you come right down to scientific proofs, hard facts, there has been nothing in medical science to compare with just ordinary Bonized Phosphorus with iron to restore wrecked systems, put vigorous life in old people, color in your cheeks, clear thinking, strong nerves and strength like a giant.

Bonized Phosphorus with iron does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine or any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. It is easy to take, does not upset the stomach and is taken up by the system immediately making you feel better at once. It is dispensed in this city at either of F. C. Webber's stores at 50c a box.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Proposition, Not a Proposal

By EUNICE BLAKE

It is a wonder, considering how both young men and girls refrain from marrying those whom they have long known and are prone to take up with some new acquaintance, that so large a proportion of marriages turn out well. I myself had a narrow escape. I am a happy wife and the mother of children and yet it was all arranged that I should marry—

This is the way it happened. I was a playmate of Mark Warren. I knew him as well as if he had been my brother. He was a practical sort of chap and, so far as I could see, devoid of romance. When he was twenty-one and I twenty he one day said to me:

"Sue, you and I, in order to fulfill a desirable destiny, must marry some one. Why not marry each other? You will know what you are getting and so will I."

That was all he said. Just think of talking to a girl like that! Not a word about love; nothing but the bare statement that we would better marry each other than some one we didn't know much about. I just said to him:

"Mark, I would as soon marry a wooden Indian as a man who would propose like that. No, sir; when I marry I'll marry some one I love."

He smiled, and I knew he had expected about what I had given him. He didn't push the matter, and not long after that Howard Perkins came along and captivated all the girls in town. With all the others I liked him. Mark saw what was in the wind and asked me one day who was my new found friend. I told him that Mr. Perkins had been introduced to me at one of the assembly dances, and I had been told that he came of an excellent family.

Not long after that Howard Perkins introduced his friend George Monroe. Monroe was not a very aristocratic person, but had the art of making friends. At least, he was a nail fellow well met with everybody and never spoke ill of any one. He seemed to have a great admiration for Mr. Perkins and told me that he was one of the finest fellows he ever met. The result was that Howard Perkins and George Monroe were at our house a great deal. Mark Warren didn't seem to fancy either of them—through jealousy, I supposed—and came very seldom. One day he joined me on the street and said:

"I see you have two strangers coming to see you frequently. Don't be so foolish as to trust either of them without hunting up their records."

"Oh, I suppose you mean to warn me against marrying any one whom I have not known all my life and who would propose to marry me to save himself from making a matrimonial blunder."

"Just so," he replied, with one of those tantalizing smiles of his, and left me.

Howard Perkins carried me right off my feet. There was something very fascinating about him. Besides, he took me out a great deal. He had a way of spending money as though it had no value for anything except to purchase luxuries. He proposed to me and I accepted him.

One day when Mr. Monroe and Howard and I were together Howard said to me:

"I would like to leave an envelope with you containing $200. It's after bank hours and I have to go out with some fellow this evening and be up till after midnight."

I told him that I would keep it for him, but would not be responsible for it, whereupon he stepped up to the clock and, opening a door in it, put a roll of bills inside, remarking that they would be as safe there as anywhere, and no one need be responsible for them.

He left us soon after this, making an appointment with Howard for the next day. Howard dined with us and did not leave me till late in the evening. When we parted at the door I little dreamed that it was the last time I would see him.

The next morning I took up a newspaper and read of the arrest of one Edmond Edsall, who, under the name of Howard Perkins, had been passing checks on banks where he had no funds and otherwise swindling.

I had read thus far when my head swam, and I could read no further; but, recovering myself, I went on, to learn that a detective passing under the name of Monroe had landed the culprit by putting some marked bills in a clock for safe keeping when the latter was present.

Great heavens! The man had stolen money that had been left in my home from his own friend.

I was dreadfully cut up and mortified. Mark Warren came to see me to condole with me.

"I'm sorry, Sue," he said sympathetically, "that you should have had such a bitter experience. But just think what a dreadful fate you escaped."

"Did you know what sort of man he was?"

"No, or I would have warned you."

"Or that Monroe was a detective?"

"Certainly not."

"Isn't it awful?"

"Don't you think you'd better take some one you know all about?"

"Perhaps."

"Well, consider my proposal renewed."

"Proposal!" I exclaimed. "I don't consider it a proposal; it's a proposition. However, it's accepted. If I don't get romance I'll not get a villain."

I got a lot of comfort. The romance came after the engagement.

School Lunches— Continuing the subject of the Farmer's Bulletin number 712, I will quote "The Noon Meal at Home." Those that desire the specific and detailed description should get the bulletin. How to pack the child's lunch when it is necessary to take it to the school, suggestions for bill of fare and most important of all, preparing lunches at school, costs and recipes are all explained in detailed and simple style that can be readily made available.

"There is no reason why the ordinary family dinner should not be suitable for school children or served in a way that adapts it to their needs. The usual first course of meat and vegetables contains nothing, except the meat, which can not be given even to the youngest children. The vegetables, providing they are carefully prepared for simple methods, are especially needed and can often be made attractive to children by being served with a little meat gravy. As a substitute for the meat itself milk can be provided in the case of the younger children. These articles with the bread and butter, provide for the food needed.

The dessert course is suitable for children as well as for grown people unless it consists of rich pastries or puddings. The latter are not considered wholesome for children, if for no other reason than that they are likely to lead to overeating. Such deserts as fruit, fresh or cooked, with cake, cereals with milk or cream, and sugar; custards and custard puddings; gelatin dishes; simple ice cream; water ices; and other simple desserts may be given.

Whether or not the family meal is healthful for children depends not only on the food materials selected, but also on the way in which they are cooked. Simple methods are to be preferred from the standpoint of health as well as from that of the housekeeper's time. All dishes that are likely to contain overheated and scorched fats, such as foods carelessly friend in a pan in a small amount of fat, should be avoided. Deep-fat frying is open to fewer objections since, if properly done, foods will absorb little fat and the fat will not scorch. Vegetables cooked in water or in their own juices and seasoned with salt and a little butter or cream, are easier to prepare than those that are served with white sauce, scalloped or cooked in other elaborate ways.

What is said above applies equally to all meals. There is, however, one special precaution that applies to the noon meal when it is hurried. This refers to tough, hard foods that are likely to escape proper mastication. It is a mistake to think that the foods given to children must always be soft or finely divided, for children's teeth need exercise quite as much as the muscles do. When time for eating is limited, however, it is well to omit foods that are difficult to chew, and in extreme cases it may be necessary to serve only soft or finely divided foods— sandwiches made from crustless bread with finely chopped fillings, for example. Before resorting to this, however, it is well to make sure that the time for eating and for instance on good table manners is not unnecessarily cut short. The advantage of putting the meal on the table promptly and of having foods served in individual portions, or at least ready to eat when they are brought to the table, should be kept in mind. To have the meat already sliced and the dessert in cups instead of in one large dish from which individual portions must be served, and to follow the same general plan with other foods may change a hurried meal into one at which there is plenty of time for attention to details essential to health and good manners."

REAL IRISH SENTIMENT

Poet's Stirring Lines on London Irish at Loos

The Earl of Limerick arrived in New York during 1916. He told the reporters that "You may ask any questions you like, but I want to say first that I am not a polygamist and not a burglar; I have never been in jail and have $50 in real money. I came here to see my daughter, Mrs. James Cox Brady, and also to see my granddaughter. I think her name is Victoria. That's what I've go to find out." But the Earl is the author of a song entitled "The London Irish," that can be sung to the tune of "God Save Ireland." Here is one of the stanzas with the chorus:

So come all and do your bit,
Every Briton that is fit,
Join our football team; we'll show you how 'tis done;
At Loos the Germans found
That we charged them off the ground.
For the London Irish played the game and won!

Chorus:

Cheer, boys, cheer, we're London Irish,
Shout out this message 'cross the sea;
We will come to teach the Hun
How to show his heels and run,
And go with the boys to Berlin on the Spree!

HOW TO DIG A HOLE.

When you dig a hole in your garden you soon conclude that the amount of earth one man can remove in the course of a day is not very large.

But as a matter of fact, one man is now able to excavate no less than 15,000 tons of earth in a single day; he can literally remove a mountain by means of a wonderful digging machine now at work at Marysville, California.

This titantic dredge weighs 2,000 tons and cost 72,000 pounds to make. It has 87 huge buckets, each 16 cubic feet capacity, and each weighing over two tons. The dredge, operated by one man, is being used in the recovery of gold. It operates 70 feet below the water level, the buckets continually eating into the bank and scooping up the gold bearing matter. The dredge is run by electricity, a 400 horse power motor driving the buckets.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL WORK IN RUSSIA

American Doctors and Nurses Sent to Persia to Fight Disease as Well as Care for Wounded.

(By Montomery Schuyler.)

PETROGRAD, June 12.—American relief to the sufferers from the war has been given in two forms—by sending money form the United States to various relief organizations in Russia, and by raising money locally for the same purposes, as well as by the coming of doctors and nurses from America to take up a part of the work being done here by the Russian relief officers.

Almost at the beginning of the war the American National Red Cross sent a strong and well-equipped unit for hospital work to Russia, which was shortly afterward sent to Kieff, where it organized a separate American Red Cross hospital for the care of the Russian wounded in co-operation with the Russian military and medical authorities. This hospital soon became known for its excellent work and its fine equipment, consisting of 700 beds and all facilities for the most serious operations, X-ray work, and the like. The American doctors and nurses at this hospital gained a great reputation in this country for their skill and devotion. High appreciation of the work has been expressed by her Imperial Majesty, the Empress Dowager, by the Prince of Oldenburg, the Chief of the Department of Hospital Trains and the President of the Russian Red Cross, and other persons of high official position here.

This work was continued for nearly a year when, very unfortunately, it was rather briefly and somewhat curtly announced that the American Red Cross work in Russia would be discontinued in October, 1915, "owing to lack of support." This proceeding, however necessary it may have been naturally caused considerable comment among Russians, who could not understand why this hospital should be abandoned when apparently all the other American Red Cross work in Europe was being carried out on the same scale as before.

Local Committee Former.

A group of patriotic Americans in Petrograd shortly afterwards formed a committee to try to see if there was no way of keeping up this work, and for a time it was in fact carried on in this way. Later, however, the American doctors and nurses, were recalled from the hospital at Kieff, and some of them left Russia at the expiration of their year's service here. Through the efforts of the local American committee, however, it was found possible to arrange that any doctors and nurses who desired to remain in Russia to continue Red Cross work would have an opporunity to do so. Although this committee has been financially responsible for the continuance of the work of the Americans, it has been necessary to place them under the direct control of the Russian Red Cross.

Of the original number of doctors and nurses from the United States, only Dr. McClintic and Dr. Hazlett remain, but a third surgeon, Dr. Dickey, from Pittsburg, has recently joined them. There are still five Red Cross nurses from the United States here—Miss Pieb, Miss Farmer, Miss Cromwell, Miss Barndollar, and Miss Lee. They work with two Russian doctors and seven Russian nurses. The local group of Americans who took over the financial charge of this work has been officially designated as the "Russian Committee of the American Red Cross"; it has now twenty-one members in Russia. On account of the other obligations of the small American colony, this committee has endeavoured in so far as possible to get as much money as may be from the United States direct.

As a result of the retirement of the Russian armies on the Galician front last Autumn and in view of the possibility of the evacuation of Kieff by the Russians on account of the shortage of ammunition, the hospitals in that city were removed to places further east. The American unit at first took charge of a temporary hospital adjacent to the railway station at Kieff, dressing the wounds of the soldiers arriving from the front who were being transferred at Kieff to points further away. Later on this unit was sent to Tiflis, in the Caucasus, the headquarters of the General Staff of the Grand Duke Nicholas, who at about the same time was appointed Imperial Viceroy and Commander in Chief in the Caucasus. It did not remain there long, however, for it was decided to send it to Khoy, in Persia, near the Russian front, to establish a hospital and to attempt to stay the epidemics of typhus and typhoid then raging.

In February of this year so much progress had been made in stamping out these diseases, and active fighting having become more distant owing to the constant advance of the Russian forces in Persia, it was found possible to leave the hospital at Khoy with only one doctor, Dr. Hazlett was made the director, and Dr. McClintic and Dr. Dickey, with Miss Lee, were transferred to a field hospital at Zazvin and still later to Hamadan in Central Persia.

In addition to the Russian wounded and sick the American hospitals have been caring for a large number of Armenian and Syrian refugees and children, many of whom have been brought to them by the Cossack patrols which had found them abandoned in deserted homes or along the road. All the Turkish prisoners of war at Khoy, numbering several thousand, were also placed by the authorities in medical charge of the Americans. The relations with the Russian civil and military authorities have been very cordial, and the highest praise has been given to both doctors and nurses. The Grand Duke Nicholas is said to have given instructions that they should all receive imperial decorations for their work.

If this good work is to be kept up, however, it will be necessary to get and get quickly more financial assistance direct from the United States. Contributions made may be sent direct to Henry D. Baker, Commercial Attache of the United States at the American Embassy in Petrograd, Secretary of the Russian Committee of the American Red Cross, who has been very active in the work, and who recently paid a visit to the hospital at Khoy to see for himself how the work was being carried out.

Frozen Limbs a Problem.

One of the most serious problems which the American Hospital at Khoy has been called on to meet is the enormous number of cases of frozen limbs not only of Russian soldiers but of the Armenian population of the surrounding districts. Khoy being situated in the extreme corner of Persia, near the meeting place of the Russian and Turkish boundaries, was for a long time a sort of haven of refuge for the unfortunate Armenians who were lucky enough to escape the Khurds. Many abandoned children were picked up on the road or found in villages by the Cossacks, who, when not riding down the Nevsky Prospect in Petrograd, as a recent American writer puts it, "with the German blood hardly dried on their lances," are a good-natured lot of fellows, kind-hearted and very much like other Russian peasants.

Another American charitable work in Russia at present is the "Refuge," established last year by some members of the American colony in Petrograd. The tales of distress of the refugees from the Russian provinces in the west and from Poland, overrun by the German armies, and the great number of abandoned and homeless children, who in many cases are without food, prompted the foundation of the Refuge, which was primarily intended to care for women as well as children. This home is now accommodating fifty refugees, about half of whom are children. There has been little public realization here of the terrible sufferings among the Russian refugees since last summer, and instances might be given without number to show how tragic the fate of many of them was.

Besides hunger and privation, there were many cases of frozen limbs and rheumatism from exposure. One little girl now at the Refuge had just been placed by her parents on the last train leaving the City of Kovno when, in the struggling mob of people, all trying to get on the already crowded train, the mother fainted and the father left the child for a few moments to help her. Suddenly the train pulled out with the child on board and both parents were left behind in Kovno. Since that day nothing has ever been heard from either of them, and they, of course, have no idea where their little one is or whether she is still alive.

Last, but most important and well managed of all, is the American Hospital in Petrograd, or, as it is locally called, the "City Lazaret of the American Colony in Petrograd," which was organized in November, 1914, by the American colony, when it was seen that there would be room and welcome for private initiative of all kinds in helping the Government official agencies in taking care of the ceaseless stream of wounded and sick from the various fronts. Originally started with accommodations for twenty beds, in less than a year it was found possible to remove and enlarge it to forty beds, the present size. During the first year of its life the hospital treated 250 soldiers, of whom 137 have been dismissed, 29 have been sent to other convalescent commands, 37 sent on leave, 26 dropped from further military service, 14 transferred to other hospitals, and 7 sent to service corps. One man spent 222 in the hospital.

Although the little American colony in Petrograd made great efforts to keep the hospital well supplied with funds, it would never have been able to continue the work as well as it has had it not been for the voluntary services of so many devoted persons who gave their time and labour to make the hospital a success. There is still need of further contributions, however, and anything send to F. M. Corse, Treasurer, Nevsky Prospect 2e, Petrograd, will be heartily welcome and of great use.

The testimony of the Americans who have come in contact with the Russian soldiers at this and other hospitals and relief centres is unanimous as to their lovable and good qualities, their patience under severe suffering, and their gratitude for anything done for them.

HAVE ROSY CHEEKS AND FEEL FRESH AS A DAISY—TRY THIS!

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons

To see the tinge of healthy bloom in your face, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, to wake up without a headaches, backache, coated tongue or a nasty breath, in fact to feel your best day in and day out, just try inside-bathing veery morning for one week.

Before breakfast each day, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it as a harmless means of washing from the stoamch, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the blood and internal organs. Those who are subject to constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, rheumatic twinges, also those whose skin is sallow and complexion pallid, are assured that one week of inside-bathing will have them both looking and feeling better in every way.

Nerves Were So Upset Could Not Endure Noise

Neuralgic Headaches and Extreme Nervousness Caused Keenest Suffering—Lasting Cure by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Once the nervous system gets run down everything seems to tend to make it worse. You worry over your condition, are unable to get the required rest and sleep, noises excite and irritate you and the future is most discouraging.

The nervous system does not get the proper nourishment from the food you eat, so you must have something also to lift you out of the run-down condition. You may find that your experience coincides with the writer of this letter and be encouraged to put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test.

You will make no mistake in employing this food cure, for, acting as it does hand in hand with Nature, it is bound to do you good.

Mrs. Jas. Jensen, Gwynne, Alta., writes: "About ten years ago I was troubled with severe attacks of neuralgia and nervousness, and was for several months so bad that I could not get a night's rest. I used several medicines recommended by the druggist. My doctor also prescribed but nothing he gave me brought any relief. Instead I got worse and worse until I could scarcely do anything or bear the least bit of noise. My nerves were all upset.

"My husband read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and got me some. Although I had no faith in it, I began its use, and after a few doses began to sleep well and the neuralgia left me entirely. I used six more boxes and have never had any trouble from neuralgia or the nerves since.

"This is to certify that I know Mrs. Jensen and believe this statement to be true and correct. Fred Freeman, J.P."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' AND SMALL WOMEN'S MIDDY DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

"Debonnaire" is what this middy dress is. Its sports are many and it will be a fitting complement to the wardrobe of the smart dresser. The new style tendencies are cleverly brought out in a number of ways. In a combination of materials it is very effective, and the designer planned it for wear without a shield. The pocket looks best at the lower edge of the blouse, which slips on over the head and which has its fulness gracefully caught at the sides, where the ends of the wide belt are inserted in lengthwise openings. The contrasting goods cut bias, give a very stylish collar, belt and cuffs and the three gored skirt as well comes in for its share of this attractive trimming with a band heading the hem all round.

The pattern may be had in sizes 14 to 18 years. To make in size 16 you will need 5¼ yards of light and 1⅝ yards of dark material, using 36 inch goods, or 4⅝ yards of all one material.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

War to the End Against Church Union

Presbyterian Anti-Union Faction Declares Its Stand

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, Man., June 15.—"War to the bitter end" against Church union was declared at noon to-day by the Presbyterian anti unionist faction.

Rev. Dr. Campbell, after the meeting of the anti-Unionists, announced they would carry the fight into all the courts and to Parliament. He asserted that they would take the women of the Church into their plans, establish central offices at various points, and conduct an organized fight to retain control of all property of the Presbyterian Church.

Campbell asserted that the Commissioners who had voted for union had resigned from the Church by their action and had cut themselves off from all property rights of the Church.

Each provincial committee will enzage legal advice to fight legislation that is necessary to consummate the union.

A general mass meeting of the Presbyterian anti Unionists will be held in Toronto in September.

After their separate meeting the "Antis" took their places in the general assembly and continued to take part in the deliberations under protest.

As for the General Assembly, it went on to-day with other business, taking the view that the Union question was now a closed book.

TWO YEARS IN THE CENTRAL PRISON FOR WM. ROSE

Accused Pleaded Guilty to a Charge of Stealing a Purse Containing Twenty-nine Dollars From Matthew Galvin

HAS A RECORD

Two years, less one day in the Central Prison, was the sentence meted out this morning to William Rose. The latter pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing a purse containing twenty-nine dollars, from Matthew Galvin. It is about three weeks since Rose was released from prison, having completed a sentence imposed by His Honour Judge Huycke. Rose has an unsavory record, ranging from theft to indecent assault.

"The best interests of the community will be served by locking you up" remarked Magistrate Dumble.

After stealing the money from Galvin the accused went to a clothing store and purchased a raincoat. The $10 bill used in the purchase of the coat was recovered by the police.

Crown Attorney Hatton, who appeared for the prosecution, said that the evidence indicated a deliberate attempt to steal.

REID'S TWO DAYS' GARMENT SALE

Ladies, it would be unwise to overlook the very special offerings at the Reid Company's Store to-morrow and Saturday. It seems the cool, wet weather has had a deterring effect on regular sales the past week, and summer coats, suits, skirts, raincoats etc., which should have found ready buyers a month ago, are not moving as they should. The reductions, in some cases, of a half, have to be made, to replace them with newer garments coming in.

MORE RECRUITS FOR ARMY SERVICE CORPS TO ENROLL TO-NIGHT

Lieut. Lennox Will Be at the Recruiting Rooms to Sign On More Peterborough Men---Five More Recruits Secured For 93rd---Six Battalions to Be Moved From Kingston ---Gossip From Barriefield Camp and General Military News.

All local men medically unfit for the firing line who wish an opportunity to do their bit in khaki should visit the recruiting rooms, corner of George and Hunter streets, to-night, when Lieut. Lennox of the Canadian Army Service Corps, will be on hand to enrol recruits for that unit. Lieut. Lennox took a party of twenty-one Peterborough men to Barriefield yesterday and another draft will leave to-morrow morning. In addition to those who left yesterday some fifteen others have already signed up, and it is expected that this number will be augmented considerably to-night. This may be the last chance to get into the Army Service Corps, so that all who wish to join should report to Lieut. Lennox to-night.

According to the field state of Barriefield camp the 109th Battalion of Lindsay is carrying 64 officers on its strength, compared to 35 carried by the 93rd. With the normal number of officers the 109th would have exactly the same strength as the 93rd.

In spite of the competition from other units and the absence of any special recruiting campaign, Lieut. J. Ketchum and the recruiting staff of the 93rd Battalion are still doing good work. While according to the Kingston Whig recruiting is at a standstill in some centres, this cannot be said of Peterborough. Within the past couple of weeks fifteen men have signed up for the Army Medical Corps, fourteen for the 74th Battery, twenty-five for the 93rd Battalion, already about twenty-five for the Army Service Corps and a dozen or so with the Cobourg Heavy Battery and the 235th at Bowmanville, making a total of well over 100 Peterborough recruits in about two weeks. Yesterday and this morning five more recruits were signed up for the 93rd Battalion and a good sized draft of recruits for the Peterborough battalion are now in readiness to go Barriefield.

The latest additions to the 93rd are:
Robert Batley, 521 Chamberlain St.
Chas. Hunt, 582 Rogers St.
Thos. Hunter, 568 Chamberlain St.
Herbert Ireland, Hall's Bridge
Geo. D. Chiles, Georgina Island.

Among the recruits who joined the 93rd Battalion yesterday, was Mr. Chas. Hunt, foreman with the Review Printing Co. Mr. Hunt was a member of the Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto, for some time and will be a valuable acquisition to the 93rd.

The Kingston Standard says: Lieut. Col. Johnston of the 93rd Battalion, returned from Peterborough yesterday and reports great interest in the battalion in that town. A large tent 50 x 100 feet has been purchased by the ladies of Peterborough, and others have donated $100 for the purchase of tables for the tent. This will give the 93rd Battalion a messing tent large enough to accommodate the entire battalion, as well as a good recreation tent. The 93rd Battalion has a physical drill squad which would be very difficult to beat. All the men in this squad are equipped with white sweaters, and take an intense interest in their specialty.

BARRIEFIELD NEWS.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP, June 14.—(Special correspondence to the Examiner).—The 93rd Battalion is now engaged in a very important branch of their training, i.e., musketry. 'A' Company has been out on the ranges this week and has done some very good work. Other Companies will follow in turn.

For 'A' Company No. 195804, Pte. L. Johnson, receives 1st prize with a score of 160 out of a possible 200. No. 195028, Pte. C. Bennett, won 2nd prize, with a score of 167 out of a possible 200.

Co. Sergeant Maj. Hartshorne finished third with a score of 165.

The special prize for individual shooting was awarded to Co. Sergt Maj. Hartshorne, for a score of 89 out of a possible 40.

'A' COMPANY LOST.

A football match between 'A' Company and a mixed team from B. & C. Company by 2 goals to 1.

'C' Company losing the toss, Sergt Jay kicked off for 'A' Company. Stockdale came into possession of the ball, and, taking a long chance, scored the first goal for 'A' Company, a few minutes after the start.

From the kick-off Willshaw got away with a nice run, but shot wide when close in. From the goal kick McKinlay shot hard into goal; Kitchen, in trying to clear, conceded a corner, which the opposing backs had little difficulty in clearing. At this period 'A' Company were playing a fine game, but could not break through the defence. From a goal kick McKinlay made a run along the left wing, centering to Stockdale who shot hard into goal; Kitchen, in attempting to clear, conceded a corner which Sam Taylor cleared in his usual style. Spring, who, at this time was playing good ball, took a long chance, which just missed the goal from the goal kick; Norman getting possession, passed out to McKinlay on the left wing, who, beating the opposing backs, centered across the goal Morrison clearing in fine style. From the kick-off Crowe moved along the wing at a good pace, but shot wide. In clearing from the opposing forwards Norman kicked over his own line, Crowe placing the corner kick right in front of goal. Griffin, who was right up to form, cleared finely when hard pressed by the opposing forwards. The ball, at this time, was travelling backwards and forwards at a good pace. Sedkirk eventually got the ball and passed out to Harrison, who, over-running the ball, lost a splendid oppor-

Charged in a Downpour of Rain and Splendidly Supported by British Artillery Amply Repaid the Debt They Owed the Germans

PRISONERS WERE TAKEN

LONDON, Thursday, June 15.—The Canadians are still holding to the positions they recaptured from the Germans Tuesday near Zillebeke east of Ypres, although they have been heavily shelled by the Germans, according to an official communication issued at midnight. Since the Canadians won back their lost ground there have been no further infantry engagements in this region. During the day more prisoners were taken, chiefly wounded men, who were found during the clearing up of the ground. The total number taken is 161 men, including three officers. The German trenches on various points of their line between St. Eloi and Messines were bombarded.

RETOOK NEARLY ALL LOST GROUND.

Telegraphing from British headquarters in France under date of June 14, Frederick Palmer says:

"The operations in the vicinity of Ypres have passed into a new and, for the British, a most satisfactory stage. The Canadians yesterday retook the greater part of the ground lost on June 2, including the Armagh wood and Observatory ridge, and the British front line has returned to its original position. The German losses were large and the latest report show about 150 prisoners, including four officers, in British hands.

"The attack began at 2 a.m., the ground was quickly gained, and by noon the situation was comparatively quiet. The Germans apparently did not anticipate so speedy and determined a counter-attack, and abundant evidence was found of the destructive effects of the British artillery fire, which had quite prevented them from properly consolidating the position during their occupation of the disputed ground. Whether the British shall choose to hold the old line, now almost destroyed, cannot be said, but it seems assured that the option now rests with them. At any rate, the operation was a most gallant and successful incident, in which the Canadians amply repaid any debt they owed the Germans. The outcome has caused great rejoicing in the ranks of the Canadians.

CHARGED IN THE RAIN.

"It was after two weeks of the most unseasonable cold, rainy weather known to the oldest inhabitants of this region, making the low ground around the Ypres salient a morass, that the Canadians charged in the midst of a downpour at 1.30 o'clock in the morning, and recovered Observatory ridge and Mount Sorrel, important high ground which was still held by the Germans after the first stage of the third Battle of Ypres on June 2-3. So heavy and continuous had been the British artillery fire on the Germans vainly trying to fortify Mount Sorrel during their ten days' occupation that they had been unable to remove the munitions and food stores left there.

"We were delighted with the way the guns supported us," say the Canadians. "They gave the Germans a taste of their own Verdun tactics. We are getting Lloyd George's munitions now, all right."

"A German officer who was taken prisoner paid tribute to the increased power of the British artillery."

2ND BATTALION CONGRATULATED BY SIR DOUGLAS HAIG

Eastern Ontario Unit Commended For Brilliant Stand on April 26th ---Pte. Kendrey's Vivid Description of the Fight

A TERRIFIC BOMBARDMENT

Pte. Roscoe Kendrey, one of the few Peterborough boys who left Canada with the 2nd Battalion, still on duty with that unit, writes to his mother, Mrs. T. E. Kendrey, 859 Water street, as follows:

My Dear Mother,—Your welcome letter received all O.K. a few days ago and so very glad to hear from you again. Also received two last night from Helen and Grace and will try and answer soon. Was glad that all at home are enjoying good health and hope it may continue to be that way.

To-day is very warm and everything beginning to look more like summer. Am feeling O.K. now. Intended writing you a few lines a couple of days ago to let you know that I had come through recent events all safe and consider myself extra lucky. Hope you'll receive this before the casualty list is printed and save you the worry. It was in this way. When we went to the trenches the last time it was not hard to see that there was going to be something doing and Fritz and company seemed restless. However we were on the alert all the time (day and night) and it was just a case of watching, watching and wondering when it would come off and in what form. The wind was in his favour an naturally it might come in the form of gas. But that evening early, when things became very quiet, (too quiet, like the calm before the storm) there was a fierce explosion and the earth rocked, and almost a minute after shells of all calibres, aerial torpedoes, grenades, etc., were showered into and at our trench. Our artillery retaliated in grand shape and had the best (far the best) of the argument all the way through. It was not safe to stay in the dugouts as they were being crumped up and flattened out like paper and their occupants buried alive. One can't describe the vividness of it all. All the way down the parapet was being blown up and crashed in, but the boys stuck fast and would not budge an inch. Three or four would get buried, but others would dig them out. Finally a few of Fritz and company felt that our trench was pulverized and nothing living in it, his artillery fire eased up and he started over to finish up what was left, but was met by a withering fire from rifles, machine guns, etc., and each of us had a good supply of bombs if he got to an effective distance. But when he retreated one could count their few survivors on your fingers. I was talking to an officer of a famous English battery in our trench the next day and he said that bombardment was the worst in the history of the world as it was on such a small front. It is stated on good authority that shells actually met in the air. Had one rather narrow escape when things were proceeding merrily. Four of us were hugging the parapet and watching the "big

EAT MORE FRUIT.

The Grand Trunk railway has led the campaign of safety first, and has impressed the lesson so well upon its employees that during the past month not a single fatal accident has happened on its wide-spread system. And it is to be hoped the Grand Trunk will make a "go" of the new campaign it has undertaken in the interests of greater consumption of Canadian fruit. This is an admirable ambition and will tend to help an industry in which it is stated we have about 140 million dollars invested. But in this would we always find a "fly in the ointment." When we want to enrich ourselves, and promote our health by consuming more fruit, we find ourselves faced by a price of sugar that is prohibitive of unrestricted indulgence of our appetite for fruit. We can't always eat fresh fruit, and even for that we need a good deal of sugar; and sugar is an absolute essential in the preservation of fruit for future use. But withal we can be patriotic, as well as improved in health by larger consumption of Canadian fruit. It would seem to be easy to enlarge the fruit menu of our dietary, when we consider—with long drawn sighs—the high price of meats, in respect of which, if the physique of the animals concerned corresponded to the price, a bacon hog would become a giraffe and a spring lamb an elephant.

NEWSPAPER WORK.

The sole function of newspapers is not amassing money and converting the common clay of the editor into a Croesus. Newspapers sometimes do a little stroke of patriotic work—bring about a national benefit. A few years ago the Montreal Herald let journalistic daylight in upon, or down upon, a real estate deal in Montreal, in which favoured—of the right party colour—real estate manipulators tried to saddle on the government a property, the Carslake Hotel site, at an outrageously extravagant price, a good deal more than three times its legitimate value. The Herald so industriously stirred up the matter, and so fully gave out the truth, that the Government was forced to refer the subject to an impartial judicial tribunal, and the Supreme Court of Canada, after investigation, has unanimously agreed that the real estate manipulators will be well paid if they recive $288,000 for a property they would, if it had not been prevented by exposure of the game, have unloaded on the Government at $718,000. Here we have a clear saving to the favourite formula of comclearly made by the enterprising interposition of a wide-awake newspaper—one little act, "worth," according to the favourite formulae of commendation, "far more than the price of subscription." A newspaper, sanely edited, and honourably conducted and directed, can be, as thousands of Canadian journals are, a real, beneficent, good influence and force in the community and country.

CHANGE OURSELVES.

The daylight saving scheme, whatever merit it has, is a failure and a cause of infinite confusion where it is adopted by restricted and isolated localities, in towns and cities. In these places we have the clocks indicating one hour, while railway trains and trolley lines are run by clocks indicating another hour. This leads to endless confusion and disappointment and muddle. If the world generally felt it an advantage to rise an hour earlier and go to bed accordingly, there would be a general adoption of the daylight saving plan without any planning. When we try to regulate trade and the habits of the people by laws and by-laws, we encroach upon the German plan of the government thinking and acting for the people in matters where the British idea of liberty is to let the people think and speak and act for themselves, provided they do not, in so doing, interfere with the similar rights of others. Daylightsaving might work well if it were of nation-wide adoption, and even then, it would take some time to adjust things satisfactorily. The best way of saving daylight is to make use of the daylight we have—carry out in our daily lives the spirit of the injunction to make hay while the sun shines. The problem of getting people up in the morning and into harness would solve itself if we could get people to go to bed in time. A good deal of the world wastes the hours that should be devoted to sleep, and physical and mental restoration, in gossip—harmful or harmless, as the case may be—in social, and other and more evil forms of dissipation and sleeps the bright hours of the morning away and awakes jaded, worn and unrefreshed and unfit for the duties of the day, a condition that would remain no matter how we manipulate the clocks. The old world has rolled along pretty smoothly without dislocation of the solar system and reform of the face of the clock. Change is not always reform or improvement. We are, most of us, always on the look out for some contrivance or arrangement, some outside assistance in doing the duties of our daily life, instead of getting the inspiration from within, from a quickened sense of duty and a higher sense of responsibility. It is, considered in large, ourselves that should be put ahead, not the hour hand of the clock.

How The Cossacks Do Their Good Work

Practically all the despatches recording the Russian offensive on the Austro-Hungarian frontier tells of the splendid work being done by the Russian Cossacks in routing and demoralising the enemy. As was the case when the Russians made a drive in this region before, it is recorded that the Cossacks have annihilated various units of the Austrian force. How do they do it? Undoubtedly by means of their traditional "lava" attacks. Germans and Austrians know this attack, and have many times tried to introduce it into their army, but without success. Their men and horses lack the agility which always distinguish the Cossacks.

Lieut.-Col. Roustam Bek, the well-known military writer, who has himself taken part in these Cossack attacks, says that when the news is received that a detachment of cavalry is approaching or ready to attack, an order to be ready for a lava is given at once by the commander. The leading sotnia (squadron) spreads out to right and left, and the others at full speed form up on either side of it in a semi-circle or a half-moon. Every man with a lance is attended by a man wearing a shashka, a Cossack's sword, and all the officers with the colonel at the head, are in front of the men of each sotnia. The other sotnias in the neighbourhood do not wait for a special order, and at once take up the same formation, endeavoring to surround the attacking force from another side. With loud shouts and calls the Cossacks rush down on their enemies, and even if this first assault is repulsed, another "lava" pours down on the shaken enemy and very often another surprises them in the rear. In the present day the Cossacks, besides lances and swords, also use hand grenades, which, if they do not cause very serious injuries serve to demoralize both horses and men.

As showing the terrible nature of these "lava" attacks, it is a matter of record that during the campaigns of Napoleon in Hungary in 1879 or in Turkey, as well as in Turkestan, the "lava" was always very successful, and created a panic among the cavalry of the enemy. The Japanese faced this terrible attack only once, and after that did not stop to meet it any more. It was on May 31, 1905, near the station of Vafangon, in South Manchuria, that three squadrons of Japanese were annihilated by the "lava" of the 8th Siberian Cossacks. No single Japanese escaped, and not one was taken prisoner. It is satisfactory to know that by the breaking of the Austrian-Hungarian lines, the extremely mobile and useful Cossacks once again have full play for their special mode of warfare.

Eat More Canadian Fruit

OTTAWA, June 12.—Owing to certain trade restrictions the export trade of Canada in 1916 is expected to be limited. This will mean that there will have to be an increased consumption of fruit in Canada, and the Canadian Government, through the Fruit Commissioner's Office of the Department of Agriculture, are endeavouring to interest all Canadians to aid one of our most important national industries. The Grand Trunk system, through the medium of their dining cars and hotels are co-operating with the Government to this end, and on June 24th, will be started a campaign to educate Canadians to follow the slogan "Eat More Canadian Fruit," this slogan being shown on all menu cards used by the Grand Trunk on their cars and in their hotels, and by calling attention to the Canadian fruits on these menus.

There is a capital of approximately $160,000,000 invested in the Canadian fruit industry, the Niagara Peninsular, the greatest fruit district in Canada, producing 95 per cent. of the Canadian grapes, and 96 per cent. of our home-grown peaches. Pears, plums, cherries and small fruits are also grown extensively. Approximately 3,750 carloads of Ontario apples were marketed during the past season; of this shipment 65 per cent were carried over the Grand Trunk lines.

Meaning of the Meredith-Duff Investigating Commission

The hearing of evidence and argument of the Meredith-Duff Commission has been concluded. The report of that body will be awaited with more than ordinary interest. It is seldom that any investigation in Canada has created the interest which this one has. The reason for this was obvious. The fate of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and incidentally of the whole Government have hung in the balance as a consequence of the result. No case in this country has been more fully reported than has this one in the press generally, so that the people have been made acquainted pretty generally with the broad lines of the investigation. The statement made by Mr. Kyte, M.P. for Richmond, N.S., in the House was not a charge against a fellow member in the parliamentary sense. If it had been it would have been referred to a select committee of members of the house and the member making the charge, if he had failed to substantiate it, would have forfeited his seat. That was quite well understood by the Premier and admitted by him when, instead of referring the matter to a committee, he took upon himself the reference to a Royal Commission.

This commission comprised two of the leading jurists of the country, who had the assistance of the pick of the legal luminaries of the land.

The commissioners were not charged merely with enquiring into the personal honesty of the Minister of Militia and of the members of the Shell Committee appointed by him, as well as other officials and persons connected with the transaction, but with the general character of the whole business. Evidently Great Britain had entrusted to the Minister of Militia of Canada, not to Sir Sam in his personal capacity, a certain trust, the securing of ammunition which it needed at an acute stage.

The mission of trust, had, in all honour for Canada, to be discharged in an honourable and businesslike manner. The commission will have to say, in the evidence adduced, if this trust was properly executed by Sir Sam and the shell committee appointed by him, and if in selecting Col. J. Wesley Allison, as he did, and under the circumstances which he did and becoming sponsor for him, he did discharge that trust in the manner expected of him. This trust meant the assumming of obligations by him towards the war office, that is Great Britain, the Canadian Government of which he was a member and the Canadian people whose representative he is along with his colleagues, who are responsible for his conduct. The Borden Government, in a constitutional sense, are responsible for everything that has been rightfully and wrongfully done in this matter by all the agents and agencies which participated in the matter from the highest to the lowest. The commission will have to declare if the Government and all of its members are free of all blame in this matter.

Special credit and the thanks of the ratepayers of Canada and incidentally of Great Britain are due to Mr. F. D. Carvell, M.P., who had the prosecution of the investigation in hand along with Mr. Johnson. Within the limited scope that was allowed them by the terms of the order-in-council appointing the commission these gentlemen have brought out evidence which has certainly startled the country, and which would have opened the eyes of the war office.

Through respect of the commission it is only right and proper to await for their finding without further commenting on the evidence adduced.—Hon. Charles Marat in Montreal Herald.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

Acocunt of the Life and Work of Dr. Tassie, a Former Principal of Peterborough Collegiate Institute

Late Dr. Tassie Was a Unique Figure in the Educational World---He Possessed an Unrivalled Reputation---Was in His Prime About Fifty Years Ago When the Educational Ideals of That Age Were Radically Different From Those Which Prevail Now---His Standard of Discipline.

Fourteen years ago, in the summer of 1902, there gathered in the town, now the city of Galt, a company unique in the history of Canada. The town was in holiday attire, and its homes were thrown wide open to entertain the many guests who came not from the neighborhood alone, but from the distant Yukon, from all parts of Canada and from the United States—men of all ranks and classes, young men middle aged, and those whose heads were white with the snows of many winters. They came not to declare their affection for the town, nor even to celebrate the jubilee of the Galt Collegiate Institute—the ostensible cause of the gathering—but chiefly to pay honor to the memory of a teacher, William Tassie, who for 28 years had been the head of this school. Everything was forgotten in the desire that their tribute to the great master should be fitting and worthy.

My task to-day is to give some account of his life and work, by no means an easy task. For, in spite of the fact that he had an unrivalled reputation in his day the life of such a teacher is necessarily monotonous. It is without stirring incident and one day is pretty much like another. Then the educational ideals of his age—he was in his prime just fifty years ago—are radically different from those which prevail now. We are apt to judge the teachers of the past by our standard, and are in danger of being unjust to them. It is well to remember the principle in all historical study, that one age may judge another age, but only his own age may judge the individual. In our estimate of those of a former time we should strive to be generous, for then we are not likely to miss the value of that past in making the present complete.

In 1853 William Tassie came to Galt as headmaster of the Grammar School that had been founded just a year before. To tell the truth, he was not head over any other teacher. He was the sole instructor and there were but seven or eight pupils. Of his early life and training I know but little; he was singularly reticent about these years. It is known, however, that he was born and brought up in Ireland, that he was married at a very early age, and being without means had come to Canada and taken up the profession of teaching. For this he had no professional training, and was equipped only with the ideals and methods that existed at the time, particularly in the old land. But so successful was he in his chosen calling that in a few years his school enjoyed not only a national but a continental reputation.

Recalling the three years I spent there as a pupil, I think of boys from Mississippi and Alabama, from New York and Ohio, from Chicago, Detroit and other cities of the United States. I remember boys who came from every Province of the Dominion of Canada, and almost every large centre in these provinces, some of them bearing names well known in the public and professional life of the land—such names as Tupper, Blake and Mowat; Osler, Moss and Keefer; Cronyn, Macbeth and Carling; Boulton, Cayley and Galt. In fact, it was not a local school; it drew eighty per cent. of its pupils from beyond the limits of the community in which it was situated. There was a standing feud and many a pitched battle fought between the town boys and the "Tassie Apes," as they were called. Upper Canada College, with all the advantage of a public endowment, was the only rival in attracting students from afar, and probably for many years Galt had the pre-eminence.

A REMARKABLE PERSONALITY.

What explanation can be given of the outstanding position the school enjoyed in the educational world of that day?

First of all, and above all, it was due to the remarkable personality of Dr. Tassie. A true Celt, trained in that land which in the early Middle Ages was called "the University of the West," he brought to his work not only his distinctive racial characteristics, but unusual physical strength and, so far as I can judge at this distance of time, great intellectual strength. He rose at four o'clock in the morning, and the hours that followed until eleven at night were fully occupied with the duties of his position. He denied himself all social life, his one passion was his school. None but a very strong man physically could have endured the strain. Bodily health and vigor are always important factors in the success of a teacher; they were essential to the success of the system with which Dr. Tassie identified himself. A delicate man, however high his mental endowments, would have been unequal to the task. None of his pupils can ever forget his stately presence, his dignified demeanor, his firm and manly tread. To see him as he walked along the street, holding his cane lightly in the middle, with the easy grace of one who was conscious of his position and authority, was to know that here was no ordinary man.

But back of that physical grace and strength was the man, with his high sense of justice, his industry, his thoroughness, his conscientiousness, his absence of all that belongs to the spy. He had the genius that comes from boldness in making decisions and in following what he thought he could do to the end. Perhaps the outstanding feature of his character that impressed us was force—physical and intellectual. He was an autocrat in everything over which he had control. He demanded of his boys truth, thoroughness, industry, perseverance, manliness. These were qualities that he possessed himself, and though his pupils stood in awe of him and few loved him, he did not fail to impress the same qualities upon hundreds who were educated under his direction. Scores of men who were once Tassie boys have spoken to me of their school days, and I have yet to hear one who was not impressed by the strength of his character and grateful for its influence. The power of a great personality, though it had many limitations, was the great explanation of the success of William Tassie's school.

A BOYS' SCHOOL.

But in addition to this, account must be taken of the type of school he established—a type attractive to the parents who sent their sons there—a type, however, that seems impossible in the educational system of our time.

When Tassie took up his great life work in Galt, he decided—in spite of a wretched equipment and a mere handful of scholars—to make an experiment that had never been attempted in Canada and perhaps nowhere in the English-speaking world. To an Ontario Grammar School he would strive to impart the character of one of the great public schools of England, such at Eton, or Rugby, or Marlborough. On the one hand it was a part of the educational system of the province, governed as any other Grammar School by trustees elected by the people, visited by government inspectors, supported by public funds, while its teachers must possess the qualifications demanded by the educational authorities. So far it did not stand apart from many another school, but what gave it a place all its own was the effort to follow the methods of the English public schools that have contributed so much to the national life of Great Britain.

In bringing this ideal into effect he found it necessary to introduce certain departures from the methods followed elsewhere.

His school must be open to boys alone, not to boys and girls. He could not hope that parents would send their boys away from the restraints of home if they were taught in the same classes as the girls. I doubt, too, whether Tassie's severity of discipline, though confined to one sex, would have been possible if the other had been present. It seems to have been his conviction, also, that the sexes could best be educated separately. There were certain traits of character—truth, courage, honor, manliness—that he imagined would not be so pronounced if co-education existed. On the other hand, it must be admitted that co-education is likely to cultivate virtues no less important. He despaired of no one. No boy was too idle or too mischievous to be taken on trial. Many a lad did he receive who had thrown off the control of parents and teachers alike. But it was always with the clear understanding that he must obey to the strict letter, and that any failure in obedience would be followed by a penalty, not so much to fit the offender as to fit the offence—a radical error in my judgment, in all disciplinary or punitive methods. These, then were the aims and the ideals that made it exclusively a boys' school.

That the trustees assented to it, shows how free a hand he had. For it was hardly fair to the girls in the town. The resources of Galt were not adequate to the support of two Grammar Schools of high grade. Consequently there was a Girls' School with a lady principal, a separate staff of teachers and altogether an equipment inferior to that of the other. The education they received was not on the same high level of their brothers and friends, and the assertion of their claim to something better was one of the reasons that brought about Dr. Tassie's retirement from Galt. But he was right in his view that such a school as he contemplated could not be carried on successfully under a system of co-education.

THE BOARDING HOUSE SYSTEM.

In the next place the boarding house system became necessary if pupils were to be drawn from a distance. Anxious parents had their minds set at rest by the knowledge that their sons, in school and out of school, were under the headmaster's eye. It was a tremendous burden to carry. But he undertook it, and did so on his own responsibility, asking only the moral support of the trustees, and requiring none of his assistants to give any part of their time to the work. Into his own house, one of the largest dwellings in town, were taken forty or fifty boys who were crowded together in a way that was good neither for their health nor their studies. Other houses not far from his own, were authorized, in each of which twenty or twenty-five pupils were accommodated. Gentlewomen were in charge of them, but Dr. Tassie was over all, visited them regularly and assured himself that all was done according to his own mind.

As I have said, his working-day began several hours before the boys were awake. By eight o'clock he had walked half a mile to the school and was ready to give special instruction to the matriculation class. The rest of the day, up to the tea hour, was spent in teaching and administration. Then in the evening the boys gathered for study around the dining table, while he sat at his desk in the corner. The hours of study were closed with family prayer and he retired. Then Mrs. Tassie appeared, the strain was relaxed and there was more of the atmosphere of a happy home. The last act of the day was when she passed through the rooms and turned out the lights, often carrying a box from which she handed a stick of candy to each as he lay in bed. Mrs. Tassie was the friend of all and held not only their respect but affection. If they were sick she nursed them, and for every ailment had some old-fashioned remedy to administer. She lives in the memory of the old boys as truly as her husband. Without a helpmeet such as she was, his boarding house must have been a failure. For many years before her death, it was the practice of one of these boys, now a Pittsburg manufacturer, to send her as a Christmas gift a cheque for $100. No wonder that when her husband died, leaving her in penury, the old boys purchased for her a substantial annuity to make her closing days comfortable.

Minor peculiarities of the school arrangements were the adoption of two short half-holidays each week—Wednesday and Saturday afternoons—instead of the full Saturday, and the prohibition of such games as baseball and lacrosse. Cricket and football were alone regarded as suitable for young gentlemen. And what was somewhat unusual in that day, physical training was emphasized. A good gymnasium was provided, and rifle and company drill was given under the instruction of a retired army officer.

HIS STANDARD OF DISCIPLINE

I have now to speak of the discipline that was enforced in the school. Nowhere is the contrast between the past and the present more marked than here. Yet the reputation of the school was due in no small measure to its discipline.

To begin, he acted on the principle that it was within his power to expel any pupil whose presence he deemed to be undesirable in the best interests of the school. It was not necessary that he give reasons for expelling a boy. Sometimes a definite charge could not be made, but he claimed absolute power to send any one away if it seemed to him best. And that authority was nowhere questioned. One day he found a boy reading a novel of an improper kind. He simply asked the boy where he had obtained it, and was told that it had been bought at one of the three book-stores in town. When the pupils assembled for morning prayers Dr. Tassie announced that hereafter any boy seen in this man's shop would be at once expelled. It was not necessary that he buy anything. His mere presence would be followed by that penalty. With one word he had cut off a large part of the man's trade but it was recognized that his right to do so was absolute.

Long experience had made him understand almost intuitively the faults of boys. Rarely did he make a mistake. At times he seemed swayed by prejudices, as when a boy with a constant smile on his face received his full meed of punishment on the general principle that a smile was meant to conceal evil within. But his seeming prejudices were more likely to be an unconscious inference from a wide experience.

The instrument of discipline, except in the two upper forms, was a liberal use of the strap. The punishment was the same, differing only in degree, for all kinds of offences. If a pupil failed to decline a Latin noun correctly he was strapped. If his handwriting was careless, if he was late in arriving at school, if he was guilty of some moral offence, he was flogged. His was a method that would not be tolerated in our day. And yet I am not prepared to condemn it entirely. Again let the old boys testify. Now that they are men, many of them advanced in life, they will not be found complaining of the harsh treatment meted out to them. Perhaps his way was unfair to the dull boy who was doing his best. And it did not recognize the fact that a few had special aptitudes, a touch of genius, and ought not to be forced into the common mould. But it was his aim to require only what the average boy could reasonably be expected to do, and then no excuse for failure to do one's part could be accepted. It may serve as an illustration of the length to which his discipline was carried if I relate an incident, recalled to me a short time ago by the delinquent himself. Like his brothers before him he was sent to Tassie's school. Arriving at the station he engaged a carter to take his trunk to the Doctor's house where he was to board, and rode with him on the waggon. The man put down the trunk at the side door, telling him that he was not allowed to go farther, and leaving the boy to carry the trunk alone up the stair leading to the rooms above. Half way up the trunk slipped and crashed to the bottom. Just as he was about to make the second effort a man opened the inner door, and without making any inquiry or uttering a word, flogged him. This was his introduction to Dr. Tassie. "Unjust," you say; "enough to crush the spirit of a high-minded boy." Surely it was unjust. Yet he reasoned that this boy must be taught to be careful even in such matters as lifting a trunk.

As to disputes among the boys, it was impossible that such should not come, and many a fight took place. I do not know what his views were, but there was a suspicion that he was not eager to interfere, that at such times he kept out of the way, believing that they could settle such quarrels best among themselves, and see that fair play was given. When the way was clear it was no unusual thing to see a ring formed and two boys contending with each other in orthodox fashion, but always with the understanding that they should be good friends again when the battle was over.

AS A TEACHER.

But I have yet to touch upon his work as a teacher. And Dr. Tassie's most ardent admirer. And Dr. Tassie's claim that any large part of the distinction he gained was due to his ability as a teacher, though he was not only principal but took his full share of the work of teaching. In his book, "My Inner Life," a very distinguished, in many respects the most distinguished, of the pupils of the school, Dr. Beattie Crosier, of London, England, has passed a somewhat severe judgment upon his failure to give the student any true appreciation of the literature he was studying. In certain respects Dr. Crosier's criticisms are valid. But Dr. Crosier is unjust to his memory in not recognizing his thoroughness, the mastery that he demanded of the principal parts of Latin and Greek grammar and of heathen mythology, and the grasp that was gained of an extensive vocabulary that did not easily slip from memory. The great defect of his method was that he required his pupils through all forms to get by heart what text books contained and to repeat it verbatim. There was no discussion of the matter of the lesson, no talking it over by pupils and teacher, no attempt to reach the boy's mind and help him to appreciate it. There was strength in his method when limited to the junior forms but it was weakness itself when carried higher.

It was when the school was at the meridian of its prosperity that the decline suddenly came. The Department of Education established yearly tests — the Intermediate Examinations. Dr. Tassie sent up many pupils, but only a few passed. At once the quality of the work done was questioned. Criticism applied at one point was soon extended to all. There was a demand for co-education. He could no longer enforce his discipline and in a very few years his reputation had vanished, and pupils no longer came from outside. When he resigned he founded a school in Toronto, and then became principal of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute. But there remained little of the Tassie of former days, and in 1886 he passed to his rest.

His was a life of severe toil, mingled with but little pleasure. He gave himself unreservedly to one thing, and his joy was in seeing his purpose fulfilled. If to some his career appears narrow and limited in influence, to others with a larger knowledge of those who were trained under his care he must always remain one of the strongest influence of his day in fashioning the future life of this land.

THE MORAL.

In setting down these impressions of Dr. Tassie and his school, I cannot refrain from yielding to what has become a habit with me, and pointing the moral. It is with mingled feelings that I consider his career as a whole. It had so much of strength, so much of weakness.

The power of a great personality has been already emphasized. But the true development of that personality was checked by the circumstances in which he found himself and of which he allowed himself to become the victim. The multitude of the tasks that he undertook, many of them purely routine, gave him no time to think, to study or to read. As the years passed he seems to have lost the desire, perhaps even the power, of adding to past attainments. The older pupils began to suspect that he was not a highly educated man in any department, and when his forcefulness declined, as was inevitable, there was no gain to match in the growth of knowledge and intellectual power. The man was injured in the very means he employed to reach his height of distinction, and when he gained it, it was because he had been unjust to himself that his fall was so sudden. In one way I cannot but admire him with his back to the wall, refusing to admit the new situations created by yearly examinations, declaring that his school existed to impart a good education and a strong character, but with a different mental life I have little doubt that he would have adapted himself to the new conditions and have maintained the prestige of the school.

The longer I teach the more am I convinced of the necessity of the teacher reading and studying beyond what the class work demands, if he is to maintain his own interest or quicken the interest of his students. The circle of his knowledge must extend, at least in some one department, far beyond text books and manuals. I have the most vivid impression to-day of the teacher of history at Galt—W. Chase, who is happily with us still—and the manner he introduced us to J. R. Greens' History of England that had just appeared. Never before had had the history of England been written like this. Soon the enthusiasm of the teacher was shared by us and we were reading it with the interest of a romance. Now if the teacher is to save his own soul, he must read, and read the great works upon the subjects in which he chooses to specialize.

May I be allowed to utter another warning from the story of his life. Dr. Tassie died very poor. And yet he must have enjoyed a large income from his salary and boarding house. But he knew not how to save. Now the position of a teacher—especially a high school teacher—is such that much is expected of him. But salaries are small, and unless he is careful he is not likely to increase his bank account. Is it all the more important that he should practice economy, and that he should be not niggardly but thrifty. I do not know a more pitiable sight than that of a minister or teacher retired from active work but dependant for subsistence upon the gifts of relatives or friends. Pension funds are so far good, but they cannot make up for personal savings.

Tobacco Heart
CURED BY
Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Tobacco does not seem to affect all alike. Many men enjoy their smoke, live to a good old age, and apparently suffer no ill effects from the use of the weed.

There are others, though, on whose heart and nervous system tobacco produces the most serious results.

It causes palpitation, pain in the heart and irregularity of its beat, makes the hands tremble, sets the nerves on edge, and the breath becomes short.

To counteract this demoralizing influence on the heart and nerves there is no remedy that equals Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

They make the heart beat strong and steady, restore tone and vigor to the nerves, and remove all the evil results caused by the tobacco.

Mr. Nelson Young, Brampton, Ont., writes: "I have had, up to about a month ago, a very weak heart, which I suppose came from smoking cigarettes. When I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as a cure, I immediately gave up smoking, and started using them. It does you justice to be the founder of such a great remedy. They made me feel like a new man."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

BUYS A RIFLE AND SETS OUT TO "GET" STRATFORD CITIZENS

Anthony Scully Overpowered After Pounding Man—Mind to be Examined

Imagined That He and Those He Was Laying for Caused War.

STRATFORD, June 15.—Labouring under the hallucination that he, with other prominent citizens were responsible for the war and could stop it if they wanted to, Anthony Scully of this city, purchased a .32 calibre rifle and set out to "get" M. J. Dillon, Police Magistrate J. J. Coughlin and other prominent citizens. He was overpowered after he had assaulted the former and was remanded to jail pending an examination of his mental condition.

When arrested Scully had in his possession a .32 calibre rifle, with which he struck Mr. Dillon twice across the head, inflicting a nasty scalp wound. He had purchased the rifle during the afternoon he said, and went down along the river and tried it out. He then went down on Erie street and waited for Mr. Dillon, having the rifle wrapped in paper. When Mr. Dillon passed on his way home, Scully struck him twice over the head before he was over-powered.

The rifle was loaded at the time but fortunately did not go off. Scully had upwards of 100 shells on his person, quite a number of which were loose and handy for use, in his coat pocket.

Very Effective Method For Banishing Hairs

(Modes of To-day.)

At very little cost any women can rid her face of hairy growths, if she will use the delatone treatment. This is made by mixing some water with a little powered delatone. This paste is spread upon the hairy surface for 2 or 3 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed, when every trace of hair will have vanished. No harm results from this treatment, but care should be used to buy real delatone.

Bothwell Man is Instantly Killed On Crossing—Inquest is to be Held

George McMasters, Liveryman, Meets Terrible Death East of Town.

CHATHAM, June 15.—Not noticing the approach of a westbound Wabash train on the Grand Trunk tracks east of Bothwell, George McMasters, a well-known resident of that town, drove his automobile directly in front of the express and his life was crushed out beneath the wheels of the cars.

According to information reaching Chatham, McMasters was killed instantly. The body was badly cut up.

Dr. Graham of Bothwell was called, and he later notified Coroner Dr. Stewart of Thamesville, who will hold an inquest.

Mr. McMaster conducted a livery stable in Bothwell. He was 32 years of age and is survived by a widow and two children.

BRUSSILOFF KEPT SECRET WELL OFFENSIVE PLANNED BY ALLIES

Austrians, Although But Two Miles From Russ. Line. Never Suspected Big Preparations

HUGE RESERVES OF YOUNG RUSSIAN TROOPS WERE IN READINESS FOR OPEN FIGHTING.

LONDON, June 15—A Petrograd despatch to the Daily News says: The preparations for launching Brussiloff's great offensive will be remembered as one of the best kept secrets in military history. Here were two armies at close grips, from twenty to thirty yards apart in some places, and never separated for more than two miles, and yet one of these armies was in complete ignorance of the death blow which the other spent months preparing.

The Austrians believed in the weakness of the Russian artillery, as well as in the impregnability of their own front line. The final attack swept them off their feet. A correspondent met on the road near the front 6,000 prisoners headed by a small, wretched group without trousers, their only clothing being forage caps and shirts. These were Austrian officers captured sleeping in the second line trenches, and were actually attacked from the rear.

ALLIES WORKING TOGETHER

A despatch to the Daily Chronicle from Petrograd says: I find that the opinion entertained here is that Gen. Brussiloff's advance is the first notable result of the co-ordination of the allies' war plans, of which Brussiloff spoke to me last month. The sector upon which chief progress has been made is on the Kovel-Rovno line, where Gen. Puchaloff commanded the 4th Austrian army, with headquarters at Lutsk. This army was depleted lately by two army corps, sent to the Italian front, hence this sudden movement which Brussiloff forecast when he told me: "The allies have a programme which will be adhered to."

THREE BATTLE CENTRES

The fighting was most intense at three points: The Kovel-Rovno sector, in the neighbourhood of Tarnopol and along the Stripa. The first of these is in the region called Poliessie, where the armies were brought to a standatill last Autumn, in the terrible forest marshes and practically uninhabitable country. Here the development of that state of continual preparedness which enabled Brussiloff to move at two days' notice involved the improvisation of a vast system of log roads over the morasses. It is a nightmare country, where the army lived on islands among still channels of black water, where the advanced positions were practically rafts stranded on mud banks and approachable over logs laid down across the depths.

BELGIANS TAKE PART

The fighting near Tarnopol was the most desperate on the whole front. Along the Sereth and between the hills are characteristically excellent Galician roads, bordered every few hundred yards by statues of the Madonna and Saints. They give special advantage to the dashing young Belgians in the armored car corps, who, after long waiting, eagerly seized this opportunity to justify themselves in the eyes of their Russian comrades.

STRONG POSITION

The significance of the movement on the Stripa lies in the fact that the victory involved the destruction of the strongest portion of the Austrian lines, where there was a mighty trench and wire system and also strong forces of artillery. This region is open country where the trenches generally are between 400 and 1,500 yards apart. The way to this front led through tremendous field fortifications extravagantly elaborated while aeroplane bird's eye photographs revealed that the whole position had been practically duplicated by the enemy.

PRODUCTION SHOULD BE AS GREAT AS EVER

Ottawa, June 14.—The Minister of Finance to-day expressed to the press his view that it was in the highest degree important that the agricultural production of Canada should be as great as possible this year, and that every effort should be made to that end by the community. Canada's ability to support the war rests upon her credit, and that credit both at home and abroad, depends in large measure upon our national production. "Sow, plant, raise, produce," should be the motto, in order that the Dominion's financial strength may be conserved to maintain and continue the war. The continuous rain which has in some districts prevented the sowing of the usual grains should not discourage the sowing and planting of such other grains and roots as can still be availed of.

"Every effort to increase the agricultural production of Canada at this time is a patriotic effort in the strictest sense of the term," in the opinion of the Minister.

Blue chairs and tables—even blue beds and dressers—are the moment's vogue, and the colour is a rich, clear blue, that demands blue and white, black and white or the palest buff as a background.

Y. M. C. A. Work Among The Soldiers At Barriefield Camp

The Kingston Whig says: The National Council of the Y.M.C.A. realizes that a soldier besides being prepared to meet the Germans on the battlefield must also be prepared to meet his God.

To aid him in this preparation at Barriefield camp the National Council has assigned E. R. Wilson, General Secretary of the London Y.M.C.A., and a very large staff.

To accomplish their work the Y.M.C.A. men realise that they must meet the men from two angles. They must furnish a place where a man can get refreshments and where he can sit down and write letters to his home, and also wants to attend to religious services during the evenings. When a Whig representative paid a visit to the camp he was very much surprised at the great work being carried on by Mr. Wilson and his staff. The first large tent the Whig man visited was where the services were carried on, each evening under the direction of Messrs. Mains, McCullough, Hudson and Keeling. Here there is seating accommodation for at least six hundred. On many occasions there have been as many as a couple of thousand soldiers gathered around the tent to hear the gospel message.

The outstanding feature is the singing conducted under the direction of Reg. Hudson. Although Mr. Hudson was the organist of Christ church, London, he thought that his place was in camp helping the soldiers to sing. Since coming he has been a great favourite with the men. He is arranging for numerous programmes to be put on in the large tent. During the spare hours of the day he makes a visit to the different tents in the camp for the purpose of finding as many musicians as possible to help. Up to the present time he has located many men who would not have been brought to the front had it not been for his endeavours.

The second tent visited, the Whig man found hundreds of soldiers writing letters and learned that as many as six thousand letters have been written in the "Y" tent or on "Y" writing paper in one day.

The "Y" authorities sell as many as $100 worth of postage stamps a day.

In the third tent he found Mr. Fletcher of Keene, selling postage stamps, socks, putties, mirrors, shaving brushes, shaving soap, towels, canned articles such as sardine, salmon and pork and beans, and many other things including the Daily British Whig.

The busiest place is the large canteen which is kept open from early morning until the men "crawl in" for the night. The canteen is closed during parade hours. It is simply wonderful the amount of ice cream cones, pie, soft drinks and milk sold over this counter. Mr. Wilson has experienced considerable difficulty in getting suitable men to wait on the counter. When the Daughters of the Empire heard of his difficulty they offered to furnish six ladies each day. The ladies come over at four o'clock and return to the city not later than 9.45 o'clock. The ladies are very glad that they can be of such assistance.

Before soldiers can purchase anything at the "Y" tents he must purchase tickets from the cashier. Things are so arranged that every cent is accounted for.

Ques.: "What does your pay-roll amount to?"

Ans.: "Oh, say $10,000 a month."

Ques.: "Quite a wad. Of course you insure it?"

Ans.: "Insure it? What's the idea Frank?"

Ques.: "Well—you see, you're paying out $120,000 a year. Now you insure your building, equipment, stock, etc., why not insure your pay-roll, against loss—to you."

Ans.: "Ask me something easy. What's the point and what's the cost?"

Ques.: "The point is that your pay-roll represents your purchase of the greatest of all raw materials—WORKING TIME. Its subject to loss every day—four times a day—or every time your employees come in and go out of your plant."

Ans.: "Yes, but I employ a time-keeper."

Ques.: "Of course you do. But he's human. Who checks your time-keeper? And who checks the man who checks him? You need a cold-blooded machine for that job—as there will be no favorites or no mistakes."

Ans.: "There isn't any such machine."

Ques.: "Isn't there? Probably your nearest competitor to-day is using it and is just that much ahead of you. And it will cost you perhaps $3 a month to use it. I mean the International Time Recorder. It's the cheapest and best pay-roll insurance you can buy. Gives you printed, unchangeable, records, made under lock and key, that become your weekly pay-sheets. If you want real, inside facts and figures on the system exactly suited to your business write International Time Recording Co., corner McGill and Notre Dame streets, Montreal, or to their Head Office, Anderson Street, Toronto, for latest folders and prices."

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Whilst walking along George street yesterday I was greatly cheered to see the bunch of men marching away to entrain to Kingston to join the C.A.S.C. but I was disgusted to see so many young men around the street in civilian attire. I think those men who have joined the C.A.S.C. deserve the very greatest credit. Many of them were veterans of past wars and some of them had been partly crippled for the Empire, and yet they were willing to again try to do a bit for their country. I wonder what some of the young men of Peterborough think of it? Men unfit for the firing line enlisting for the purpose of helping the Empire in its time of need, whilst many hundreds of fit young fellows are skulking at home and spending their earnings in the Pool Rooms and Picture shows. I would be prouder to be mother of one of the unfit men than to be mother of the skulker.

I remain,
Yours truly,
A MOTHER

Editor Examiner:—

Dear Sir.—I was a very interested spectator of a game of lacrosse at Riverside Park yesterday evening, and whilst I could not help admiring the very athletic qualities of the players, I could not help but wonder if it would not be more to their credit if they had been engaged in the more manly game of fighting for the women and children of their country on the battle fields of Europe. To see such fine specimens of manhood engaged in such a paltry game whilst our own Battalion (the 93rd) are striving to get recruits, is to say the least, very disheartening to any lover of his country. I hope that before long they will see their way to join in the more manly game, and not earn the contempt of all men and women with red blood in their veins, I am

LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY

Rushing the Season's Work—Preparations For Decoration Day on Sunday

Superintendent Wise of the Little Lake cemetery, has had his hands fuller than usual this season. In addition to the large amount of general routine work in spring, the repeated rainfalls have kept his men on their mowers almost constantly cutting the grass. Yesterday nine mowers were hard at work, and the amount of cutting ahead of them looked as if they could be kept busy cutting the rest of the week.

The cemetery roads never were in so perfect a condition. The new grading has put them in excellent state, clear of weeds and rubbish.

About 700 flower stands and vases are all ready for placing at the graves. Many of the flower beds are planted and well advanced and the various floral decorations are putting on their June bloom and rich foliage all over the grounds.

The large ornamental beds at the entrance to the cemetery are in full bloom, and the hedges prettily trimmed and shaped. The greenhouse men are busy sending in their customers' orders, to be ready for Decoration Day next Sunday, and it is expected that large additions will be made by lot owners between now and Sunday in decorating their lots.

Pte. Lorne Campbell Shot While a Sentry

Mrs. Lorne P. Campbell, 26 Ware Street, has received encouraging letters from her husband, Pte. L. P. Campbell, who left with the 8th C. M. R. and was wounded at the front some weeks ago, and also from Lieut. John Walker of the C.M.R. and a hospital visitor. T. Clode. Pte. Campbell wrote as follows, under date of May 23rd:

Dear Wife,—I am just sending this to let you know I am still in the land of the living; although I came near going out. I am thankful for God's goodness and your prayers. I got a very serious cut on the head, although I think the worst is over, as I have had my operation and am at present on the upward mend and am beginning to feel quite strong.

I got hurt on the night of the 16th, and am at present in a clearing hospital, so there is no use in writing. Don't send back, or worry, till I send another. It shall be shortly. As far as being used right, they use a person as well as can be and better way than you could have at home.

Lieut. Walker wrote Mrs. Campbell that Lorne was hit while doing sentry duty in the front line of trenches. He was standing on the firing step when a bullet grazed the top of his head, inflicting a long scalp wound. He remained conscious and cheerful, and I have every hope for his complete recovery. He was in the platoon under my command. As his officer and on behalf of his comrades I wish to express our sympathy and appreciation of him."

Private Campbell is now in one of the hospitals in England.

Her Two Children Dead, Mother Kills Third and Herself

NEW YORK, June 15.—Mrs. Mary Manner had been bereaved of two children within a few months. One was a five-year-old boy, the other a baby of three weeks.

She had one child left, her little son James, who had just learned to walk. Fretting over those that had been taken from her, she lost her reason yesterday, while her husband was away visiting the freshly green grave in the cemetery, and cut the throat of her last child. Then she took her own life by inhaling gas.

They lived at No. 440 Palisade avenue, Garfield, N.J. John Manner, the husband, worked in the Garfield Worsted Mills. The loss of the two children had been a hard blow for him, too. He and his wife talked about it constantly, and found no comfort.

Yesterday afternoon he tried to persuade her to go with him to the Lodi Cemetery, but she said she could not bear to see the grass growing over her young ones. He went alone.

It was dusk when he returned. There was no light in the house, and the doors and windows were all locked. No one answered his calls.

He broke open the kitchen door. There were fresh blodstains on the floor. They led to the bedroom door. It was locked. He broke it open.

The room was full of gas, which had poured in from two open jets. His wife lay on one bed — dead. Beside the bed was a cradle in which lay the dead child. An open penknife, stained with blood, told the rest of the story.

SOLDIER POSED AS MARRIED MAN

There is evidently one soldier at Barriefield Camp who is "in wrong" with his friend Lucy, who is a resident of that well known home of the Minister of Militia — Lindsay. The story came out through a letter that was picked up on Barriefield Commons. The letter reads something like this: Dear W. N.: You have always led me to believe that you were a single man. Now I find that you are married. Do not write me again. Tell your wife all about it, and in future do not forget that you are married."—Kingston Whig.

HIGH PRAISE FOR WILSON

Special to The Examiner:

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 15.—Senator Ollie James today eloquently told the story of three years of Democratic leadership and lauded Woodrow Wilson as the greatest American of present day history.

It was the secondary keynote speech of the Democratic convention, delivered by one of Democracy's prize orators, and it evoked a tremendous demonstration for the Democratic standard bearer.

James' speech was an appeal, "Do not swap horses while crossing a bloody stream," and a plea for recognition of the president, as "a master diplomat" and "unconquerable leader," worthy of a brilliant record in the book of history for his achievements for peace.

"The Democratic party is proud of the achievements of Woodrow Wilson," he said. "He has brought prosperity and plenty to one hundred million Americans. He has given work to every willing hand in the republic. Every toiler has the full dinner pail, full to overflowing."

ANTI-UNIONISTS HOLD SESSION

Examiner Special:

WINNIPEG, Man., June 15.— At 9 o'clock this morning the Presbyterian anti-unionists went into session to outline a plan of action.

Dr. Campbell, leader of the anti-unionists, interviewed, said: "We are the general assembly, not they. We will continue as Presbyterian churches of Canada."

Asked if legal action was likely to develop, the aged clerk of assembly remarked: "It is up to others to start legal proceedings. We know our position all right."

Services Conducted Ay Rev. J.R. Butler

MILLBROOK, June 15.—Rev. J. R. Butler, of Cavan, preached eloquent sermons last Sunday morning and evening to appreciative congregations in the Methodist church, Millbrook and at the Fallis line in the afternoon. His sermons on Sunday should prove helpful to all who heard them. Mr. Butler is one of the ablest divines in the Bay of Quinte Conference.

He makes warm friends wherever he is stationed, and the people of Cambray Circuit are to be congratulated on securing Mr. Butler as their Pastor for the ensuing Conference term.

2nd Battalion Congratulated

Minnies" (aerial torpedoes) floating through the air towards our trench; some going over and some in front When we saw one coming that had our number on and no escape, we kept in close to the parapet and I said to the other three (two of them were new men) steel yourselves for a decided shock, here's one coming right dead on." When it hit just in front the explosion was terrific and at the same time the parapet broke off in on us just as you'd break off a piece of cake, and two of us were underneath the earth. I ran around the corner and got a shovel and we soon got them out, although they were badly crushed. Talk about a breeze when that explosion took place—it just simply pushed me out of the way— this is caused by the concussion. While we had quite a few casualties I am sure that I am quite safe in saying that the Huns had easily eight to our one, as they were massed in their front line like bees Too much cannot be said of the way our artillery supported us. It is claimed that over seven thousand shell of all sizes were poured in on our battalions' front in about an hour, although the bombardment lasted more than three hours. Well, mother, I only hope that the rounds of ammunition which I fired got a lot of Huns for you know too many of our chums went down about this time (or a little earlier) last year and must be avenged. Gee, how the boys did yell and jeer the Huns when they tried to get back to their trench. Such phrases as "Come on you sausage eaters," and others which would not look good on paper. Since I have started in to write this an order has been read out from Sir Douglas Haig, "Congratulating the 2nd Battalion on their brilliant stand made on April 28th."

This afternoon we played the 8th Battalion baseball and won by a 14-11 score. Some shells were landing in some fields not far away and one of the "Made in Germany" aeroplanes passed by overhead and no doubt he looked down with displeasure on our playground, but the game went on just the same. We lost a lot of good players when the mine went up, but they were in another company. There are just three of us left that played on the ball team we had last year. "Barney" Quinn was one of our speed artists last year, but I was glad that he got a chance to go back to Canada as he was sure a good kid.

Tell father that I'm going to write him one of these days. Please don't forget the C. tobacco, as I am right out and sure miss it out here.

When the bombardment was over and the sentries posted for the night, the rest of us got busy with shovels and got the trench into pretty good shape before we left. Our officers were very cool all through the bombardment and sure deserve credit for the way in which they handled the situation.

Now, mother I think this will be all for this time. Give my best to all at home as if named and a large share for yourself. Be sure and write soon again to.

Your loving son,
ROSCOE.

Dead Girl's Friend Speaks For Orpet In Murder Trial

COMPLETELY REPUDIATES PREVIOUS STORIES OF CHEERFULNESS.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., June 15.—Josephine Davis testified to-day that Marion Lambert, for the alleged murder of whom Will H. Orpet, is on trial here, threatened to commit suicide if it proved true that Orpet had transferred his affections to another.

The school girl witness, called by the state, continued to testify for the defence. She completly repudiated previous stories of the cheerfulness of Marion, her chum, and told of fits of depression over fear that she was in a delicate condition, and later, when this fear became less acute, after January 20, over the reported defection of Orpet. It was Dorothy Mason who told Marion that Orpet, a student at the University of Wisconsin, was engaged to marry Celeste Yonker, according to the witness.

"I wonder why she told me that," Marion said to me," related Miss Davis. "Maybe it was just to make me feel bad."

"So we framed up a letter to Orpet, but as no reply was received Marion began to think that Miss Mason had told the truth. It was on February 6 when Marion had her 16th birthday party that she threatened to kill herself. 'Honest, if Billie has thrown me over, I'll kill myself,' she told me."

"I laughed at her, just to try to get her out of that mood, and then she laughed, too, I said, "You won't let me tell everything to your mother, now; shall I tell what I know after death?" She laughed and said: "Well, I guess not. There will be gossip anyway, and we might as well give them something to gossip about."

GRAND JURY FOUND PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN GOOD CONDITION

The Grand Jury's presentment to His Honour Judge Huycke this morning contained an emphatic depreciation of Detective Newhall's conduct during their hearing of the evidence in the two cases of alleged stealing and receiving stolen goods of which a "no bill" was returned in each case. The particular clause in the report was as follows:

"In our deliberations we have been assured by your Honour that we were to consider them to be secret and that we might look to you or to the Crown Attorney for any help of which we might stand in need. We found that, at one period of our meeting we were unable to obtain the help either of yourself or of the Crown Attorney. We called for nothing further, but notwithstanding this were informed by Detective Newhall that he was there to take Mr. Hatton's place. Some of the members of the Grand Jury, noting the way that Mr. Newhall was handling the witnesses objected to his taking any further part in the proceedings and desired the foreman to so inform him. He only retired after an attempt to argue out the matter with the Grand Jury in a manner which many of us considered discourteous and was certainly displeasing. We submit to your Honour that in so doing he allowed his zeal to outrun his discretion and came perilously near to bringing the administration of the law into actual contempt."

Judge Huycke in his reply stated that no one, not even the Crown Attorney, had the right to interfere in the manner complained of. The Grand Jury might ask the Judge or Crown Attorney for advice, but that was the limit of their concern in the cases before the Jury.

THE REPORT IN FULL.

The rest of the report as read by Mr. Harry Phelan was as follows:—

Peterborough, June 15th, 1916

May it please your Honour:—

We the members of the Grand Jury in making our presentment desire to preface our remarks by proffering, our thanks, not only to yourself, for your kindness and consideration, but also to the Crown Attorney and the other officials of the Court, who have endeavoured to help us in every way possible in our effort to discharge the duties entrusted to us.

Needless to say, we took careful note of your Honour's charge, and in so far as our judgment went, have given an entirely impartial verdict on all matters pertaining to the position that we have been cabled upon to fill.

TOO MUCH PESSIMISM.

We desire to place ourselves on record as entirely in accord with you in every point that you have raised. That there has been altogether too much talk of a nature, which in different times and under different conditions might not, perhaps, be looked upon as seditious, but which, in present circumstances, is calculated to create a disloyal or indifferent feeling towards our country and empire is unfortunately true. We would go even further than your Honour in this particular and state that a warning is needed almost as much by the pessimistic talker as by the seditious or actually disloyal one. What is urgently needed at the present time is an optimism based on a true conception of our empire's genius, grim determination to continue to strengthen the arms of our valiant sons and an unswerving faith in the justice of our cause.

With you, sir, we join in deploring the terrible losses that the war has caused. The passing of such great men as Lord Kitchener and General Gallieni has created widespread sorrow in our empire and in France. They played their part and have rendered their names immortal leaving behind them fresh inspiration to do and to dare which will assuredly bear fruit in the near future.

A PERSONAL TRIBUTE

In thinking of these great men we are bound to think also of the many thousands of our bravest and our best who departed from our shores to fight under them and who now, under others almost as illustrious are contending in the great battle for universal liberty. You yourself, Sir, are to be warmly congratulated on being the father of three such, who giving up all thought of present comfort and safety offered their services ungrudgingly towards the preservation of their king and empire. And in congratulating you, we tender our sincere sympathy in the sad tidings of the serious wounding of you son, Mr. Douglas, coupled with the hope that ere long he will be restored to his full strength and vigour.

In compliance with your Honour's wishes we have visited the various public institutions in the city and county, and have made as exhaustive an investigation of them as the time at our disposal allowed us.

We found the goal and courthouse to be kept in an efficient and clean state, and those in authority willing to aid us in our enquiries.

ELEVEN PRISONERS IN GOAL.

It was a satisfaction to learn that at present the prisoners number only eleven in all, nine male and two female, one of the male prisoners being adjudged insane. With regard to the last mentioned we were informed that steps were being taken to have him soon removed to more fitting quarters. We learned that one of the female prisoners had been committed several months ago to the Mercer Reformatory but that, owing to some reason not ascertainable, she had been kept in confinement here whilst one or two others committed to the same place after her own commitment had received, prior attention and been removed thither. We cannot understand why this young girl should have had her case overlooked and been left for so long in the company of undesirable women and girls.

We would suggest that a fresh copy of the Rules and Regulations of the goal be procured to take the place of the dilapidated copy now hanging in the men's quarters.

HOUSE OR REFUGE.

We also visited the House of Refuge at Lakefield and are glad to place on record our pleasure at the way that institution is managed. We found the inmates happy and contented with their lot and everything about the premises in the very best of order. We were sorry to find, however, one inmate, who should, by all rights, be in the insane asylum. It is not fair to the Superintendent or to the inmate himself, that he should be kept in a place, where, no matter how anxiously he may be watched that care and attention cannot be extended that is so necessary to a man in his condition.

At the Children's Shelter we found things as clean and comfortable-looking as could be expected in the somewhat cramped and confined quarters, and the children themselves happy-looking and healthy. We feel that we are at somewhat of a disadvantage in expressing our opinion in regard to this institution as the head of the Shelter, Mr Henry was absent at the time of our visit and we were unable to obtain information along certain specific lines.

The Protestant home is, in our opinion, a very ably managed institution. We were delighted with its splendid condition and with the contented appearance of the inmates.

THE CITY HOSPITALS.

Our visit to the Nicholls Hospital and the St. Joseph's Hospital was also productive of the greatest pleasure and profit. We consider it a privilege to be able to make known in this report our delight at discovering the many excellent features that those hospitals contain. We are confident that in every way possible the authorities of both these institutions have endeavoured to keep up with the times and that in equipment and service they are well up in the ran of the smaller cities of Canada.

The St. Vincent Orphanage and the House of Providence were also visited. In the former we were pleased to note the great care that seems to be exercised in the education of the children. A schoolroom is provided for fixed hours of instruction and also a chapel for their devotions. Both these features show to what a full extent the secular and religious education of the children is cared for.

The House of Providence showed the same excellent management as the other institutions that were visited. We have nothing but praise for the courtesy and kindness with which we were everywhere received.

The personnel of the Grand Jury is as follows:—

Arthur Ash, Edgar Burnham, Thos. Beatty, John Coward, John Carey, F. M. Dela Fosse, Thos. Flynn, Geo. Taylor, S. T. Wedlock, H. Phalen, John Gillespie, Geo. Kenyon and Geo. Baird. Mr. Phalen is foreman.

War Uniting the People of Russia

WHOLE NATION IS AWAKE TO INDUSTRIAL POSSIBILITIES OF THE EMPIRE, EAST AND WEST.

One result of the war will surely be a great impulse to the development of Russia, in both Europe and Asia, says the Portland Oregonian. It has united the Russian people, turned their attention to industry, stimulated them to organise and increase their productive powers by stopping the waste of vodka drinking. A new Russia will come out of the fire of war.

Russia is the economic double of the United States. It covers the Eastern, the United States the western portion of the Northern Hemisphere, and its resources are similar to ours. Its development is in infancy, particularly in Asia, and it offers a vast market for American manufactures. As the Eastern States supplied material for settlement and development of the West so the whole of the United States may supply material for the development of Russia. The great Empire will need farm implements, railroad material, electric machinery and textile wares which the United States can best supply. For Eastern Siberia at least these can be more cheaply carried across the Pacific Ocean from the United States than across the wide stretches of Russia from Western Europe.

Portland has the opportunity to become one of the great ports whence goods will be shipped to Russia. It will get the business more readily if it studies the needs, tastes and prejudices of its customers and conducts correspondence with them in their own language. An opportunity of lucrative employment would be offered to young men and women if they learned the Russian language and thus were able to handle the business of an exporting firm. Russian is destined to be one of the most important languages and familiarity with it will in a few years be useful to those engaged in foreign trade as is knowledge of Spanish and German.

tunity to score. Taylor at this time was putting in some useful work. From one of his passes Willshaw got in a fast run along the right wing finishing up with a beautiful centre but fund Morrison right there with the goods. Spring received the ball in the centre of the field, and put in a long shot, which missed the goal by inches only; Richardson passing the ball into the goal mouth, gave Harrison a fine chance to score, but getting a little excited, he missed an open goal; half-time arriving with 'A' Company leading by one goal to nil.

Harrison, setting the ball in motion for the second half, passed out to Selkirk, who centered finely, Harrison receiving the ball when offside. From the kick-off Jay passed to Stockdale, who shot wildly. 'C' Company, at this time, were having most of the play. From a neat piece of combination Richardson passed out to Harrison, that player scoring a fine goal, thus equalizing the scores.

From the kick-off Hardy got possession of the ball in centre field took a long shot which just went wide of the goal. Hardy was now playing a fine game, some of his shots causing quite a bit of trouble. Wilson was playing quite up to his reputation, receiving a pass, Crowe made no mistake about putting the ball between the posts for the second goal. From the kick-off Wilson was soon making tracks toward the other end, finishing up with a fine centre which Griffin cleared. Spring at every opportunity, was taking a pot shot at goal and on two or three occasions came very near scoring. Only through the fine work of Griffin in goal kept C Company from scoring. From a pass by Norman Willshaw made a speedy run along the right wing, but his shot went wide. Soon after the whistle sounded time, the game ending 2 goals to 1, in favour of C Company.

Sergt. Maj. Hartshorne refereed the game to the satisfaction of both teams.

The teams lined up as follows:

CAMP NOTES.

The stationary kitchen is now practically complete. One cannot get near Sergt. Wride these days. The boys are getting lots to eat.

Bandmaster Hughes and the Band expect to take their leave from Monday next. They are certainly putting up some fine music these days. There is no band in camp that has anything on the 93rd.

Paymaster Sergt. Abraham and his staff are having a busy session today, this being one of the days the boys appreciate most—pay-day.

Battalion Sergt. Maj. Miller expects to be home on leave this week end.

The camp grounds are in good shape now and the boys of the 93rd are busy getting into shape to trim up the other Battalions at baseball, football, or anything that comes their way.

Armourer Sergt. Grange and Q. M. Sergt. King had a busy time at Barriefield Village last night. The house occupied by Mr. Martin was burned to the ground and they being visitors in the Village, had to join the bucket brigade, in order to save the house they were staying at.

Capt. Munro expects to be in Peterborough on leave on Thursday for a few days.

There are a number of photos of A Campany for sale, which can be had on application to Capt. Marling, Barriefield Camp. Price $1.25.

Some Peterborough families are badly showing up the slacker brigade, Yesterday Mr. James Hatcher, 130 Stewart street ,left with the draft for the Canadian Army Service Corps, keen to do his bit in spite of the fact that he has already given three sons to the cause. Two of his boys Ptes. Harold and Walter Hatcher are with the 93rd and the other Pte. Fred Hatcher with the Army Service Corps. He tried to get into the 93rd but they were not satisfied that they had done enough and now they too are in khaki.

Ten members of the 93rd Battalion Bugle Band are home on leave from Barriefield camp. The brass band of the 93rd will be home in a body on Saturday and citizens generally are hoping that they will bring their instruments with them and perhaps give a concert while they are home.

15,000 MEN A MONTH.

This table shows that during the 22 months of war Canada has raised an average of 15,000 men a month. This shows also that the recruiting methods adopted by the military authorities have been effective in that they are securing large numbers of men. A further examination of recruiting methods shows that some parts of Canada have contributed more recruits than other parts, and that some sections have given more than their portion of the 500,000 that are required.

Quotas needed from military districts to bring the Canadian Expeditionary Force up to 500,000 men, and the number secured:

Military District.	District's Portion of 500,000.	Recruits secured up to May 31.	Population according to Census of 1915

Brigadier-General the Hon. James Mason informed Parliament that there were 445,000 French-Canadian males between the ages of 18 and 45, and that there were 667,000 English-Canadians in the same class. There were 307,000 United Kingdom born and 308,000 foreign born males within the eligible ages; in all in Canada there were 1,725,000 men of military age.

Presentation Made.

An interesting event took place at the city pumping station yesterday when Pte. T. E. Park of the 93rd Battalion, and until recently foreman of the Water Works Department, Peterborough Utilities Commission, was presented with a beautiful wrist watch by the heads and staff of the Water Works Department. Pte. Park has been a valued servant of the city for the past six years, and is highly respected and esteemed by all connected with the Water Works Department. For the past two weeks Pte. Parks has been on special leave from Barriefield at the request of the Utilities Commission, his services being necessary here in the absence from the city of Superintendent R. L. Dobbin. He returned to duty with the 93rd this morning. The presentation yesterday was accompanied by the following appreciative address:

LINCOLN DEFENCE IS TREATY RIGHT

FORMER BRITISH MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT IS TAKEN BACK FROM UNITED STATES.

LONDON, June 15.—Ignatius Tribitch Lincoln, once a British member of Parliament, who was taken back to England from the United States by Scotland Yard Detectives outlined his defence when arraigned in the Bow street police court on the charge of forgery. He said he would contend that the accusations upon which he was extradited could not be proceeded with owing to the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain. The court then remanded Lincoln in custody until Monday.

NATIONAL REGISTRATION ONLY REMEDY CLAIM MANUFACTURERS

Thousands of Skilled Workmen are Being Recruited Who Should be Left at Home, While on Other Hand There Are Thousands of Men Who Should Go and Whose Places Could be Taken by Women, Returned Soldiers, Rejected Men and Old Men and Boys---Hundreds of Young Men Carrying School Books Who Should Be Carrying a Rifle---Students a Temporary Burden on the Country is Manufacturers Viewpoint.

RURAL SECTIONS HAVE DONE VERY LITTLE

HAMILTON, June 14.—"The situation in Canada is rapidly becoming serious. Thousands of skilled workmen have been taken from factories which are engaged on army contracts and put into uniform where their military value has been actually diminished. There has been constant disorganisation, repeated training of new batches of men, loss of time, unprofitable expenditure of money and, most serious of all, inability to produce war supplies up to the capacity of factories under normal conditions." This statement of the situation brought about in manufacturing circles by the existing recruiting methods, is an outstanding feature of the report of the special committee on the co-ordination of recruiting, and production. Mr. S. R. Parsons, chairman, presented at this forenoon's session of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

The committee points out that to a greater or less degree this situation applies to all other forms of production than manufacturing, and adds: "It is not good policy from a military point of view, to enlist such men as farmers or farm foremen of long experience who can get the best results from the land, or business men occupying important positions when there are still thousands of young single men in the country, who are obviously indifferent to the call of duty."

Resolution Submitted.

After declaring the belief that 500,000 men should and can be enlisted in Canada through more co-ordination of military, industrial and agricultural activities, the committee offered to the convention the following resolution, which had already been adopted by the Executive Council, but upon which no action had been taken by the Government.

"That a proclamation be issued calling upon every man of 18 or over to offer his services to the State. Let enrolment offices be opened in every city, town and county, where those of eligible age shall be required to register their names, ages, occupations, etc., and be given a badge or armlet to mark them out as men who have answered the call. Let a board be appointed in connection with each enrolment office, constituted of perhaps a judge as chairman, an officer of the militia, and one or two others, to consider each man's case, and assign him to the class, of service which his peculiar qualifications best fit him for, whether that service be overseas, home defence, some form of production, or anything else essential to the conduct of our national affairs in war time."

The Association later adopted this resolution, thus going on record as favouring immediate registration.

Wasteful Recruiting Methods.

The report of the committee contains much other information of value.

It points out that while the enlistment of 354,209 men up to May 31, is a matter of congratulation, the recruiting methods used have been and are wasteful, haphazard, and unduly disturbing to production. When it was decided to increase the overseas army from 250,00 to 500,000, it became evident that a serious disorganisation of all forms of industry would result. By this development business concerns lost large numbers of highly skilled employes, whose replacement was difficult, and through the enlistment of thousands of married men whose families became a partial charge on the country, the total cost of the war was greatly increased.

The report after giving particulars of enlistment by areas of military districts, points out that in many cases the right men had not been secured. Then follows an analysis of the occupation of enlisted men up to February 15, as follows:

Classes.	Number of total enlisted enlistments	Percentage
Professional men.	16,161	6.14
Business men	6,530	2.48
Clerks	48,775	18.54
Manual labour	170,389	64.75
Farmers, including farm labourers	14.20	5.40
Ranchers	2,844	1.08
Students	42.38	1.61
Total to Feb. 15.	263,141	100.00

Few From Rural Districts.

The rural districts, the report claims, had not made heavy sacrifices—only 14,200 or 5.4 per cent., of the total. Of these enlisted under the class "farmers" the majority were farm labourers, most of them of British birth. Comparatively few farmers or their sons have been taken from the land. Business men, clerks, and manual labourers represented 85 per cent. of the total enlistments, and of these manufacturing had contributed by far the greater share.

Source For Enlistments.

The committee in its reports selects from the last census of wage earners some of the occupations now filled by men of military age from which large enlistments could be made and their places in civilian life refilled by returned soldiers, rejected men, women and girls, old men and boys. These are arranged in classes as follows:

Agricultural—Fruit pickers, dairy workers, servants, gardeners, florists, nurserymen.

Domestic and Personal Class—Barbers and hair dressers, elevator operators, bell boys, housekeepers, stewards, launderers, servants, waiters.

Fishing— Employees engaged in taking, curing, drying and canning fish.

Lumbering—Office staffs, checkers, woodyard foremen.

Manufacturing —The time is approaching when we will have to consider, as they have already considered in England, what industries are essential to the progress of the war. When it becomes necessary to curtail, and, perhaps, altogether absorb all the employes of certain factories, it is inevitable that those which produce luxuries will suffer first. We may as well face the grim fact that, if the war continues over a period of years, it may be necessary to close factories which produce luxuries and comforts that are not considered necessary, in order that factories which are producing war supplies and necessities for the civilian population amy be allowed to operate at their full capacity. Recruiting officers have complained that, where they attempt to co-operate with fatcory owners, those owners include in their lists of indispensable men who can be spared. We must realize that some business is bound to suffer and that in all co-operation with the military authorities which has for its aim the retention of skilled employes, and the release of unskilled employes, manufacturers must play their fair.

Mining—Most operations are of military value during a war. Canadian mines have already given many recruits. A few may still be left among office staffs.

Miscellaneous — Baseball players, billiard room attendants, bill posters, theatrical employes.

Professional Class— Actors, architects' apprentices, artists, and teachers of art, clergmen, decorators, dentists' assistants, Government clerks, Government officials, interpreters, inventors, journalists, lawyers, lawyers' clerks, librarians, municipal officials, municipal officials, musicians, and teachers of music, notaries, and conveyancers, opticians, professors, sculptors, sculptors' assistants, stenographers, surveoyrs, teachers.

Trade and Transportation Class — Accountants, advertising agents, express agents, insurance agents, auctioneers, bookkeepers, carpet layers, cashiers, checkers, bank clerks, office clerks, rent collectors, commercial travellers, drivers, errand boys, office boys, linemen, parcel boys, baggage men, oilers, section and truck men, storekeepers, watchmen, labourers, motormen, conductors, timekeepers, toll gate keepers, weighers, gaugers, measure managers.

Salesmen — Men engaged in selling books and stationery, books and shoes, carpets, ladies' wear, china glass and crockery, cigars and tobacco, men's clothing and furnishings, confectionery, dry goods, fancy goods, flowers, fruit, furniture, jewelry, liquor and beverages, sewing machines, hardware.

Students — While the universities and other institutions of learning have contributed a considerable number of soldiers, there are still thousands of young men of military age carrying school bags instead of rifles. It is necessary to keep up the supply of doctors and technical men, but application to such subjects as classics, philosophy, or history, seems unprofitable in war time. Students, with some exceptions, are not performing any military duty by continuing at school. They are not helping books and stationery, boots and are not of financial assistance to their parents. On the contrary, they are a temporary burden on the country, which has to pay a considerable part of the cost of their education. If students remain peacefully acquiring the luxury of higher education during a crisis like the present, the country will begin to question the value of an education system which attracts and holds such men

The Three Armies.

The committee suggests that the time is at hand when all available men in Canada shou ld be divided into three armies, viz:

The Fighting Army —This should contain a large proportion of young single men, who can most easily be spared from industry, and such technical men as are needed.

The Industrial Army—This should include the technical men not needed for special services in the army, enough men to form permanent staffs for the industries which are needed to prosecute the war. Such employees should be enrolled by the military authorities and should be given distinctive armlets or buttons to show that they were on active service. These armlets or buttons should be issued by a central authority on a common principle.

Workmen to man enough factories to supply the civilian population with necessaries should be provided in addition.

The Agricultural Army. — This should retain the experienced farmers and farm foremen, and a reasonable number of assistants. Its object would be to supply all three armies and the civilian population with food.

Distributed through the Industrial Army and the Agricultural Army should be the returned soldiers, rejected men, women and girls, old men and boys, who would take the places of those engaged in more active military service.

While the conditions existing in Canada and Europe were scarcely capable of comparison, all are aware of the great extent to which the places of able-bodied men of military age had been taken by ineligible men and by women and children. In Europe women were doing most of the work which was not directly connected with military activity, and were also doing much of the manufacturing of war supplies.

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use soaps and prepared shampoos that contain too much alkili. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

SAYS GERMANS REFUSE TO FIGHT AT VERDUN

New York, June 15.—Colonel Feyler, a Swiss officer, who lately returned from a tour of observation on the French front, is attracting the attention of the European neutrals by publishing the results of his investigation in the Journal de Geneve.

Among his most startling statements is, however, the news, which he says he received from a German source, that many of the soldiers of the Kaiser's armies are being put in prison for refusing to go to Verdun, where the losses amount to 300,000 men.

"The losses," he says, "have been perceptibly less on the French side. Besides, by their nature as well as by the results attained, they react more seriously on the impressionability of the population of the empire than on the French.

"One of the great German units which has taken part in the attacks on Verdun since the beginning and which conducted itself in the most brilliant fashion, had to be taken from the front and reformed. It had decreased to a small fraction of its strength at the start. It reappeared on the field of battle and again won the admiration of its opponents for its courage and tenacity, so much so that it had again to be taken behind the lines to be re-constituted.

"But, now on resuming the attack the third time the soldiers show an evident dislike to leave the trenches for an assault.

"Another piece of information comes to me from Germany by means which I shall not disclose now—quite a number of German soldiers are being put in prison because they refuse to go to Verdun. The battles in Flanders in October, 1914, caused the same state of mind.

"Concerning the effect on the persons at home there is an enormous difference; there are no colonial or colored soldiers in the German army. Every German soldier who falls before Verdun is therefore a loss which strikes at the heart of some German family, and which results in direct suffering in Germany.

"The Germans were the assailants; they were the attackers, because they hoped to capture the enemy's position at Verdun. After three months, at the rate of 100,000 men sacrificed monthly, they find that the position has not been taken, that their hopes have not been realized, and that the loss of 100,000 men a month is without justification. They have a feeling that they have been checked.

"The French have been the defenders. At the end of three months they find that with the least sacrifice their defence has been scarcely pushed back and that they are having a chance to rest. Even without resting they would have retained the place which the enemy wanted to capture. Hence the result justifies their losses. They have the feeling of success."

Commenting on the obstinate attacks on the Verdun front "Polybe" in the Paris Figaro advances the opinion that they are probably intended to interfere with and retard a general offensive on the part of the Allies, if not to make it entirely impossible.

"The chiefs of the German army," he says, "may differ in opinion regarding the point at which the local offensive should be directed but they are unanimous in favoring the principle. It is this idea of momentary success that the military writers beyond the Rhine uphold as a great success.

"But all these hecatombs are not too dear a price to pay for retarding a general attack on all their fronts, in the opinion of the German leaders and their interpreters. To prevent or not to prevent a general attack that is the question."

Edith M. Burtis, one-time associate editor of a woman's magazine, resigned her position in order to establish herself as an adviser to manufacturers and merchants regarding the desires and needs of women consumers of the country.

PTE. O. G. READ OF PRINCESS PATRICIAS REPORTED MISSING

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. G. Read Was a Student at Guelph, O. A. C.

Mr. W. G. Read, 561 King street received a telegram from the Militia Department this afternoon conveying the information that his son, Private David George Read was listed in the casualties as missing since June 4th. He was with the Princes Patricias who bore a large share of the brunt of the German offensive near Hooge in the Ypres salient in the first days of this month. The telegram discloses nothing but the distressing uncertainty of the word missing, with its hopeful possibility that the young soldier may be traced and found to be living.

Private D. G. Read was a student at the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph when the call came for reinforcements for the Patricias and immediate response was given by the formation of companies from the leading universities of Canada. Pte. Read volunteered with other O.A.C. students and went to McGill university, Montreal, for further training. Lieut G. S. Fyle reported killed a week ago was in this regiment with a Western University Company. The student reinforcements have been in and out of the trenches during most of the winter and spring and Private Read's letters to his parents were exceptionally illustrative and interesting.

Mr. and Mrs. Read have their other son in khaki, W. C. Read with one of the batteries at Petawawa. The many friends of the parents of these splendid boys will unite in the hope that the indefinite feature of the news they received may have the consolation that he is at least a prisoner if not safe within his own lines.

Belgian Refugees In Holland Dwindle

The Hague, Netherlands, June 15.—The number of Belgian refugees in Holland has declined from 1,000,000 after the fall of Antwerp to about 65,000. Belgians continue to arrive in Holland from their native land, driven out by the hard conditions of existence there, but this accession is counterbalanced by the outflow from Holland—to France, Great Britain of the United States.

Of the 65,000 still enjoying Dutch hospitality, 15,000 are now accommodated in the four specially erected refugee camps or wooden villages at Ede, Nunspeet, Gouda and Uden. The others are living with private families.

Besides approximately $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 supplied to refugee Belgians through donations, The Dutch Government has contributed about $5,000,000. A sum of $2,000,000 has been voted for the current year, and unless peace arrives meanwhile, another $1,000,000 will probably be granted. An offer of reimbursement by the Belgian government has been declined.

Needy Belgians are free to enter the refugee villages and private families maintain them the burgomaster is empowered to allow fourteen American cents a day for each adult and eight cents for each child.

The refugee camps, each of which is controlled by a government commissary, are well organised and equipped, and have churches, schools shops and post offices. The inhabitants receive meat, fish or fat daily. They are not compelled to work, but a small wage is offered as an inducement to do so; and wooden houses are being constructed which can be first used here, and then, after the war, perhaps transferred in sections to Belgium, to serve as homes there until the many ruined houses can be rebuilt. This work is being paid for largely out of $130,000 raised in Denmark, with the English Society of Friends lending co-operation.

Stirring Times In England

Local Man Receives a Letter From a Sister-in-law in Which Reference is Made to a Zeppelin Raid

The appended extract was taken from a letter received by a local gentleman from his sister-in-law, who resides in England. It serves to indicate the conditions under which some of the people are living as compared with conditions as they exist in Canada. The extract follows:

"Doris is working on the land at a farm in Essex, and a girl with her, whose home is at Lowestoft with two aged aunts, had a nasty time during the last Zeppelin raid. They were cowering in a room in the dark when there was an awful crash at the other end of the house. They were all too frightened to go and look; besides they could not take a light. When it got daylight they found a dead smashed up German, who must have fallen from a Zeppelin and crashed through the conservatory, which was built on to the drawing-room."

MILITARY NEWS

Lieuts. McNab and Stevenson, of the 93rd Battalion, who attended the Machine Gun School at Kingston some time, were successful in their examination and have been granted certificates.

A despatch from London gives some interesting particulars about local officers. Lieut. Gerald K. Rackham, of Peterborough, who went overseas with the 59th Battalion, has been appointed officer-in-charge of Brigade Signalling Instruction, 5th Brigade, while Major S. T. Medd was one of the officers to be granted a certificate at the close of the officers' course at the Canadian Military School, Shorncliffe.

Pte. Scutt, of the 93rd Battalion, is attending the School of Cookery at Barriefield Camp.

One of the principal features in the military news in the Kingston Standard is the daily bulletin telling where and with what battalion the military editor of the Standard dined on the preceeding day. Judging by the frequency with which such items get into the Standard, a good meal has hitherto been a novelty to the Standard man, or else he is so overjoyed at the opportunity of getting fed at no expense to himself that he hastens to share his rejoicing with the general public.

KINGSTON, June 14.—It was announced at Barriefield Camp to-day that six battalions are to be taken away within the next 10 days. No information is given as to which battalions will go and their destination is not announced. When the six battalions are gone there will remain only about 3,700 men at Barriefield.

SMALLPOX RAGING IN ZION AND MULL BUT SPECIES MILD

M. O. H. Finds Over Dozen Cases on Investigation – Many People Exposed

Wide Territory Affected—Provincial Authorities Are Sent For.

BLENHEIM, June 16.— Dr. A. R. Hanks, M. O. H., of Harwich Township, after an investigation in the township in the neighborhood of Zion and Mull, reports finding smallpox spread over quite an area of that part of the township.

He called a special meeting of the board of health last night, and it was decided to quarantine all suspected cases and houses that have been exposed, and at once get into touch with the provincial board and have a representative come to the scene of the outbreak.

The doctor was first informed of a suspected case by a physician who was called to attend a patient. The investigation yesterday revealed the fact that for over a month the disease has been in the Zion neighbourhood in a mild form, the affected ones not recognizing what it was. As a result many have been exposed, and it is feared a wide territory has been affected.

The M. O. H. reports having discovered traces of over a dozen cases, adults and children, already, among them being children at school with the outbreak plainly upon them. The first two cases were adults, and it is some five or six weeks since they were first taken ill.

A thorough investigation will be made, and an effort to check its further spread made.

It is some years since smallpox was known to exist in this vicinity.

PAPAL FLAG TO WAVE FIRST TIME ON OCEAN

Steamer Chartered to Carry Prelate Across Atlantic.

ROME, June 15.— The white and yellow papal flag is to wave for the first time on the ocean, according to a report in circulation here. Mgr. Locatelli, the papal inter-nunci at Buenos Ayres, having been transferred to Brussels, where he will be nuncio, desiring to insure his safety while at sea, has chartered a steamer which will be called the Nuncio, and will carry the papal colours as those of a neutral power.

The last ship which flew the papal colours was the brig Maria Immacolata, which lay in the harbour of Civita Vecchia, 37 miles northwest of Rome, in September, 1870, when the Italians took Rome. The brig, however, had never gone out into the Mediterranean flying the papal colours.

FLYING IN FORMATION.

Aerial Warfare Now Conducted as Lord Kitchener Advised.

A story told in London relates that at the very beginning of the war Lord Kitchener was visiting a certain flying ground in England, witching men fly and listening to what the officer comanding had to say.

"You ought," said the Secretary for War suddenly, "to learn to fly in regular formation."

The officer replied that that was impossible, because machines could neither travel far enough nor stay long enough in the air.

"You will have to do it, 'all the same,' Lord Kitchener said, "before this war is over."

In the opinion of airmen the suggestion was absurd at that time, but it has come true. Both by the British and the French reconnaissance and observation work is now carried out in regular battle formation. Aerial warfare is, in fact, going through all the stages which warfare by sea went through, the development of three months being about equivalent to that of a century in the older service.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic!" is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quick! stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barber's itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic it prevents blood poisoning.

PANAMA, June 13. — A party of four adventurers, headed by "Captain" James Steele, left to-day for Puntas Arenas, Costa Rica, where they will outfit for a trip to Cocos Island in search of a quantity of buried pirate treasure, which they profess to believe will be found there.

Steele claims to have made two previous trips to the island, which has figured variously in legends of pirates for the last 400 years. On one occasion, Steele claims, he found and cached a part of the treasure. People in the canal zone are not inclined to believe this, however.

Spoke of a Coming Victory

LONDON, June 15.—An interesting account of a visit to the Russian armies just before they started their present magnificent offensive has been received here from Prof. Bernard Pares, the British official observer. He writes:

"I came here with our British general. On our arrival we drove to the staff of this group of armies. We were shown into a large, bare room, with hardly anything but maps and a table, and sat and talked with the commander-in-chief of this front. His is now the senior post of the three fronts.

Our host was a quiet, elderly man, of heavy build, who wasted no words, a man whose face sugested the habit of thought and steady purpose. After a while our general rose and presented the Grand Cross and Chain of St. Michael and St. George, with a happy recognition of the value of the work of the Russian army for England. Our host spoke a few modest and well-weighed words in reply.

Coming Victory.

Both little speeches ended with the certain conviction of coming victory, and the Russian general, in his mention of the "strong and stubborn enemy," added the significant expression, "but who is already giving signs of defeat."

There has been an interesting visitor here from France—a professor who talks the most irreproachable Russian, with all the French graces of diction and delivery. He was sent by his Government to tell the Russian army something about the military life of the French at the front, which he did in a lecture to this large staff.

France's Share.

He told us about the German manner of entrenchment, and showed us a diagram with sections of their different lines. He had something to say about the Russian prisoners who were sent up to work on the German western front, and managed, with infinite danger, to scramble their way over into the French lines.

There was a very impressive picture, given with the utmost quietness and without an extra word, of the system by which the whole French people has been brought into the work of the French army behind the lines. Shortly and without comment was stated the rate of increase in production of the chief supplies of war, rising in one case to an increase 66-fold, and in another to 170-fold.

But the most interesting was yet to come. It was a brief precis of the French method of attack, as it has come to shape itself in this war. There was nothing said which is not a commonplace for any German officer on the French front, but for us it was of the greatest interest.

The French contribution to the science of method will take its place in military history. Napoleon never formed a school in this or in any other sense — in fact, he did all he could to avoid doing so, for military genius was to remain as far as possible his own secret.

What remained with us after the lecture more than anything else was the feel of a serious effort of all forces, never unnecessary and never slackened, that spoke for itself.

RUSSIANS IN WANT BUT WON'T ASK AID

Thomas Whittemore Asserts Silent Resignation Marks Nation's Sacrifice

MEMBER OF GRAND DUCHESS'S WAR RELIEF COMMITTEE PRAISES WORK OF PROVINCIAL UNIONS.

NEW YORK, June 10. — Thomas Whittemore of 471 Park Avenue, who recently returned from Russia, where he was a member of Grand Duchess Tatiana Nikolaovna's committee for war relief, and who is a member of the Russian Relief Commission here, said at his home recently that it was not because of the fact that Russia was not in need of American assistance that it had not appealed for relief, but that a silent resignation had been characteristic of Russian sacrifice.

"I have just returned from an eight months' sojourn in Russia," said Mr. Whittemore, "where I visited among the refugees rather than among the civil and military prisoners. The refugees compose a vast horde of humanity who evacuated the west when the country was devastated for military reasons in the early part of the war. This multitude of sufferers are Jews, Poles, Letts, Little Russians, and Lithuanians, and moved in wagons, on foot, and by train, and were months on the march They moved across Russia toward the Central Governments on the Volga.

"No other nation has had this tremendous problem to solve—the problem of saving the lives of countless human beings. The Russian Government recognizes in these multitudes of nations but one—a nation in want—and it was forced to turn to the Zemstroffs, the provincial unions, for assistance and the organization for help. The Zemstroffs are the mighty national unions which breathe the spirit of the new Russia.

"These city and county unions have established feeding centres on roads and in places of centralization in the heart of Russia, and further east they found lodgment for many of those who were intrusted to their care. It is impossible to say how many millions of people these Zemstroffs have taken care of, as no record could be taken; this, too, would be an impossibility.

DEATH RATE CALLED TERRIFIC.

"Thousands are perishing every day, but in the early part of the war the death rate was terrific. Whole Governments perforce rose to their feet and moved away, like the Nomads or Tartars of old, and wandered over the face of Russia in tremendous clouds. The acute agony of flight is over, but the chronic distress remains. Summer brings its diseases, cholera and others, but the winter was made terrible by the ravages of typhus, which, in spite of every effort made to curb it, raged frightfully."

"A national committee was formed. It was made up of Jews, Russians, Poles, and representatives of the other nationalities who inhabit Russian territory, and was established to preserve the national life of Russia's great family of nations. The committee was headed by her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Tatiana Nikolaovna, and has been doing wonderful work in sending out tons of clothing and the necessaries of life to the needy. Information bureaus were established so that families, and even towns, which became separated could be located and reunited. A concerted effort was made to hold the horde together, to keep towns and families entire, but despite all this work many thousands were lost when children strayed from their own.

TASK BEYOND HUMAN POWER

"Hostels were established for children and infants, and it was necessary to crowd all these humans into every available building. Several barracks were built to house from 1,500 to 2,000 people apiece. The refugees were packed in these single sheds, which resembled huge barns or stables, and which were made into double or triple stories. The unions here did their share. They assisted efficiently and honestly in the distribution of food and money, which was given by the Government for feeding and medical aid. Everything possible is being done, but the problem is so gigantic that it is well beyond human handling.

"Russia is rich, and sometimes it is said that she is so rich that she needs no alien help, but she has poured out her money and her men with the utmost prodigality. Silent resignation is characteristic of Russian sacrifice, and if we have not heard the cry of Russia as we have heard the cry of France and Belgium and the other warring nations it is not because the need is not great. The problems of the summer will have to be met. Adequate bathing facilities are needed before the winter or that terrible Russian scourge typhus will make once more. I am interested in assisting the bathing and disinfecting scheme—the Japanese method—whereby the war victims visiting are cleansed while the owner is taking a bath. Thousands have died because of the lack of equipment and the hygienic conditions necessary to prevent on getting these people off the roadsides and into their winter quarters."

Mr. Whittemore says that he would return to Russia in a few months and that he was at present making arrangements in this country for shipments of bathing equipment and sanitary devices for the use of the war sorely in Russia.

"WHY WOMEN CANNOT SLEEP."

The highly organized, finely strung nervous system of women subjects them to terrors of nervous apprehension which no man can ever appreciate.

The peace of mind, the mental poise and calmness under difficulties, which are necessary for happy womanhood, are only possible when the sensitive organism is in a perfectly healthy condition. If there be any derangement in this respect no remedy in the world so completely restores womanly health as the wonderful "Favorite Prescription" invented by Dr. R. V. Pierce.

Chatham, Ont.—"A few years ago I suffered a general break-down and got very weak and thin. I was in an awful state. I was very much discouraged and at times thought I would lose my mind. I knew of Dr. Pierce's medicines so I got his 'Favorite Prescription.' It gave me immediate relief, and completely cured me in a very short time. My sister used it with good results also. She was in a very delicate condition. I got her to take it and two bottles cured her completely.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce's medicines; they are all that is recommended of them."—Miss. MARGARET BRYANT, 87 Park Ave., Chatham, Ont.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AFTER KID MULLIGAN

By ALAN HINSDALE

When I was sheriff of Marion county it was reported to me that there was a young clergyman in Hilton, a farm center, some twenty miles away, and it was suspected that he was Kid Mulligan, a half boy, half man, desperado, who was fond of masquerading in different disguises. I was anxious to secure Mulligan and concluded to go to Hilton and inspect the reverend gentleman. I had never seen the Kid, but had a description of him.

On my way to Hilton I met a farmer who had been held up by a masked man the night before. He was unarmed and handed out what little money he had about him without making a show of defense. Indeed, he was too frightened to take notice of the robber except that he spoke with a voice not at all gruff. On the contrary, it was rather musical.

This robbery was an indication that Mulligan was the robber and Mulligan and the robber were one and the same person. I went on to Hilton and made inquiries for the Rev. Joseph Wyeth, the parson's name, and was told that he was to be found at the Phoenix hotel. He was traveling under a commission of the bishop to raise funds for building churches. I went to the hotel, a small tavern, and found the curate sitting on the veranda. He wore the canonicals of an Episcopal clergyman, his hair was parted in the middle, and altogether his appearance was exceedingly clerical.

Soon after my arrival at the tavern he arose and started down the main street till he came to a church and turned in at a back door. I inferred that the rector had a study there and Wyeth was going to visit him. I waited till he came out, then went in to interview the rector. I found him an elderly man not versed in worldly ways. He had seen Mr. Wyeth's credentials from the bishop, but had not scrutinized the signature. Mr. Wyeth was arranging with him to speak to his congregation the next Sunday evening, with a view to taking up a collection for church building in the diocese.

From Mr. Wyeth's personal appearance and certain of his mannerisms I gathered suspicions of him. I did not believe him to be Kid Mulligan, but I did believe that he was not an Episcopal minister. However, I had no real knowledge concerning him and felt obliged to let him proceed with what he was doing, keeping him under surveillance. I decided to let him deliver his Sunday evening address, but did not propose to let him get out of town with the proceeds of the collection without being convinced that he was what he purported to be.

When Sunday evening came I attended the church services. At the proper time the rector spoke a few words of introduction; then Mr. Wyeth began his address. Possibly if I had not been suspicious of him I might have been fooled by his remarks like the others. One matter especially gave him away to me. In mentioning the places the bishop desired churches should be built he included the town of Bingham: I happened to know that an Episcopal church had just been finished in Bingham.

The young man spoke with a pleasantly modulated voice and talked fluently. I sat in a pew right under him, where I could watch him, and I think that my fixed gaze disconcerted him, for he gave me an occasional glance, and every time he did so he seemed to lose the thread of his discourse. Doubtless others of the congregation attributed this to his youth and the fright natural to a speaker.

That he had made a very favorable impression was evident from the collection, which for so small a place was considerable. The congregation departed, and the two clergymen went into the vestry room, the one to turn over, the other to receive the contributions. I listened under an open window and heard Wyeth bid the rector goodby, saying that he must be off early the next morning.

Having seen the young man enter the tavern and go to his room, I waited for an hour, then told the landlord that I wished to speak to Mr. Wyeth and asked him to go to his room with me. I had reasons for wishing the landlord with me which will appear presently. He consented, and, taking a candle, we went to the clergyman's room and knocked on the door.

"Who's there?"

The landlord and I looked at each other. The voice sounded like that of a woman suddenly awakened.

"A gentleman wishes to speak with you, Mr. Wyeth," said the landlord.

"It's too late. I've gone to bed." This time the voice had lost something of its femininity.

My mind was made up. The door was locked. Drawing off, I gave it a kick, and it flew open. Mr. Wyeth was revealed in bed pulling the covers up to his chin. Approaching, I drew them down far enough to expose his neck.

"I thought so." I remarked to the landlord. Then, turning to the woman I said:

"I'll trouble you for the church collection."

The secret being out, she surrendered without objection. She had forged her credentials. Though she was not Kid Mulligan, she was very near to him, being his sister. I was disappointed in getting her instead of him for he was far more slippery and dangerous to handle.

Russia's Prisoners Crowded in Camps

American Agent's Report Fails to Substantiate Germans' Tales of Cruelty

INADEQUATE MEDICAL PERSONNEL AND TOO LITTLE FOOD AND CLOTHING FOR MEN THERE.

Confirmation of the gruesome stories regarding the alleged abuse and general maltreatment of Canadian prisoners of war confined in Russian prison camps, which have been circulated by German agents in neutral countries, is lacking in a report made by a representative of the American Government of his inspection of the camps in Russian Turkestan, according to excerpts from this document printed in the Berliner Tageblatt of April 20.

The American agent does complain of overcrowding, lack of sufficient medical personnel and a shortage of meat and clothing for some of the prisoners. Emphasis is laid on the unhealthful climate of Turkestan in the report, which is quoted as follows by the Tageblatt:

"Between November 21 and December 7, 1915, I visited the camps at Taschkent, Troitzkoje, Djisak, Samarkand, Kagan, (New Bokhara,) Merk, Ashabad, Ak-Tepinsk, and Krasnovodsk. On November 14, 1915 there were according to the official report, 82,425 Austrian and 3,812 German prisoners interned in the entire province of Turkestan. I have been informed that some 50,000 have recently been transferred to European Russia—to Revel, Kharkof, Ekaterinoslaf, Perm, and along the Don—to work in factories, mines, and farms or to be employed in the reclamation of land along the river banks.

"It is necessary to be acquainted with the climate and the country in order to form a correct judgment of the condition and treatment of the prisoners of war in Turkestan. A vast, sandy desert, broken up by only a few hills, and traversed by but a few water courses, extends from Taschkent west to Krasnovodsk and south to the borders of Afghanistan and Persia. The climate is extraordinarily dry. The Summers are long, the Winters short, and the temperature, in the shade ranges from a maximum of 40 above zero, Reaumur, (122 degrees Fahrenheit,) in Summer to a minimum of 16 below zero, Reaumur, (4 degrees below Fahrenheit,) in Winter. In order to show how long the Summer lasts there, I wish to say that at the time of my visit at the camp the temperature in the shade at noon ranged from 12 to 20 degrees above zero, Reaumur.

These sharp extremes of heat and cold, together with dampness that has its origin in a great deal of stagnant water, makes the climate unhealthful. Malaria was extremely prevalent in all the places that I visited, with the exception of Askabad and Krasnovodsk. From a hygenic standpoint the barracks were generally overcrowded. Only at Merw, Kagan, Askabad, and Krasnovodsk, where comparatively few prisoners were interned, did they have more than the space absolutely necessary for sleeping. However, there were more prisoners expected at these places. In the camps at Taschkent Troitskoje, Samarkand, and Ak-Tepinsk, where the great majority of the prisoners inspected were sheltered, each man had about two feet of space for sleeping at night. This condition is only serious, however, during the short Winter, when doors and windows must be kept closed and when foul air doubtless fill the rooms.

The principal disease found among the prisoners in Turkestan, in the approximate order of their frequency are: 1, malaria, (which is said to be particularly virulent there:) 2, enteritis; 3, nephritis; 4 dysentery; 5, gastric fever; 6, scurvy; 7, septic typhus, 8, diphtheria; 9, scarlet fever, 10, smallpox.

The four diseases last mentioned have only appeared in isolated cases. Another serious circumstance is the shortage of doctors and attendants in the hospitals. A Russian physician told me that in theory one doctor was assigned to every fifty patients in a hospital, but that in reality each doctor had to treat about a hundred patients and each attendant had to care for more than a hundred. At the time of my visit to the camp at Samarkand there were 706 prisoners in the hospital, with only four Austrian and two Russian doctors to care for them. There also seems to be a scarcity of medical supplies.

"The situation of the prisoners depends materially on the personality of the commander. In the camps at Troitskoje and Samarkand there was a great deal of discontent among the prisoners, and many complaints were heard. It appeared to me that in both camps the officials were very severe and took but little interest in the welfare of the prisoners. At Djisak and Krasnovodsk, on the other hand, the conditions were, with few exceptions quite satisfactory, thanks to the personality of the commander.

"But in general it must be admitted that the condition in Turkestan are not good. Apart from the unhealthful climate, the prisoners receive too little meat and overcrowding of the barracks is the order of the day, all of which, taken together, is doubtless the cause of the great number of cases of illness and death. Furthermore, there are not enough doctors there, sufficient clothing is lacking and the workingmen prisoners are not paid enough. These are the principal inconveniences.

Finger Printing of Boy Assailed

Mayor Says He Will Investigate Cases as Result of Protests Against Police Station.

NEW YORK, June 15.—Following the receipt of scores of letters protesting against the taking of the finger prints of three boys arrested for playing baseball in the street, Mayor Mitchell announced his intention of investigating the matter. The action was taken on Monday by Magistrate Simms, in the Washington Heights Court in the cases of John Mehrdrens, Ulrich Hofel and Walter Sharpe.

"No one regards playing ball as a real crime, morally or legally," Mayor Mitchell said yesterday, "and this action seems to carry with it the sense of putting one in the criminal class."

Chief Magistrate McAdoo defended Magistrate Simms with a statement, in the course of which he said:

"Magistrate Simms was merely complying with the law when he ordered that the finger prints of those boys be taken. The new parole law provides that any defendant accused of any phase of disorderly conduct shall be liable to a sentence not to exceed two years if the records show that he has been convicted three times within a certain period. Practically the only record available in such cases are finger prints."

THE HUNGARIANS ARE DEPRESSED

GENEVA, London, June 15.— An unconfirmed report has been received here of a serious revolt in Bohemia on June 9. According to the report, there was street fighting in Prague.

London, June 15.— A despatch to the Morning Post from Budapest, dated June 6, says:

"Dissatisfaction among the people, owing to the unfavourable reports from the Russian front, is growing steadfastly. Men who have been on leave at home go back with eyes full of tears and with another horrible winter in prospect. The spirit of the men is by no means the same as it was when they broke through at Gorlice and Tarnow.

"The army resembles more a wearied mass of old men than the valiant force of the early days of the war. Besides the power of it has fallen there or at the Italian front, where only young and first-class troops can be used in the mountain warfare. The Honved regiments are all at the Italian front.

Mixed Troops.

"The majority of the troops on the 400 kilometer Russian front are Austrian-Germans, Roumanians, and some German divisions under Gen. Bothmer, some Hungarians and common divisions, among them levies of 43 to 50 years old — men who were sent there to replace the young men moved to the Italian front in April. These had just completed two months training, and number not more than 150,000.

"M. Szmory, a correspondent with the army, says that prisoners taken state that Japanese artillery and soldiers in civilian clothes are assisting the Russians in great numbers."

Many German Officers.

The Mail correspondent at Petrograd says: The number of German officers in the Austrian army is proved in curious ways by the examination of prisoners. Among the men 10 per cent. are German, and among the officers, 20 per cent. According to the best information available it does not appear that Germans are sending large numbers of troops to the assistance of their allies. The estimate of four divisions, said to have been despatched from the region south of the Lida, is considered exaggerated. If true it shows that the Germans regard the position of the Austrians as desperate. Only once before have they sent them direct aid, and then they sent troops to the Carpathians at a moment when the Austrians were very hard pressed.

The Philippian Jailer—Acts 16: 16-40.

Golden Text, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house. Acts 16:31.

1. Verses 16-21. In what class do you place those who profit by the gains of fallen women?

2. This young woman was possessed with a very clever spirit of evil—an all round spirit of deception, including fortune telling; now wherein did her sin consist, and that of her owners?

3. Which are more to be blamed in these days, fortune tellers or their willing dupes?

4. When bad men are losing the gains of their evil occupations, are they apt to be very sensitive about the truth, when they seek the injury of those who have destroyed their business? For example, liquor sellers, gamblers and keepers of immoral houses. Give a reason for your answer.

5. Verse 22. What reliance can be placed upon the cries of an excited crowd, and in this case, why should they have been angry with Paul and Silas?

6. To what extent, if any, do religious differences make people angry with each other to-day?

7. Verse 23. Why does God permit of such cruelty to his faithful servants, as illustrated in this case of Paul and Silas?

8. Verse 24. On what theory do you explain the possibility of any good man in prison, lying upon a raw back, with his feet fast in the stocks, and at the dark dismal hour of midnight singing for joy?

9. In looking back over their cruel sufferings at this time, and their experience in prison, would Paul and Silas be sorry, or glad, at the retrospect, and why?

10. Verse 25. Can you mention any circumstance so calamitous to a Christian, that prayer and praise cannot turn it into joy and victory?

11. Verse 26. Was this earthquake the result of what happened in the Philippian jail, or was it a natural coincidence only? Why?

12. Can you give any examples that the Lord to-day works out practically similar results of his people when they are in distress?

13. Verses 27, 28. Why did the jailor decide upon suicide, and has a man under any circumstances a right to take his own life? Why?

14. Verses 29, 30. Was it natural fear or religious conviction that now operated in the jailor? Why?

15. What did the jailor cry out to be saved from?

16. Verse 31. What is specifically meant by "Believing on the Lord Jesus?" (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

17. May a father, or a mother, believe in Jesus, so as to assure the salvation of their children? Give your reasons?

18. Verse 32. What is the "Word of the Lord," and may a person know that word first hand who is not personally acquainted with the Lord?

19. Verses 3, 34. What is the proof, that the grace of God can suddenly turn a cruel and brutal man into a tender hearted Christian?

20. Verses 35-40. Why may we be confident that there will be a happy ending to all our trials?

Stomach Was Bad.

Could Eat Hardly Anything.

When the stomach gets out of order the whole system seems to become affected in one way or an other. The breath becomes foul, the tongue furred, the appetite becomes disturbed, nausea and vomiting occur, there is a rising and souring of food caused by the acidity of the stomach, and the stomach and bowels become distended causing flatulency. Unless these symptoms are met with immediately, dyspepsia or some other serious trouble is liable to follow, as a consequence.

That grand old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that there is not another medicine on the market to-day that can compare with it for the cure of all disturbances of the stomach.

Miss Lillian E. Phillips, Plumweseep, N.B., writes: "My stomach was so bad I was in pain and misery. I could eat hardly anything. I had been treated by skillful doctors for it, but they did me no good. I was giving up in despair when I happened to hear of Burdock Blood Bitters. You can't think how fast it helped me, for I had only taken two bottles before I was better. I will recommend your medicine very highly to all my friends and sufferers."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

EFFORTS TO INCITE A HOLY WAR AGAINST BRITISH IN INDIA FAIL

Germans Sought to Stir Up Hill Tribes to a Jehad, Englishman Tells Herald Correspondent, and Told Them Kaiser was Mohammedan; but Amir of Afghanistan Proved True to Promise of Neutrality—Nearly Two Years of Effort.

London, June 15.—The German attempts to harass Great Britain in the East have been more than amazing. As have already been remarked in the New York Herald, and as has been shown by the interviews which have been published with Mr. Austen Chamberlain and Lord Islington, their efforts to create revolts in India failed eggregiously. But their incendiary campaign against the British in India went further than the bounds of the Empire.

In Afghanistan great efforts were made, and indeed are still being made, to stir up a Holy War against the British among the Mohammedans there. Lord Hardinge, who was Viceroy and governor general at the beginning of the war, was aware of this at the very commencement of the hostilities in the east. But his faith in the friendship of the Amir of Afghanistan for the British was such that His Excellency had no hesitation in taking what might otherwise have proved a grave risk and responsibility—a risk which could only have been justified by success; and that he was right has been amply proved.

On the frontiers of India—on the northwest frontiers particularly—are numerous warlike tribes to whom fighting is the very breath of life, but when it was put to Lord Hardinge that the thousands of Indian troops which constituted the army ever ready along the forntiers for defence against the periodical raids of the hill tribes were needed in France, when the Germans were sweeping through Belgium, Lord Hardinge had no hesitation in consenting to the release of the Indian army for service in Europe and elsewhere.

AMIR PROVED STEADFAST.

Now if ever was Germany's opportunity to incite the Afghans to an invasion of India, and to call upon the millions of Mohammedans there to engage in a holy war against the British. The Germans strove their utmost. But Lord Hardinge was right; the Amir was true to his trust.

Even as they had failed in India, as the Germans failed in Afghanistan. And meanwhile Territorials were sent to India to finish their training there, and take the place of the seasoned troops sent west. How the Germans have failed is shown in an illuminating interview which a Herald correspondent has had with Sir Francis Younghusband, K.C.I.E., whose life has practically been spent in India, both in the army and in the Indian political service as British resident in Indore and in Kashmir, and as British commissioner to Thibet. He is the author of many informing books and as far back as 1901 was decorated with the gold medal of the Royal Geographical Society.

Though the Germans, by means of propaganda and incendiary missionaries, may not even yet have given up all hope of inciting the Afghans, with the assistance of the northwestern hill tribes, to make a descent upon India, it is considered hardly possible that after nearly two years of failure they will succeed now.

"On the far side of the northwest frontier of India," said Sir Francis, "are war like and hot blooded races. It is from that direction that all conquerors of India, except the British, have broken through. India at the outset of the war despatched a far larger number of British and Indian troops than had ever before been sent from India. A large proportion of artillery was included."

ALL FAVORED PROJECT.

"And these forces had to fight in France, in Egypt, in Mesopotamia, in East Africa, in China. At this very time, too, the Germans were pressing hard towards Calais to strike at the very heart of the empire. There was a revolt engineered by Germans in South Africa. Indians were returning form America with German aid, to stir up revolution in India itself. The Emden was bombarding the coast towns of India and harrying merchants on the high sea routes. The Turks were preparing to cut the Suez Canal and sever India from England. What more fitting opportunity could be found for striking a blow at British power in India by launching the fierce tribesmen against it?

"The Germans saw this. Of recent years the Amir of Afghanistan has employed Turkish officers for the instruction of his army. More Turkish officers now appeared in his country. Germans also arrived with money and masses of infalmmatory literature.

There is always in Afghanistan a section bitterly and fanatically opposed to any friendship between Afghans and British. Both Turks and Germans naturally set to work on this material, mangnifying our reverses, glorifying their own successes. They tried to raise a Jehad or a Holy War. They made these wild tribesmen believe that the Kaiser was a Mohammedan and the divinely appointed protector of Islam, and they hoped to start off these Afghans, and with them thousands of headstrong tribesmen in the wake of the great conquerors of the past in an avalanche of invasion upon the open plains of India.

"It was a very obvious project for an enemy to form. But nearly twenty-two months have gone by and it has not yet succeeded. There have been raids and fights upon the frontier. There have in fact been seven serious attacks by independent tribesmen. But there never are long periods without raids and fights with one or another of these hill tribes. They could not exist without it. And the great outstanding fact is that the Amir of Afghanistan has stood steadfastly by the assurances of neutrality which he gave Lord Hardinge at the outbreak of the war. The Kaiser himself wrote the Amir letters trying to induce him to proclaim a Jehad, but the Amir has stood firm.

AMIR PRAISED BRITISH.

"I have never been in Afghanistan, but I have seen both the Amir and his father, Abdul Rahman Khan, the late Amir, and I remember the latter writing words of advice to his people in which after pointing out both astutely and relentlessly all our weak points, and especially the smallness of the British army, he gave this as his final word, that the British, though they invariably suffered disasters, yet were so loyal and so determined that they would spend their last rupee and send their last man so that they should come out victorious in the end. Perhaps these words of the great Amir are still remembered in Afghanistan. Anyhow, the present Amir, instead of rousing the Afghans and independent tribes against us, has actively discouraged them and imposed upon his governors an attitude of strict neutrality.

"And an invasion of India from the Northwest is no easy matter. We have been expecting that for more than a century and have been preparing for it. We have strategic railways up to the frontier at many points and strategic railways along it. The most vulnerable points are strongly defended. The British regiments which were sent from India to fight at Ypres have been replaced; India never was so strong in artillery as at the present moment. If ever there was a time when such an enterprise could have been attempted with any hope of success that time has passed.

INDIA ITSELF LOYAL.

"And at the back India itself is solidly loyal—loyal by sentiment and by interest. Indians know, too, that their material interests are bound up with the stability of British rule, under which the country has prospered as it never has prospered before. So on the outbreak of the war both chiefs and leaders of the educated classes came forward and declared themselves instantly and emphatically in favor of the British cause. The bulk of the people followed the lead thus given. And India itself would have resented any incursion of raiders from beyond the border.

"Fortunately also we have as wardens of the marches, the one in charge of the northwest frontier province, and the other in charge of Baluchistan two officers with many years' experience of this frontier—Lieutenant Colonel Sir George Roos-Keppel and Lieutenant Colonel Sir James Ramsay.

Under their general supervision the tribesmen are left to manage their own affairs in accordance with their own long established usage." They are employed in the every day work of administration as well as in watch and ward. There is a regular system of local self government and tribal responsibility. And from the tribesmen armed levies for the defence of the frontier are formed. Upon this system the contentment and tranquility of the British side of the border depends. The tribes under British rule have remained staunch and loyal to the connection. The frontiersmen themselves form a bulwark against invasion. The chance of success in an invasion of India is gone."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

With an air of lively smartness, this is a model that measures up to the correct standard for a trim, neat and becoming dress for practical wear in the home. Narrow banding is used to finish the round neck on a full blouse, which is pretty without a collar, and to give stronger outline to the closing at the left side. A pocket in the right side at a convenient point is a detail of interest. The four gored skirt is as graceful and flares as stylishly as a garment intended for better wear. It has a pocket with a buttoned lap in either side and is joined to the waist under a belt of the material. A raised waist line is used, and long or short sleeves will have cuffs finished with the banding to match the other trimmed parts.

The pattern is cut in sizes 36, 40 and 44 bust measure. To make in size 36 will require 5¼ yards of 36 inch material and ⅞ yards of banding.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

ASQUITH MEETS ELECTORS.

LADYBANK, Scotland, June 15.—In observance of the thirtieth anniversary of his election to the House of Commons from East Fife, Premier Asquith visited his constituency for the first time since the outbreak of the war, addressing a great meeting of his supporters, and many who in past years had been his opponents.

The Premier made a touching reference to the death of Earl Kitchener as "leaving a place in our constitutional life that none else can fill, and a memory that will live as long as the British Empire."

Lord Kitchener had bequeathed to the country an array of armies, said the Premier, and it was for the country to make the best use of these.

In a survey of the situation Premier Asquith declared that the Russian advance was one of the most brilliant feats of the war.

LIBERAL-MINDED MAID.

The fair-haired suitor rang the door bell. "Is Miss Blank at home?" he inquired.

"Oh, yes, sir," replied the maid and she ushered him into the drawing room.

Having waited for almost an hour he summoned the maid again.

"Did you forget to tell Miss Blank that I was here?" he asked impatiently.

"No, sir," was the reply. "Miss Blank hasn't got back from shopping yet."

"But you said she was at home."

"Yes, sir. She told me positively that she was always at home to you, sir."

Archdeacon Stuck Flays Life's Shams

In Columbia Baccalaureate Sermon He Assails Professionalized Philanthropy

SPEAKS WITH SCORN OF THE HYGIENIST WHO REGARDS ALL PEOPLE AS AUTOMATA TO BE CLEANED UP.

NEW YORK, June 15.—The Venerable Archdeacon Hudson Stuck of Alaska, delivering the bacca-laureate sermon yesterday to the candidates for degrees at Columbia, brought to the university gymnasium, on Morningside Heights, the direct and forceful language of the Yukon, his startling words sinking deep into the minds of the 2,500 students, guests and members of the faculty present. He assailed professionalised philanthropy as worked out in research laboratories of all descriptions, and urged the students to keep always before them the personal human touch in their relation to mankind.

President Butler and the Archdeacon, the latter in his surplice and clerical robes, marched at the end of the long procession of students and faculty, which crossed the entire campus to the entrance of the gymnasium in the grove.

Archdeacon Stuck took for his text the sixth chapter of St. Luke, the thirty-first verse: "And ye shall be the children of the Highest; for He is kind unto the thankful and the evil."

His sermon was a plea for service to mankind, but in the attitude of what he terthed the amateur rather than that of the professional; the first keeping always uppermost the human, personal touch, the latter regarding man as a thing detached, to be classified and indexed away in the laboratory, plotted in curves and regarded in algebraic formulae. Regardless of the fact that he was speaking to the many applicants for university degrees, teeming with the classroom and laboratory life of four years or more, the Archdeacon, even as admitted by him, at the risk of being classified as a reactionist, flayed the professional philanthropists, and the professional research investigators, many of whom, he intimated, were working solely to justify their endowments, heralding and proclaiming immature and even deceptive discoveries. The professional attitude results, he said, whenever science lays its hands on philanthropy.

"I have always had a sort of dread" he said, "of trained sociologists, of anthropologists with a turn for practical benvolence, of political economists, of phychological pedagogues and graduates in similar subjects. With their experimental laboratories their card indexes and filing cabinets, their tabulation of statistics, their reduction of people to categories; with that last glorious achievement of theirs, the plotting of a curve, they are always in danger of evacuating the human personal element out of their work and thinking of men and women in algebraic formulae. Some of them lay tribes and races as ruthlessly under the tyranny of curves as the mediaeval Popes laid the natives of Christendom under interdicts.

"As soon as philanthrop becomes professionalized it takes to itself a marvellous change: it no longer evokes gratitude, it provokes antagonism, and we are almost at once confronted with the sarcasm about Organized charity, skimped and iced.

In the name of a cautious, statistical Christ.

"The relief granted may be just as real, just as necessary, but the whole spirit is different, the whole attitude is changed; any sort of warm human sympathy seems destroyed, and the obligation presses intolerably upon the sensitive recipient."

At another part of his sermon he said:

"Now I hold no brief for dirt. I have no objection to everybody and everything being cleaned up, in reason. But I am fond of pointing out to certain young physicians with whom I come in contact that all living things are necessarily dirty. An artificial flower of wax or porcelain may be perfectly clean, but the leaf of a real rose, with its damask bloom and its delicious sweetness is literally swarming with bacteria. A marble bust or statue may be rendered surgically sterile, but the antiseptic baby and the prophylactic pup are forever mere figures of speech even in the best regulated families.

"I am one of that small and quiet negligible minority, as it seems, who prefer to drink from a cup or glass that some one else may possibly have drunk from, rather than from an exclusive and greasy paper bag.

"Let me repeat, here is no plea for dirt. I have no objection to being cleaned up in reason, but if I had to choose, I had rather be human and dirty than inhuman and clean."

Speaking of professional theologians the Archdeacon said:

"I doubt if ever a professional theologian, as a professional theologian, for many of them have been much more, ever helped to make a Christian since Christianity began."

Suffered No End of Pain FROM BACKACHES.

If a pain attacks you in the back you should stop and think what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in nine cases out of every ten they are—you should attend to them at once, as it is impossible to have a well, strong back unless the kidneys are performing their functions in a proper manner.

Anyone with a bad back should appreciate how to get a good one. It is a very simple matter. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. They regulate the kidneys, and there is no further excuse for any kidney trouble to exist.

Mrs. E. J. Graves, Ottawa, Ont., writes: "My complaint lies with my kidneys. I have suffered no end of pain with them, and with backaches. I had tried everything, so I thought, until a friend advised me to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. I did try them, and one box helped me fine, so I got another, and now feel that I cannot recommend them too highly to anyone suffering with kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are the original kidney pills. Do not accept any substitutes put up under similar names. Always see that our trade mark "The Maple Leaf" appears on the lable and wrapper.

Russians Driving Westward To Cut Austrian Communications

Pushing Forward Toward Stanislau, Czar's Forces Are Making Progress While They Are Advancing Steadily in the Indentation They Have Made in the Lines at Lutsk---Germans Fear a Big Allied Offensive on West

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Examiner Special:

LONDON, June 16.—With Czernowitz reported captured, the Russian offensive is now driving westward toward Stanislau in an effort to completely cut Austrian communications between Lemberg and all of the southern points of the line.

Reports from Berlin, Petrograd and Vienna all make patent that the Austrians in an effort to prevent complete routs have stiffened their defense. This is most apparent in sectors directly east of Lemberg.

The Russians continue to advance steadily in the indentation they have made in the line at Lutsk.

PARIS (French Official Communique), June 16.—After a period of infantry inaction of forty-eight hours, the Germans launched violent infantry attacks against the Thiaumont Farm, Caillette Woods sector of the Verdun front, east bank of the Meuse last night.

All of the attacks were repulsed.

At times the French artillery fire was so heavy that the Germans were killed in their trenches before they were able to flee.

"On the west bank of the Meuse," said the statement, "the Germans launched seven counter-attacks on the slope of Dead Man's Hill. All of these were repulsed, the French imprisoning 185 Germans.

"On the east bank toward six p.m., the Germans made a powerful offensive north of Thiaumont Farm from Hill 321 to 320. All the attacks were checked by the fire of our machine guns, the Germans losing heavily.

"Further attacks were launched at 10 p.m. on the edge of Caillette Woods. These were checked by the French curtain fire. The Germans were unable at some points to jump out of their trenches."

In the official statement of last night the French claimed the capture of 130 prisoners when they took a German trench south of Dead Man's Hill.

THE GERMANS FEAR AN OFFENSIVE IN WEST

LONDON, June 16.—The Germans apprehensive of a big Allied offensive on the western front are continually reinforcing their lines there, despatches from Holland agree. From Knocke in Belgian territory occupied by the Germans, troop laden tram cars are going toward the front in never ending procession. These are covered with green boughs to prevent Allied airmen from seeing them readily.

On the streets here, in clubs, in restaurants, and on trains, persons discuss with marked interest the cryptic sentence in the French semi-official report of Wednesday which reads: "The Germans in front of Verdun are maintaining an attitude of expectation in view of the menace of events which they feel are becoming more and more imminent."

To most it means that the big drive is soon to start, at a strategic moment when the increasing momentum of the Russian drive will leave German commanders with no choice but to have their line smashed somewhere either in France or in Russia..

FRENCH DEPUTIES IN SECRET SESSION

PARIS, June 16.—The French Chamber of Deputies went into secret session this afternoon to interpolate the Government on the defensive preparations made by France prior to the attack at Verdun.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR AGAIN MENTIONS PEACE

BERLIN, June 16.—Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg addressed the Reichstag unexpectedly during the third reading of the budget this afternoon.

The Chancellor said: "Six months ago I first spoke about our readiness for peace on the basis of the military situation. Events have justified this confidence. We are now stronger on all fronts than before. If considering this, I declared that we were ready for peace there is now no reason to regret my words, although our offer had no success with our enemies. We will neglect nothing which might shorten the terrible sufferings of European nations in the midst of this conflagration."

Russians Increase Their Bag Of Austrians To 164,000 Now

PETROGRAD, June 16.—The Russians, on the offensive along the Austrian front from the Kovel region to the Pruth, have taken an additional prisoners, it is officially announced to-day.

This brings the total for the offensive to 164,000.

PETERBORO BOYS LEAVE WITH THE HEAVY BATTERY

Six Local Residents in the Draft Which Left Cobourg Yesterday on the Way East to Complete Their Training

MORE HAVE JOINED

Six local boys left Cobourg last night in the fourth draft to the Cobourg Heavy Battery. They were Gunners Robert H. Thompson, Sydney E. Armstrong, Kingsley Kenyon Clarke Thackery, M. Saunders and Fred Preston. A few Peterborough people braved the elements and motored to Cobourg yesterday to say farewell.

The members of the unit fell in at the Armouries at 9.30 o'clock and, after a few words of farewell from Mayor Duncan and others, including Major McKinnon, O. C., who was disappointed that he could not accompany the members of the draft to the front, they paraded to the Grand Trunk Station, where Cobourg citizens and visitors lined the platform. On all sides were heard favourable comments upon the fine body of men going to do their bit.

The draft was composed of fifty men, under Lieut. J. E. Lane. The latter will be remembered by a number of people in this city, as he formerly attended the Peterborough Normal School.

On Monday night in Victoria Opera House, Cobourg, the Cobourg Heavy Battery Overseas draft put on a minstrel show and Assault-at-Arms, a couple of the Peterborough boys taking part. The proceeds were to be used to buy tobacco for the Battery boys.

Though of course nothing has been announced about the date of sailing there is a general feeling that they will not be detained in Halifax very long.

In the next draft, which is being recruited in Cobourg now there are already quite a few local fellows.

THE 93rd FOOTBALL LEAGUE IS RUNNING UP RECORD SCORE

Peterborough Soldiers Beat 156th by 10 Goals to Nil---Have Scored 26 Goals to 0 in Three Games---Married Men of Army Service Corps Draft Have Grievance----Gossip From Barriefield Camp and General Military News

BARRIEFIELD NEWS.

BARRIEFIELD WAR CAMP, June 15.—The 93rd Battalion soccer team is making a show out of the other battalions in camp. So far the Peterborough soldiers have played three games and have rolled up the huge score of 26 goals to nil. Last Saturday they walloped the 130th of Smith's Falls 7 to 0, on Monday they ran away from the 146th of Kingston 9 to 0, and on Wednesday night they beat both records by piling up the monster score of 10 goals to nil against the 156th of Brockville.

The 93rd had all the best of Wednesday's game, as the score indicates. Sergt.-Maj. Hartshorn winning the toss for the 93rd, decided to kick down hill. Pte. Quinn of the 156th set the ball in motion. Shaw getting possession shot at goal, the goalkeeper saving. 156th getting away to the other end Marsh cleared from the throw in Hartshorn passed out to King who scored the 1st goal for the 93rd. From the kick-off Hardman got away along the wing, supported by Shaw. Russell, the opposing back, cleared. West was putting in some useful defence work and did not let the 156th get far away. King received a pass from Hartshorn, made towards the goal, Russell again clearing from a difficult position.

Stockdale next tried a shot for goal which went wide, the backs giving a corner kick. Hardman taking the corner kick placed it nicely in front of goal, the backs again clearing nicely. Stockdale at this time missed an easy chance to close in. From the goal kick Hartshorn took the ball along the wing and centred, the shot going behind. From the goal kick, Stockdale getting possession just outside the penalty line scored with a fine shot.

Russell in clearing from Hardie, kicked over his own line, and from the ensuing corner Hardman shot into goal and had hard luck in not scoring. Hartshorn at this time was centring in good style, Shaw heading one of his passes into the goal mouth, which only just missed scoring. Mitchell got away on the right wing but shot wide. The 93rd were having all the play and were keeping their opponents busy. Stockdale getting a pass from West made tracks towards the goal, getting in a fine shot which the goalkeeper put over the bar. West was getting in some fine work in the centre and beating 3 or 4 opponents took a pot at goal, Russell clearing. From the goal kick Hardman got away, passing to Shaw. From Shaw's centre Hartshorn scored.

From the kick off Hardman got the ball and centred, King taking the shot at goal, which struck the post and went behind. From the goal kick Hartshorn centred and the goalkeeper cleared. From the ensuing corner, which was taken by Hardman, West got possession from some distance out and scored a beauty.

The 156th could make very little headway, the defence of the 93rd being sound. Hardman getting away on the wing, shot into the goalkeeper's hands. King being close up rushed the ball through for another goal. A free kick for the 156th gained very little ground. Hartshorn getting away again was too much hampered by Russell to centre, the ball rolling outside. Half time arrived, with the score 5 goals to nil.

On restarting West put in a fine shot which only just missed the mark, Hartshorn centring to King who gave the goalkeeper all he could handle. Norman was playing a fine game, putting in some good work and hard luck in not scoring from a long shot. Quinn and Mitchell getting away for the 156th were stopped by West who, after running through the whole defence, scored a fine goal.

From the kick-off Hardie made tracks towards the goal, passing out to Hartshorn who centred to Hardman. That player put in a useful shot which went wide. Halfhide and Robertson made a runa long the west wing, Robinson clearing finely when close in. Stockdale heading into goal from a pass by Hardman, had hard luck in not adding to the score. Stockdale centring to King, that player scored a beauty. From the kick-off Russell rushed the ball down the field, but was pulled up by Marsh. The ball travelled at a good pace to the other end, King shooting when close in, the backs clearing at the expense of a corner. Hardman taking the corner kick placed the ball in the front of the goal, Hardman heading through for another goal.

From the kick-off King shot hard, striking the crosbar with a terrific shot, the ball rebounding into play. Hardman shot across the goal mouth, Stockdale just missing from a header. Give and take play ensuing for the next few minutes, eventually the ball came out to Hartshorn who centred to Stockdale, who came very near scoring, his shot just missing the bar. From the goal kick Stockdale shot over to Shaw, who headed into the goal mouth, only to be cleared again by the goalkeeper. Hartshorn banging the ball into the centre gave King another opportunity to score, but the opponents packing their goal made it impossible to get through. In clearing the ball travelled to West, who took a crack at goal, the ball going wide. The same payer shot in again directly afterwards having hard luck not getting through. Hardman was getting in lots of work, putting a nice centre across to King, who scored another goal.

Immediately after the ball was set in motion, Hardie nailed on to the ball, passing out to King for that player to still increase the score. From the kick-off West returned nicely to Stockdale, who shot outside. The 93rd players were all playing fine ball and only for the sterling defence of Russell he score would have been much larger.

The whistle sounded time with the score 10 goals to nil in favour of the 93rd. Too much credit cannot be given to the 93rd players, who certainly played well throughout the game.

The line-up was as follows:

ADMIRALTY'S REPORT OF LORD KITCHENER'S END

Was Called to Enter Captain's Boat But None of Survivors Know Whether He Did So or Not—Only Twelve Rescued.

HAMPSHIRE WAS MINED

LONDON, June 15.—The Admiralty issued to-night an official report from Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, commander-in-chief of the Grand Fleet on the sinking of the cruiser Hampshire and the loss of Lord Kitchener and his staff. None of the 12 survivors of the Hampshire saw Lord Kitchener leave the ship. The captain of the cruiser was heard calling to Lord Kitchener, then on the quarterdeck, to come to the bridge, near the captain's boat, and then was heard calling to Lord Kitchener to get into the boat. But none of the survivors know whether the Secretary of War entered the boat nor what became of the boat afterwards.

Others of the ship's boats were broken in half in the lowering, but three rafts were launched safely. Although there were from 50 to 70 men aboard each raft, only the 12 survived the exposure and exhaustion. The Admiralty's statement follows:

ADMIRAL JELLICOE'S REPORT.

"From the report of the enquiry into the loss of the cruiser Hampshire, in which the 12 survivors were examined, the following conclusions are obtained: The Hampshire was proceeding west of the Orkney in a heavy gale. The seas were breaking over the ship, necessitating a partial battening.

"Between 7.30 and 7.45 p.m. the vessel was mined, and began to settle by the bows, heeling to starboard, and finally went down in 15 minutes.

"Orders were given for all hands to go to their established stations for abandoning ship. Some hatches were opened and the ships company went on to their stations. Efforts were made unsuccessfully to lower boats, which were broken in half during the process, their occupants being thrown into the water.

"As the men were moving to their stations Lord Kitchener, accompanied by a naval officer, appeared. The latter called: 'Make way for Lord Kitchener!' Both went to the quarterdeck. Subsequently four military officers were seen on the quarterdeck walking aft on the port side.

CALLED TO LORD KITCHENER

"The captain called to Lord Kitchener to come to the forebridge, near the captains boat. He was heard calling to Lord Kitchener to get into the boat, but no one is able to say whether Lord Kitchener entered the boat nor what occurred to this boat. Nor did anyone see any boats clear the ship.

"Three rafts were safely launched, with from 50 to 70 men aboard each, and cleared the ship. It was light until 11 o'clock.

"Though the rafts with large numbers of men got away, in one case out of 70 men aboard six only survived. The latter report that the men gradually dropped off or died aboard of exhaustion and exposure. Some must have perished trying to land on the rocky coast after exposure. Some died after landing."

In forwarding the report the commander-in-chief of the grand fleet says: "I cannot adequately express the sorrow felt by men and by the officers of the fleet at the fact that the distinguished soldier and great man lost his life while under the care of the fleet."

Bale of Goods Arrived Safely

Regular Monthly Meeting of the Progressive Club

The Peterborough Progressive Club has lately received the following letter:

Dear Madam:—I am pleased to tell you that that the box and bail of goods from the Peterborough Progressive Club arrived safetly at the Bathorough Court Hospital on May 18th, and we unpacked it on May 20th and found all the articles in excellent condition and most acceptable, the sheets and pillow cases most particularly, and will you please convey the thanks of the officers of Voluntary Aid Department Kent 74 to those who have so kindly sent them to us.

We shall, I fear, find it increasingly difficult to keep our expenses down as time goes on and the war continues, and are most grateful for the help given us by kind friends. I fear there is no doubt that the wounded will be coming over in larger numbers before long. With many thanks.

Yours sincerely,
Katharine F. Potts,
Commandant V.A.D. Kent 74.

The regular monthly meeting of the Progressive Club was held on Wednesday and it was decided to send a shipment of surgical supplies to the Serbian Relief.

THE PRICE OF UNION.

Without pronouncing upon the merits of church union, it seems to create disunion in the Presbyterian Church, and the worst form of disunion—litigation, whose end, in point of time and expenditure of money and heartburnings cannot be foreseen. The leaders of the opposition to church union, the champion of the autonomy and existence of the Presbyterian Church of Canada." It looks as if the price to be paid for church union will be high.

A TRIBUTE TO MERIT.

For many reasons there is occasion for regret that Mr. Goodwill has terminated his relations with the Children's Aid Society as its efficient secretary and solicitor. He seemed to possess in a very large and desirably complete degree the qualities that made him a good official in his dual capacity. He took a deep interest in the work, and this interest developed a large knowledge of it and of its requirements. This interest, too, developed a sympathy and gentleness which is a quite necessary feature of the equipment of such an office as he held. We know a good deal about Mr. Goodwill; though he was not prone to seeking prominence, yet he appreciated the value of publicity in the interests of his society, and in his relations with the press he was the personification of courtesy and kindness. If he has no other monument to his usefulness as a citizen and his achievements as an altruist and public benefactor, his record as a faithful and efficient official of the Children's Aid Society will constitute one, which he may regard with pride. Redeeming features of Mr. Goodwill's retirement, are the fact that his personal interest and sympathy with the work will not be withdrawn, and the further fact that his successor, Mr. Wearing, will, it is morally certain, worthily maintain the standard of efficiency and interest that his predecessor has impressed upon the office.

OFFICE IS THE MAIN THING.

The Toronto News is talking in a way that suggests that we can't have things right in this country till we have governments of a limited term of office—on one side of politics anyway. After pointing out that the Liberal government in Nova Scotia has held office for a third of a century, the News says:

> In decent regard for the British system of representative government, the Murray administration should be defeated.
>
> This may be desirable for both partisan and administrative—especially party—reasons; but the essence of "British representative government" is the controlling force of the popular voice, expressed through the use of the ballot. The Liberal Government in Nova Scotia may have outlived its usefulness, and may deserve defeat, but "decent regard for the British system of representative government" puts the fate of the government in the hands of the electorate. If the people are tired of the Murray government; if it has been untrue to its trust; if the interests of the province have suffered under its administration; if it has developed corrupt methods, the people have the power of disciplining the government, and especially in this time of popular distaste for corrupt governments and for corruption and crooked dealing by governments. If the government is bad, the people will give the government its release from office. There is no other way to get a change: no other way to bring relief to electors "who have been voting for nine or ten years for leaders who are still excluded from office"—office seems to be the main point with the News. It has not a word of condemnation of the policy or course of the Liberal government. "There are no outstanding issues," it says; "it is clear, however, that the Liberal party has held office too long in Nova Scotia." If the electors happen to agree in this, with the News, they will put its party friends into office

JOHN BULL AND SONS.

The Canadian soldiers have made Canada more worth while. Ever since they set foot upon the war field they have been demonstrating their superiority as fighting men and showing in one "gallant and successful incident" after another the quality, the importance of the Dominion from whence they came. We Canadians abroad and at home are making sacrifices, but they are worth while; they are the price of freedom and liberty, and incidentally they give our British brethren a new perspective of regard of our quality of mind and muscle, of soul and spirit. Heretofore a section of British officialdom and a section of the unthinking laity have been accustomed to think and speak of us with some flippancy of tone; use the word, "colonials" with an accent of scarcely veiled contempt. But of late the tone has been changed, and the Dominions and "colonials" have shown themselves to be factors in Empire constitution worth considering; and the genuine statesmen and leading men of the Mother country have not been slow nor chary in giving acknowledgment. Premier Asquith at Ladybank, a few days ago, more than hinted at the wisdom and necessity of establishing closer and more intimate imperial inter-relations. He acknowledged that the fabric of Empire must be refashioned after the war and the relations of outlying Dominions to Great Britain brought under closer scrutiny. This statement suggests closer imperial connection. But, whatever was in Premier Asquith's mind as to the form this closer relationship should take, it is certain that the sentiment of the Dominions, the consideration of their individual interests, have for background complete autonomy. It is the possession of this in the past that has developed the spirit and contributed to the fact of political and material development. Whatever form Premier Asquith's suggested rapprochement may take, the autonomy, self-government, of the Dominions must be the indispensable thing, whose integrity must be preserved. We have had demonstrated that this condition of quasi political independence, is not incompatible with the most intimate and energetic and harmonious cooperation. The empire is like the human body, with one heart, one controlling spirit, but its several members with practically independent functions, all cooperate to an agreed end. When, after the war, we shall be able to present a further demonstration of the vital place in the fabric of Empire occupied by the Dominions, we shall be justified in demanding consideration of individual claims to broad recognition in whatever adjustment of inter-imperial relations may ensue. In the large sentimental sense the Empire is, as has been grandly demonstrated, a magnificent and integral unit; a fact which points to the justice and wisdom of taking the essential elements, the governing Dominions, into full partnership in the imperial firm of John Bull & Sons.

THE DEFENCE OF YPRES.

In connection with the controversy which Sir Sam Hughes has opened, it is interesting to read an extract from "The Undying Story," by Mr. W. Douglas Newton, a book which has attracted some attention. Mr. Newton says:

> "'Take Ypres at all costs,' was the order delivered to the German army facing Sir Henry Rawlinson's weak corps, and the enemy, strong with every fibre of strength, certainly did their best and very certainly died. Ypres was the key of the battle. It stands on a gangling of roads and railways that command the entire tract of the countryside. Take Ypres and the battle was won. Take Ypres and the roads to Calais and the coasts were open. That master rhetorician of Prussia, the Emperor, had demanded the coast and Calais with all the passionate flowers of his speech. His armies, whipped by words, were out to hack their way through to the sea against all odds."
>
> Canadians will be glad to have the assurance regarding the value of the Ypres salient. Perhaps they do not need the assurance, but the utterances of the Minister of Militia are at least disturbing and distressing to those whose sons and friends have fallen in the heroic defence of this point of vantage. If the Kaiser's order was to "take Ypres at all costs," it is our part to hold it at all costs, and we may all feel that the defence in which Canadians took place was not only heroic but dictated by wisdom.—Toronto Star.

CALGARY TEACHERS GIVEN ALTERNATIVE.

Calgary, June 16. — The Calgary School Board have decided not to re-engage any members of its staff at the close of their engagement, June 30th, who are unmarried, of recruitable age, and without valid reasons for not enlisting. The chairman of the board and the chief recruiting officer for the province are to be the judges of their eligibility.

Rt. Hon. Herbert Asquith The Pre-eminent Prime Minister

Two days ago Mr. Asquith, First Lord of the Treasury of the United Kingdom, celebrated with his constituents of the "Ancient Kingdom of Fife" the thirtieth anniversary of his first election as their representative in the British House of Commons. At that time he had already made himself well known as an honour man in Oxford University, and as a ten-year barrister with a rapidly-growing practice. Through all sorts of political changes he has never since had to seek another constituency, and, if one may judge from present indications, his generation-old relation to them is likely to remain continuous till he disappears altogether from public life.

Mr. Asquith's political career has not been without the spice of variety. Mr. Gladstone, with a keen eye for rising young Liberals, selected him in 1892 as the mover of the motion of want of confidence which caused the overthrow of Lord Salisbury's Government, and for three years he held the portfolio of the Home Department. For the eleven years between 1895 and 1906 he assisted his fellow-Liberals in Opposition to "plough the sands"—using his own apt expression—but he gradually forged to the front as the most formidable critic of the Salisbury-Balfour-Chamberlain Government and when it was overthrown in 1905 he became Chancellor of the Exchequer under Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's Premiership. Since 1908 he has been Prime Minister; an office he has held longer continuously than any of his predecessors except William Pitt, who had the involuntary aid of the French Revolutionists and Napoleon Bonaparte to keep him in office from 1783 to 1801.

During his regime he has played with marvellous versatility and continuous success the part of a great opportunist, in the very best sense of that term: as set off against the uncompromising "doctrinaire". If he could not secure from Parliament and the public what he thought best for the country, he compromised by getting as near to what he wanted as circumstances permitted. In his opinion, as Wellington expressed it, when he "turned his back on himself" in the matter of Roman Catholic emancipation, "the King's Government must be carried on," and as he had better reason to believe in himself than he had to believe in the other men available as leaders about him in Parliament, he will stand in history as, not a small "trimmer," but a great "statesman."

Mr. Asquith has not in his make-up a trace of Macchiavellianism; he is a rare compound of transparent sincerity in his views, and exceptional ingenuity in adapting means to ends. His first sagacious step was to hand over the Exchequer to Mr. Lloyd George, and when the House of Lords undertook to deal adversely with the latter's budgets he secured the Royal assent to a measure embodying the greatest change that has been made in the constitution of Parliament since the Union Act of 1800. When the Carson menace arose in Ulster he took to himself the War portfolio, and when the greatest war of all history broke out he selected as his successor the foremost war organizer of the world, Lord Kitchener. When one of his colleagues failed to keep Ireland peaceful he took over the Irish portfolio. Over and over again, in Parliament and on the platform, he has made the most notable speeches that have been made on the war: its progress and certain outcome. In none of these speeches has he risen to a greater height or held out a higher hope, or kept his feet more firmly on the ground of solid, because informed, assurance, than he did in his anniversary address at Ladybank.—The Globe.

DEMOCRATS AGAIN CHOOSE WOODROW WILSON AS LEADER

Harmonious Convention at St. Louis Worked Smoothly and Tamely

ST. LOUIS, June 15.—The Democratic National Convention reconvened shortly after 9 o'clock to-night with the announced purpose of remaining in continuous session until it had renominated President Wilson and Vice-President Marshall, adopted a platform and transacted all other business brought before the representatives of the party.

All the vice-presidential booms had been effectually killed off by President Wilson's announcement that he desired the renomination of Mr. Marshall. The platform committee, wearied by an all-day session remained at work drawing up the declaration of principles so that it might be brought in before an adjournment was taken and the work of the convention might be finished. A session lasting well into Friday morning was assured.

To-night, for the first time since the convention began, the big hall was completely filled. The convention's sudden decision to-day to proceed with nominations and finish up to-night instead of prolonging the session through to-morrow and probably Saturday, as had been planned, let down the bars and the speculators unloaded their tickets at considerable loss.

The crowd yielded to the rapping of the gavel long enough to hear the prayer and then made repeated demands for a speech from William J. Bryan.

Mr. Bryan's speech was a ringing endorsement of President Wilson's administration. He alluded to differences of opinion that may exist, or may have existed, as to particular measures or particular acts, but declared the party stood united in every state and ready for the battle.

Official Opening of North Toronto Station Of Canadian Pacific

General Manager of the Eastern Lines of C. P. R. the Guest of Honour at Banquet—Thousands of People Turned Out For the Opening —New Station a Magnificent Structure

TORONTO, June 15.—There was a representative gathering at the National Club Toronto last night on the occasion of honouring Mr. A. D. Mactier the General Manager of the Eastern lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway when Mayor T. Church presided at the preliminary proceedings to the official opening ceremony of the North Toronto station of the Canadian Pacific which took the form of a banquet. There were present amongst others Mr. Mactier, Sir James Carroll, M. G. H. Ham, C. B. Foster, W. B. Howard, W. F. McLean, M. P., J. T. Arundel, W. D. Matthews, director of the C. P. R. and Alderman and members of the Board of Trade.

After the inner man had been properly filled Mayor Church eugolistical ly welcomed the genial General Manager of the Canadian Pacific whom they were honouring to-night. Many important matters had been overcome by the city of Toronto during the past eighteen months. The ioity secured the public ownership of the docks through the assistance of Mr. Leonard and Mr. Mactier and that credit belonged to the Canadian Pacific. With regard to the union station, he was glad to say that the C. P. R. had always been ready not only to do their share of the work but were ready with the money. There was a hitch with some other company, but the C. P. R. had never been backward. Through their efforts they had a station at North Toronto second to none in America and he left that a matter to decide for themselves when they saw it. About six months ago the question arose as to what to do with the old station and for some time it had been thought that it would make a splendid site for a market as North Toronto was the gateway of the East and the West.

He was gratified to say that the C. P. R. gratefully consented to turn the old station over to the city for a new public market. Mr. Mactier met the Queen City in a noble manner and to-day it was a red letter day in the history of North Toronto and a greater Yonge street. He could not speak too highly of the able and brilliant manner in which Mr. Mactier had handled the situation.

Mr. A. D. Mactier, General Manager of the C. P. R. in his opening remarks alluded to the presence of Sir James Carroll that evening as New Zealand's greatest orator, so that he must ask them to take his words with all sincerity instead of any brilliancy of language.

It was very true there was a good feeling between the city of Toronto and the C. P. R. and he had always received the greatest courtesy that could possibly be extended by the controllers and aldermen. He believed that if the people in Europe had been able to get together and show their cards there would have been a better feeling and no war. They were always willing to get together and discuss matters and reach some amiable arrangement even if they did not always see eye to eye. In reference to the new station at North Toronto h only hoped that they would soon see it so well packed as to necessitate an extension further East.

CEREMONY AT THE STATION

The ceremony at the station was a gigantic success. The public turned out in thousands and the city had elaborately decorated the depot with bunting. The 48th Highlanders and the 220th Overseas Battalion were in attendance and the bands of the two regiments enhanced the proceedings with appropriate selections.

Mayor Church again enlarged on the relations between the City and C. P. R. and Mr. A. D. Mactier in declaring the station open for business in the name of the Canadian Pacific expressed the hope that the public would show the company were justified in the building of the station by using it to such an extent as to soon justify its extension. Mr. W. F. McLean, M. P., spoke and congratulated the Canadian Pacific on their foresight.

The design of the new station is a free adaptation of the Italian renaissance to the requirements of the present day. It is a single story building faced externally with tyndall limestone from the Tyndall quarries, Manitoba. The choice of this Canadian stone has been justified by the excellent color effect of the masonry in the mass, the effect equal to any that could have been obtaind by the importation of the better known building stones from the States.

A large and spacious waiting room 70 x 50 of lofty proportions occupies the centre portion of the structure, marked on the South elevation of the building by three large semi-circular headed windows. It faces the South with the main entrance centrally placed on the front to East and West of this central block are two subsidiary wings roofed at a lower level and devoted to station facilities, that to the East the men's and women's rooms with their respective lavatories and that to the West two ticket offices. To the north of the waiting room is the concourse beyond which are the parcel, baggage and express rooms, opening from the concourse is the Midway, which is 20-0 wide and 150-0 long passing underneath the tracks and from which access is had to the various overhead platforms. Flanking the building at its Northwest corner is the clock tower rising to the height of 140 and four large clock dials, 8 feet in diameter will be a great convenience to the entire neighbourhood. The vestibule under tower leads to the concourse. A sidewalk "protected by a marquee" is laid along the South and West sides of the station so that patrons may enter either at the main entrance, centrally on the South side or at the tower vestibule, the expectation being that the latter entrance will be used by those passengers who have already secured tickets and only require to pass directly to the trains, relieving the main waiting room of much of the congestion that might otherwise occur. A private driveway also runs along the West side of the station so that vehicles may drive up to either entrance and pass through under the tracks to the baggage and express rooms and out on Yonge St., to the North of the station. Internally the waiting room, tower vestibule and concourse are lined with marble for their entire height, the architectural effect being obtained by the use of different coloured marbles all set in practically the same plane so as to avoid as far as possible all offsets and other dirt collecting projections. The plaster ceilings are treated in a broad manner with large panels. The Midway is lined with glazed brick for its full height as are the stairs leading up to the platforms at night. The main waiting room will be illuminated by four large broze standards each toped with a cluster of frosted bulbs and a large reflector. A complete system of electric clocks of British manufacture has been installed. Of this the large clock in the tower forms a part. All ornamental iron work, plastering, marble work, heating, ventilating plumbing, electic work, etc., have all been carried out by Toronto firms wherever possible, and there are but few exceptions. All materials and labour employed in the construction of the building are of Canadian of British origin, and Canadian timber has been used for all wood work whether rough lumber or finished mill work this being one of the requirements of the C. P. R. in connection with all their work under construction.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine loos the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured cold which a friend said would soon put to in the grave."

Enemy Forces Unable To Resume Verdun Struggle

Germans Use Entire Division in Last Battle East of the Meuse--Vaux Plateau Held Under French Guns

A DESPERATE STRUGGLE

SUCCESS ON HILL NO. 321 COMPELS CROWN PRINCE TO CALL HALT IN OPERATIONS.

PARIS, June 16.—The fighting around Verdun once more has died down, from sheer exhaustion of the combatants.

An entire division, half of whom were Bavarians and half Pomeranians was used up by the Germans in twelve separate attempts on Monday to storm the French position north of Thiaumont. From the position the French flanking fire prevents the enemy from advancing on Vaux plateau. No result having been attained by nightfall, fresh troops were brought up and an attempt made to turn the position from the southwest. After a desperate struggle a footing was obtained in some of the trenches on Hill No 321 half a mile west of Thiaumont and a mile east of Bras.

No effort was made to increase this advantage owing probably to the losses on Monday which, according to prisoners, were exceptionally heavy. A man belonging t the Sixteenth Bavarian infantry stated that his regiment had been held in reserve for a big offensive against the last forts of Verdun, but that it had been thrown in to support the troops attacking Thiaumont and had lost nearly a third of its effectives.

Sapp's High Hat Has Others Faded To a Sweat Band

St. Louis, June 16.—The reporter went out among the Democrats to find out, "Why is a high hat?"

He interviewed hundreds of statesmen and the answer invariably was: "A high hat is to talk through."

Among others approached was National Democratic Committeeman William Fauntleroy Sapp of Galena, Kansas, perhaps the most able and distinguished high-hatting, high-hatter that the world has ever known. As a high-hatter of parts, Mr. Sapp as all his high-hatted competitors faded to a mere sweat band.

First of all, Mr. Sapp believes that no high hat is complete without a frock coat and a thoughtful countenance. He wears them all.

It is said by persons in a position to know that Mr. Sapp has worn his high hat through sheer determination and a political career of 35 years. The high hat is a part of Mr. Sapp. The rest of him is divided into equal parts of dignity, frock coat and national committeeman.

Something—his hat or something—weighs very heavily on Mr. Sapp's mind. He, it was, who brought the suggestion from all the others that a high hat is to talk through

Gained 450 Pounds In Five Years

SPECIAL COFFIN CONSTRUCTED FOR BURIAL OF WOMAN VICTIM OF ELEPHANTIASIS.

NEW YORK, June 16.—A victim of elephantasis, for which there is said to be no cure, Mrs. Annie Frey, thirty-four years old died at her home. At the time of her death she weighed 590 pounds.

Because of her weight, for eight months Mrs. Frey had been unable to leave her bedroom, the doors being too narrow. When she retired it required the efforts of nine persons to lift her into bed.

For the burial on Saturday an undertaker had constructed a special coffin and it will be necessary to reinforce a hearse to carry the body to the cemetery. In order to get the coffin from the apartment, which is on an upper floor, one of the windows had been torn out and a derrick will be erected upon the roof to swing the coffin to the ground.

Five years ago Mrs. Frey weighed 140 pounds. From some infection, believed to be the bite of an insect, she contracted elephantiasis and began to increase in weight. She went to Bellevue Hospital for treatment several times, but failed to be cured

Mrs. Frey is survived by her husband. John Frey, and by two sons seven and five years old.

Drug-Crazed Youth Begs To Go To Hospital

Rochester, June 16. — Visible evidence of the ravages of drugs was produced in the police court when Harry Kelly, aged 28, was arraigned on the charge of having in his possession morphine and other narcotics. Although a young man Kelly's complexion was ghastly, his arms twitched, his penetrating grey eyes rolled and when he spoke it appeared as if he were suffering severe pain. There was no mistaking the fact that Kelly was a drug victim, and he admitted it to Justice Delbert C. Hebbard, acting justice. The prisoner's companion, Harry McSwain, who is six years Kelly's junior, was so severely affected by drugs that he was unable to appear in the court. He is being treated at the county hospital. Kelly begged of Justice Hebbard to send him to a hospital where he could get "treatment," and the Justice committed him to the county institution until both Kelly and McSwain are in a fit condition to stand trial.

A large quantity of morphine was found in suit cases belonging to Kelly and McSwain at a boarding house, at 346 Andrews street, where the pair were arrested yesterday afternoon by Patrolman Lawler of the Franklin Street station. Complaint was made that a purse had been stolen from one of the rooms and Patrolman Lawler investigated. He rapped upon the door of a room occupied by Kelly and McSwain, who were new arrivals, and was surprised not to get a response.

A few minutes later Lawler saw the two men running away from the house, and he gave chase. Years ago Lawler achieved fame as a sprinter and soon caught up with the pair. A search of the room occupied by Kelly and McSwain disclosed a complete narcotic outfit, including hypodermic needles. The men said the drugs had been bought in Buffalo, and said the drugs were for their own use. Two thousand morphine tablets were found in one of the suit cases

Cattle Poisoned At Blackwater

LINDSAY, June 16.—Four valuable steers were poisoned last week on the ranch farm belonging to John Brabason, G.T.R. agent at Blackwater

Mr. Brabason went over to his farm on the 4th Con., of Brock township, to see the cattle, when he discovered four of them in great pain. A veterinary was quickly summoned, but it was of no avail, all died in a short time. They appeared to have been poisoned, and on investigation it was found that the tenant who recently left, set out a pail with a quantity of green paint in the bottom. The recent rains filled it with water, and the cattle drank therefrom.

The four beefers were worth $300, a price Mr. Brabason could have received any day. The farm being used as a ranch is often without a tenant, as at the present time. Quite a number of cattle are ranched there, and it is fortunate that more of them did not meet the same fate.

The Racking Pains of Sciatic Rheumatism

Were Well-nigh Unbearable—After Five Years of Suffering Cure Was Effected by Dr. Chase's Medicines

For downright excruciating pain few ailments can be compared to sciatic rheumatism. Since this condition of the sciatic nerve denotes exhaustion of the nervous system the logical cure is found in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to nourish the starved nerves back to health and vigor.

Reports are continually coming in to us regarding the splendid results obtained in the treatment of sciatic rheumatism by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after each meal and Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally as a means of arousing the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels and thereby keeping the system freed of pain causing poisonous impurities.

Mr. W. J. Talbot, Edenwold, Sask., writes "It is a great pleasure for me to recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food as a cure for Sciatic Rheumatism. The pain I have suffered has been well-nigh unbearable. It would start in the hips and run down the legs to the toes, gradually getting worse. The nerves contract until one is practically useless. My doctor tried many different treatments, but could only afford relief for a time.

"For about five years I was subject to this trouble with severe attacks which would last about two months. The last attack I had was shortened to two weeks by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. This treatment was continued until I was satisfied that the cure was lasting."

This statement is endorsed by Mr H. E. Wooley, J.P.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, six for $2.50. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

Protest Of Presbyterians Against Church Union

Text of the Dissent of the Minority to the General Assembly's Action in Committing the Church to Union

WINNIPEG, Man., June 15.—The dissent and protest of the minority to the action of the Presbyterian General Assembly in voting for union follows:

Disent and protest:—We, the undersigned, in our own name and in the name of all that may choose to adhere to us, hereby record our dissent from the deliverance now come to, and we protest that this General Assembly, having voted by a majority to adopt, in the basis of union with the Congregational and Methodist Churches of Canada, a constitution entirely different from that of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, has thereby ceased to be a general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. That those who voted against the motion to adopt this new constitution alone have a right to seats in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. That all those who have gone on record as voting for the adoption of this new constitution, by that act have ceased to be of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and have no legal right to take part in transacting the business of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada; and we do further protest that if we continue to act with them in dealing with the business of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada we are not to be held as recognizing their right to seats in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Plans Are Completed For New G. T. R. Freight Sheds

Complete Changes Promised in the Block Between King and Charlotte Streets.

Recent activities on the part of Superintendent Dan McMillan and other officials of the G.T.R. in the vicinity of the local freight sheds renews the interest in the company's proposed changes in its freight sheds and offices. There is no longer any doubt that the company has outlined its plans for sweeping changes around Charlotte, Aylmer and King streets, but as far as can be learned it is unlikely that actual construction work will begin before next spring. The G.T.R. plans will remove the present grain warehouse occupied by Mr. George Mather, and also the freight sheds now in use. This will sweep the whole corner property clean.

A long new freight shed will be built extending along Aylmer street from King to Charlotte street and at the north end of it, front Charlotte street, will be erected an office building, which with its shed will be large enough for the demands of the next twenty-five or thirty years. The freight shed will provide ample accommodation for vehicles driving up from Aylmer street and every facility will be offered for the smooth handling and rapid delivery of merchandise and other goods carried by the railway.

Between the new freight shed and the present approach to the station sidings will be strung close up to Charlotte street, thus affording ample accommodation of this nature, always a necessary and desirable feature of any freight yard.

It would be pleasing intelligence that this company would undertake these changes this year, but there is little prospect of that activity this year. Railway plans often move slowly unless there is immediate necessity urging a work, and naturally all the work is laid out and material ordered before the work is begun. For these and other reasons it is not expected that the plans will be put into effect before the spring of 1917.

ROSINA VAN DYCK, SINGER, SUES FOR A SEPARATION

Wife of Richard Hageman, Once Assistant Conductor at Metropolitan, Tells of "Other Woman"

NEW YORK, June 16.—Mrs. Rosina Hageman, known formerly on the stage of the Metropolitan as Rosina Van Dyck, sought in the Supreme Court, a separation from Richard Hageman, for eight years assistant conductor of the Metropolitan. She says she questioned him about Rena Thornton and their association at an address in West Sixty-first street. She alleges he replied that no one knew "the facts" except her and that she "ought to keep quiet."

Mr. and Mrs. Hageman were married in Amsterdam, Holland, Feb. 7 1903, and came here in 1906. They were happy until March, 1915, when he became attentive to a young woman, she says. In June, 1915, she says he went to San Francisco on business, returning in September. He wrote only once to her during his absence and on returning home went to where she was at Lake George but refused to pay her board bill. She told him she was ashamed of the name of Hageman.

On their return to this city, she says, he lived in Riverside Drive. She called him up there and asked for money for her support, she declares. He replied that he did not have any money. She said he made $900 the two weeks before. He said he often made a lot of money, but spent it. Then she said she would sue both him and the "woman".

True to her word, Mrs. Hageman now seeks $100 a mon. in alimony, and has served a summons in an action against Rena Thornton. She will press her alimony plea today.

AN INDIAN MYTH FROM BALSAM LAKE

Deep Sea Monsters That Frequent the Stoney Lake Districts

The Examiner is indebted to Col. G. E. Laidlaw, of Victoria Road, for a reprint of Ojibwa Myths and Tales from the Archaeological Report, 1914-1915. Several of these myths and tales have already been published in these columns, but the appended is published, because of its local coloring:

"Once, a long time ago, before the white man came to Canada, an Indian struck out through the bush to hunt. It came on a storm and he took a line for camp, which was by a little lake away up north. It came on worse, and the Indian crawled on a projecting pine tree. He saw the lightning strike several trees, and looking very closely at one that was struck he saw a little man (about two feet high) standing by one side of the tree, and looking again at the tree he saw another little man standing at the other side of the struck tree. Both these men were fine little fellows, all black and shining, and are called Nim-Mah-Kie (Thunder.) They climbed up in the air like they were climbing ladders, and disappeared. After they went up more lightning came down. These little men set the lightning at the trees and make the thunder. Thunder and lightning keep the monsters down on the land and in the lakes.

These monsters, which are about twelve feet long and about one and one-half to two feet thick, and which have long jaws full of teeth, and look like half fish and half snake, live in hills near lakes. They have underground passages from the hills to the water, and can sometimes be seen early in the morning. In small lakes and bays of larger lakes they move around with great swiftness, forcing the weeds and floating sticks, etc., high on the shore, similar to swirling your hand around in a wash basin. Sometimes they do this with so much force that they leave the small lakes partially dry. One of these monsters lives in the hill just north of where the old Indian portage from Lake Simcoe enters West Bay, Balsam Lake (now Portage Road.) Another lives in the hill at Atherly, Rama Reserve, Lake Couchiching, and another lives up north in a lake the name of which is now forgotten. Thunder and lightning kill these monsters."

ALLIES BUYING 30,000 HORSES.

DES MOINES, Ia., June 14.—Renewed demands for remounts on the part of the allied armies have increased activities in the local horse market in the last few weeks. The allies are after 30,000 war horses. For the first time, too, since the outbreak of the war three European nations have purchasing and inspection teams stationed in this city and are buying at the same time.

STEAMER OTONABEE CAUSED DAMAGES

Aged Bridge-tender Permanently Disabled by Steamer

Whitby, June 16.—In the County Court here before Judge McIntyre, a jury awarded John C. Freelen, of Balsover, Ont., $2,000 damages against the Lake Simcoe Navigation Co., Limited. Freelen was a bridge tender on the Trent Canal and was seriously injured on July 6, 1915, when the steamer Otonabee struck the bridge, which he had turned, to allow it to pass. The accident was established in the court to have been due to the negligence of defendants. Freelen was so seriously injured that he will never be able to work again. He is 77 years of age.

Farmer Charged With Murder On Trial

ALLEGED TO HAVE KILLED A FORTUNE TELLER WITH A HAMMER

Frankfurt, Ind., June 16.—The trial of Giles W. Trask, a wealthy Circleville farmer and elevator owner, charged with the murder of Mrs. Minerva Alice Evans, a fortune teller and clairvoyant, known throughout the state as Madame Rand, opened in the circuit court.

Trask is alleged to have killed the woman with a hammer on the night of May 3, after the woman had repeatedly blackmailed him.

Thirty four veniremen were examined before the jury box was filled.

TO ARREST BURNS IN MORGAN CASE

Head of Detective Agency Must Answer Charge of Taking Private Document.

NEW YORK, June 16.—William J. Burns, head of the detective agency which bears his name, is to be arrested upon a warrant to be issued by Chief Magistrate McAdoo if Fredrick Seymour signs a complaint charging Mr. Burns with having violated a subsection of the penal law prohibiting the taking and publishing of a private document the property of another. This is made a misdemeanor by the statute.

Mr. Seymour agreed to go to the office of District Attorney Swann. The complaint making the charge against Mr. Burns has been drawn.

Mr. Seymour on the witness stand in the original inquiry by Chief Magistrate McAdoo in the J. P. Morgan-Burns-Seymour case agreed, but with plainly expressed reluctance, to sign such a complaint against Mr. Burns. In yielding to long continued urging by District Attorney Swann Mr. Seymour at last said he would sign the complaint.

Mr. Swann said that he expected Mr. Seymour, but declined to predict that Mr. Seymour would or would not sign the complaint, which in any event is to be filed against Mr. Burns. Should Mr. Seymour so present his attitude that the District Attorney does not insist upon his signature Bartlett Smith, a detectaphone installer, is to be substituted as the complainant.

James M. Beck is attorney for Mr. Burns, and was notified to have his client ready for arraignment and pleading. Release of Mr. Burns in the custody of his council is expected.

How Jack Thirnbeck Tried To Steal A March on the G.T.R. But Was Ambushed By Supt. McMillan

When the G. T. R. officials held up and ordered the discontinuance of the driving of the interlocking iron piles with which the outfall sewer is lined while the concrete main is being laid they added at least $75.00 to the city's expense sheet and considerably delayed the work. The pile driving apparatus is mounted on a movable truck which runs on its own tracks and having approached close to the G.T.R. Port Hope line, Mr. John Thirnbeck decided to go ahead and lay his temporary track for the pile driver over the G. T. R. rails drive the piles as quickly as possible and steal a march on the railway company.

But just as he had got under way with his work, along came Superintendent Dan McMillan with his official train, secretaries, and assistants even to the "nigger waiter, in his white coat," according to Mr. Thirnbeck's recital of the episode, and ordered the foreman to desist, and to clear the G.T.R. line. With a certain naivete, probably assumed, "Jack" assured Supt. McMillan that he would not create any inconvenience for the company. He would flag approaching trains and quickly open the way for them, and when they had passed, would resume the pile driving.

Supt. McMillan couldn't see this scheme at all. While it looked good to "Jack" Thirnbeck, the railway men failed to see a single favourable feature. If any flagging was to be done G.T.R. men would do it and for their own work. Mr. Thirnbeck retorted that his men were as efficient flag wavers as any the G.T.R. could produce.

Supt. McMillan wanted to know why the city's work had not been completed on Sunday, when the city's forces had lifted the railway, where it crossed the roadway. But the city had dug their wide trench and laid heavy beams on which the ties were temporarily relaid until the sewer is completed at that point. And knowing how the city's men had worked on Sunday to advance the work as much as possible, Mr. Thirnbeck retorted that they had accomplished as much as any gang of G.T.R. workmen could have done. And he explained just what they had performed. However, that did not move the G. T. R. officials. They simply would not tolerate the pile driver's rails being laid over their main line, and, of course, Mr. Thirbeck's march which he had attempted to steal on the company, was arrested.

He consulted Engineer Parsons and since then the piles close to the G. T. R have been driven by hand, and in consequence, progress has been slowed up.

The city's officials hope to push the work beyond the railway on Sunday and to strike their stride again in projecting the sewer northward. There is no doubt that Mr. Thirnbeck must have been decidedly crestfallen when his own speeding-up scheme was checked and tied up with G.T.R red tape, as some of the city's men termed it. One result of the delay was the fact that the trench men were laid off for a day or so. However, it is expected that the difficulty will be entirely surmounted by Monday, and that, in the more favourable material north of Parnell Street, faster progress than ever will be recorded.

Establish Hospital For Shock Cases

Returned Soldiers to be Treated at Cobourg

The Provincial Secretary's Department will establish at Cobourg a hospital for the treatment of mental and shock cases among returned soldiers. This was provided for by an arrangement concluded yesterday between the Dominion Hospitals Commission and the Ontario Government.

The present institution at Cobourg will be immediately converted into a military hospital by the transfer of some 180 female patients to the new hospital for mental diseases at Whitby. It is expected that by the first week in July the Cobourg Hospital will be ready to recive fifty-five patients, and the number of cases will be increased thereafter as they are brought forward. The medical staff and nurses with the necessary facilities and organization for this hospital will be provided by the Provincial Secretary's Department, and preparation is being made to increase the accommodation by the erection of additional buildings should it be found that this is needed.

"In opening this hospital," said Mr. S. A. Armstrong, Assistant Provincial Secretary, last night, "we are following the best practice as it exists to-day in England where they have one or two such institutions. In two months' time one section of the hospital will be entirely completed.

Mark Street Church News

Choir Members Were Entertained By the Ladies of the Congregation

A very pleasant surprise was given to the members of Mark Street Church choir last evening.

After the usual practice the members were asked to adjourn to the schoolroom, where refreshments were awaiting them, which were daintily served by two ladies of the congregation, who wished to show their appreciation of the work done by the choir.

A most enjoyable time was spent, and many thanks were expressed to the ladies for their kindly manner in which they entertained the choir.

Tom Longboat Forgiven

Pte. Tom Longboat, the noted long-distance runner, is back again with the 180th Battalion. Following a recent adventure Longboat was charged with being an absentee from his battalion, but yesterday Lieut. Col. R. H. Greer informed Magistrate Ellis that he had given the soldier another chance, and the charge was dropped.

Tom does not appreciate the efforts of that great friend of the Athlete Tom Flanagan, to make the Indian a law-abiding and respected citizen. He has been forgiven so often that some day he will be left entirely to look after himself.

New Russian Shell the Perfection of "Frightfulness"

LONDON, June 15.—The Morning Post has the following from Petrograd:

The Russian artillery has been magnificent throughout this war, but on the present occasion it has exceeded its own highest records. The effect upon the enemy is terrifying, and a general panic has usually ensued, for the Russians have invented a new shell and have used it in incredible quantities. Its deadly results are seen in the official bulletins. Nothing can be said, of course, about the nature of the new shell. From what I have heard I should judge it admits of no effective defensive reply. The Universities of Russia have been busily employed for twelve months past vying with one another in search for some superlative form of effective shell.

ACCUSED OF DESERTING.

Toronto, June 16.—Geo. H. Pearns, at a recruiting meeting, was accused of deserting from a Parry Sound battalion. He flourished a loaded revolver and was arrested.

Canada Leads In Contributions To The Overseas Tobacco Fund

$121,845 Had Been Subscribed Up To the End of April---In Spite of That the Amount is Inadequate to Maintain a Regular Supply of Tobacco for the Canadian Boys on the Firing Line

The Fund to provide tobacco for the British troops from overseas, which was originated by the Over-Seas Club, and of which Canada's Tobacco Fund forms the most important part, has issued a statement to the end of Auril showing the amount received during the 19 months of its existence.

Canada heads the list with contributions amounting to upwards of $120,000 and over $160,000 has been raised in Australia and New Zealand. Including the penny contributions of the children of the elementary schools of the Old Country, which exceded $100,000, the total money reported to the end of April was close on $600,000 as will be seen from the following statement. Actually the Over-Seas Club has been instrumental in raising $640,000 up to date, and has sent to the boys in the trenches two and a half million packages of tobacco and cigarettes, representing considerably over 128 million cigarettes, 256 tons of tobacco.

We have just received from Mr. Francis R. Jones, the organizing secretary of the Fund in Canada and the United States, the following statement showing the total amounts contributed in the various parts of the world:

Canada	$121,845
U.S.A.	75,910
Australia and New Zealand..	400,625
Europe	30,975
Africa	62,065
Asia	56,000
South America	54,540
Central America	9,495
	$401,255
British Children's Fund—
Empire Day, 1915	54,740
Xmas Day, 1915	50,240
	$104,980
	$596,235
Less money returned	415
Total	$595,820

We feel sure that all our readers are interested very considerably in this purely humane piece of war work which has been undertaken by the Over-Seas Club, and desire to call attention to the fact that the amount of money being received is far from adequate to provide for the needs of the troops.

The contributions from Canada are devoted to the comfort of the Canadian boys at the front, and if each of the 100,000 men now representing Canada on the firing line is to receive one of the weekly packages arranged for by Canada's Tobacco Fund through the Over-Seas Club, it is obvious that the sum of $26,000 is required every week to provide a 25c package for each of these 100,000 men.

Even allowing that there are some of the men who do not smoke and that there are same who are cared for by their personal friends and through other channels, the fact remains that the men want tobacco more than they want anything else, that they are not getting as much tobacco as they require, and that they greatly value the gifts being sent from home through the Over-Seas Club.

We have seen a number of the appreciative replies received from the men and officers at the front, and we hope our readers will respond generously to the requests being made for further help. Any who can render assistance are invited to communicate with Mr. Francis R. Jones, Organizing Secretary, Room 28, Windsor Hotel, Montreal.

Literature in the interests of the Fund, contribution books, etc., will be forwarded on application. Cheques and Postal Orders should be made payable to the Over-Seas Club and may be deposited with any bank in Canada. All the banks have undertaken to remit contributions free of charge to the Union Bank of Canada, Montreal.

Valuable help has been given by the Postmasters throughout the Dominion, and any Postmaster will be pleased to receive and forward remittances.

To enable the Fund to fully accomplish its beneficent work it is necessary that the services of many additional helpers should be secured quickly, and the help of those who are willing to assist will be gladly welcomed. An attractive circular has been prepared for distribution and copies can be had on application as above.

THE ARMY SERVICE CORPS.

Through a revelation as to the rates of pay for the Canadian Army Service Corps for home service, the number of Peterborough men for that unit will be smaller than was expected, especially of married men. The Peterborough men who joined the C A. S. C. this week were given to understand that the rate of pay was the same as for the overseas forces, and while this is true in the case of single men, the married men on home service are on a different footing, inasmuch as instead of $20 a month separation allowance, as in the case of the wives of Active Service men the separation allowance is only 45 cents a day, while there is no allowance from the Patriotic Fund. That is, married men receive $1.35 with no other allowance, while single men get $1.10 per day as in other units.

Two of the married men who went to Barriefield on Wednesday refused to be attested and returned to Peterborough last night. They claim, with considerable justice, that they could not support a wife and family on such terms and accordingly have returned. Single men, of course, are as well paid as in any other unit.

Lieut. Lennox of the Army Service Corps will be at the Recruiting Rooms to-night at 7.30 o'clock. Quite a number of local men have registered, and another draft will likely leave to-morrow.

The misunderstanding is a regrettable one.

Major K. G. Loch and Capt. Gordon Hall of the 93rd Battalion, are home on leave from Barriefield Camp.

Among the 93rd men home from Barriefield Camp on leave are Pioneer Sergt. E. Baumer, Corp. E. Laing, and Lance Corp. T. Hardman. A number of other non-coms. and men are expected to-day and to-morrow.

A and B Companies of the 93rd have completed their shooting at Barriefield Camp and C Company will take their turn at the ranges next. The 93rd are receiving many compliments on their good showing at the ranges.

It is expected that a class in bomb-throwing will be started by the 93rd next week. There will also be a special course in physical training and bayonet fighting for all officers and men, except those who have taken the course at Montreal and London.

The 93rd soccer team have beaten their opponents so easily at Barriefield that they are having difficulty in inducing other battalions to play them. They are out after the scalps of the 109th now. The Sportsmen's Battalion of Toronto are expected to have a crack team and there is some talk of a game with them later on renewing old acquaintances made in the hockey season.

Mr. R. B. Rogers, East City, has received a cablegram from Miss Glassford, in London, as follows:

"Have you had news of Harry? Reported missing. No definite news. Still inquiring."

Mr. Rogers has had no official word in regard to his son, Lieut. Harry Rogers of the Mounted Rifles except the message that he was wounded. Miss Glassford has been endeavouring to locate him, but has as yet been unsuccessful.

A large marquee arrived yesterday and is being erected for the use of the battalion for mess purpose, also for recreation. This is certainly an addition which was much needed.

Finale—O Canada.

A camp order at Barriefield reads as follows:

"It has come to the notice of the Camp Commandant that a number of officers of the different battalions in camp, are spending a good deal of their time in the city of Kingston. A number of officers of certain battalions are always to be found wandering about the streets of the city.

"You will please take immediate steps to put a stop to this practice. No officer will in future be absent from camp at any time without the consent of his commanding officer. When a half-holiday is given it is not for the purpose of going to the city, but for the promotion of healthy sport among the men.

"You will bring the contents of letter to the attention of all officers under your command, and acknowledge receipt."

Kingston, June 14.—In ten days the Barriefield camp will be ablaze with electric lights at night. This is the information now given out. The engineers are rushing the work ahead as fast as possible, and in that length of time all of the equipment will be put in. The poles are being placed 250 ft. apart, and there will be a light on every pole.

The $2,800 allowed by the city for equipment is being used, and this amount will lay the foundation of the scheme of lighting the camp grounds. The government will come forward as soon as the estimates can be made, and the remainder of the equipment necessary will be purchased. In the meanwhile that which can be purchased by the city's allowance of $2,800 is being used to the limit.

The battalions themselves will have to put in what extra equipment and lights they need. The mains are being strung down the front and rear of every battalion lines, and the lights for the marquees, etc., will be installed immediately, the cost being borne by the battalions until or unless the government makes provision for the expenditure.

The Kingston Whig says:

The information published in Wednesday's issue of the 'Whig,' that six battalions would be leaving camp within ten days, aroused great interest in the camp, particularly among the battalion commanders. All are very anxious to learn which battalions will be ordered to move and a spirit of uncertainty in the destination of each is apparent.

The commander will give no information on the subject, as his recommendations have not yet been confirmed by headquarters, and it is a case of "wait" for every person.

It is probable that other battalions will be authorized as soon as those at the camp are taken away. Peterborough and Kingston are both in the list for new battalions and others will likely be one for Belleville. The commanding officers of none of these have as yet been announced.

The sergeants of the 93rd Battalion claim they have the largest mess tent in use at the camp for that purpose. The mess is well furnished and Lieut.-Col. Johnston's N.C.O.'s can be proud of their dining place.—Kingston Whig.

According to word received from England the 59th Battalion will not go to the front as a unit but in drafts. The first draft will be sent from 'C' and 'D' Companies and they will cross to France after the completion of a course in musketry.

The Camp dentists are very busy and have now reached 'C' Company of the 93rd Battalion. Every man in every unit from the 93rd to the 156th Battalion must have his teeth inspected and this is a good start on such a big proposition.—Kingston Whig.

A TRIBUTE TO 93RD.

That the 93rd Battalion is making good at the ranges at Barriefield as well as in other lines of training, as evidenced by the following tribute from the Kingston Whig:

Sergt.-Major Instructor Goodhouse was in Peterborough last winter and organized a course in musketry, for the men of the 93rd Battalion. The results of that elementary training are now evident in the wonderful showing that the Peterborough Battalion is making on the ranges.

Capt. W. E. Swaine, musketry officer, has arranged matters so that every man at Barriefield will be given a thorough training in shooting and handling his rifle. The elementary work that was dt done during the winter will be carried on. In the case of the 93rd Battalion, due to the previous instruction, most of the men are now able to go directly on the ranges without the preliminary training. During the winter 782 men of the 93rd qualified in the elementary work, A and B Companies. The latter, now on the ranges, are making good records with the rifle.

The Kingston Whig says: "The 93rd Battalion claims to be a battalion that has been recruited from a very small area, and that there are few if any men from outside the immediate county of Peterboro in the ranks. This battalion certainly deserves credit on this point as there are thirty-five distinctive cases where brothers have enlisted so that they might go through the game shoulder to shoulder. In one case five brothers of one family have enlisted and are now wearing the 93rd uniform at the camp. The family is Indian descent and the name is Taylor."

Co. Sergt.-Major B. Hartshorn of A company, 93rd Battalion, arrived from Barriefield last evening and is spending a few days leave at his home, 425 Patterson street.

The Havelock Standard says: In the big battle at Hooge, France, on the 2nd and 3rd insts., at least one Havelock boy, Pte. "Ted" McKay, is numbered in the heavy list of casualties. His aunt, Mrs. Wm. Little of Lakefield, received a telegram on Monday, informing her that he had been wounded in the knee. The telegram did not state the nature of the wound, and all sincerely hope that it is not serious.

Pte. McKay enlisted in Peterborough with B Squadron, 8th C.M.R. He made many friends while here who will be sorry to hear that he was wounded.

Shortly after the arrival of the 93rd Battalion at Barriefield two north country members of the battalion, Pte. Peter Munro and Stephen Emmorey, either tiring of mud or growing suddenly homesick, elected to pay a visit to haunts to which they were better accustomed. Unfortunately they overlooked the formality of securing a pass and as a result when they failed to answer the next roll call they were reported to Peterborough as absent without leave.

According to their own story the pair walked all the way from Barriefield with a little assistance in the shape of a ride on a farmer's wagon now and then. They cut across country and finally got into familiar territory when they struck the head of Stoney Lake, the country around which they know like a book. Building a raft of logs, according to the story they told the military police, they crossed Stoney Lake and took up residence with relatives at the depot farm about five miles north of Mount Julian.

Unfortunately for the two coy soldiers information as to their whereabouts quickly reached the authorities. Pte. Munro had came from Warsaw to enlist and accordingly Constable Clements of Warsaw was notified that the doughty warrior was wanted. He had little difficulty in deciding where to look for Munro and on Monday arrested him and brought him into Peterborough and he was taken down to Barriefield under escort on Thursday morning. Emmorey was in the woods nearby when Munro was arrested, but Constable Clements did not know that he was wanted.

In the meantime the military police of the 93rd here had learned of the whereabouts of the pair and had arranged to go out on Tuesday. With Munro in custody they only had one man to locate, but locating anybody in that section of the country is not the easiest task in the world. Corporal J. Lemay and Pte. J. Morrow left Peterborough at 9 o'clock Tuesday night, and after an all-night drive and several adventures, finally nailed Pte. Emmorey, who had been hiding out in the woods, but who walked into an ambush the military police prepared for him. He was brought back on Wednesday night and sent down to Kingston yesterday.

Absentees from the 93rd are very very few, but they as well as absentees from other battalions are learning to give Peterborough a wide berth as Corp. Lemay of the military police is always on the job.

The following letter was received by Rev. Mr. Farquhason from his nephew, J. M. Farquhason of the 13th Battalion, which the Examiner is pleased to publish:

I am still keeping around as well as ever. We had several losses in the section recently, but my luck still holds good and I hope it will till this affair is settled. I hope you have been getting my post cards regularly. I write them every day we are near or in the trenches, to let you know I am all right, when I have not time to write a letter. There seems so little to tell anyway, except that you are well. We go through the same scenes day after day, with sometimes a little more shelling than usual to make us realise that peace has not been declared yet.

Just at present the country is at its best. It is very warm and everything is growing rapidly. I saw some grain to-day six feet high. Shrubs are in bloom and in some places the fields are a mass of wild flowers. Quite a pleasant place to be in in ordinary times. Now it is a good place to keep at a distance.

We have our kilts again, but I hear the are trying to take them away from us. Some of the fellows would not like to lose them in the summer, but personally I like trousers just as well.

They have quite a good Y.M.C.A. near us with quite a gymnasium set. The Y.M.C.A. has done more for the troops out here than any other organization. They have moving picture shows scattered over the country and you can scarcely go half a mile in any direction without striking one of their tents. They also have several small stations up in the zone that is continually subject to shell fire, to give cocoa, etc., to wounded men.

The chaplain I have run across that I like best is Canon Scott of Quebec, and a great virtue of his is that he can always amuse a bunch of fellows. He is a good old chap and is awfully well liked.

Well I must go over to the hospital a short distance away to see how one of the fellows who was wounded is getting along.

The following from the Kingston Standard is amusing, compared with the comments heard from Peterborough soldiers:

There is much speculation as to what battalions will remain, and it is a compliment to the staff and to Barriefield as a camping site to say that if it was left to a vote, every officer and soldier in camp would hold up both hands to remain here until sent overseas. But, soldiers must be soldiers, and when ordered to march, must obey the command. Barriefield will regret to lose any six battalions from the camp, but it must bow gracefully to the inevitable, and allow military opinions to prevail.

Music & Drama

"Robin Hood" and his merry band of outlaws paid a visit to the Grand Opera House last night with the result that the closing the theatrical attraction of the season was pronounced one of the most enjoyable of the year. De Koven's famous comic opera as presented by the De Koven Opera Company was a thing of beauty and a joy for ever. No better singing company has been heard at the Grand in years and the work of the principals and chorus alike was appealing in its charm. The cast of principals was a thoroughly adequate one. Ralph Brainard in the title role had a pleasing personality and a fine tenor voice which he used to advantage. James Stevens as "Little John" displayed a magnificent bari tone and his singing of the old favourite "Brown October Ale" scored a triumph. Herbert Waterous the basso although handicapped by a sore throat sang the Armourer's song most effectively. The soprano Miss Ivy Scott was most charming as maid Marian, her vocal numbers being well received while Miss Cora Tracy who sang the part of Alan-a-Dale scored heavily in her songs, especially in "Oh, Promise Me" in which her rich smooth contralto was admirably displayed. Phil Branson as the Sheriff of Nottingham supplied most of the fun and proved a comedian of great ability. Altogether "Robin Hood" was a most delightful treat.

ANOTHER CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR HEARD FROM

Havelock Merchant Sends in Affidavit to the 93rd Battalion Expressing His Disbelief in Warfare and His Unwillingness to Serve

The following letter and affidavit has been received by the 93rd Battalion at Barriefield. It is another case where the influence of Pastor Russell is seen.

Dated at Havelock, June 10, 1916

To the Honourable Commanding Officer of 93rd Battalion, Barriefield.

Honourable Sir:—

In accordance with the provisions of Chapter 41 of "An Act Respecting the Militia and Defense of Canada" and known as Militia Act 4 E VII., and particularly sections 11 and 12 thereof, I herewith hand you, to be filed as required by said Act, my affidavit setting forth the facts on which I rest my claim for exemption from liability to service in the Militia and respectfully request that you cause the same to be filed as provided by said law.

Respectfully,
M. H. SWAIN.

AFFIDAVIT.

Province of Ontario.
Dominion of Canada.

I, Matthew H. Swain, being duly sworn, upon my oath state: That I am a male citizen of Canada, and an 45 years of age; that I reside at Havelock; that I am averse to bearing arms or rendering personal military service under the conditions as prescribed by "Militia Act 4 E. VII.," and I make this affidavit as provided by section 12, subdivision 2 of said Act and of Chapter 41 of An Act Respecting the Militia and Defense of Canada," for the purpose of obtaining exemption from liability to service in the Militia, and the facts upon which I rest my claim for such exemption are as follows, to wit:

I am a Christian and the religious doctrines which I believe and hold preclude me from bearing arms or rendering personal military service; I am a member of the International Bible Students Association, a religious Association organized under the laws of Great Britain, with its chief office at No. 34 Craven Terrace, Paddington, London, England, and also with offices at No. 124 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, N. Y., U. S. A., and which has classes or congregations throughout the Dominion of Canada; I subscribe to and am in harmony with the religious doctrines taught by said International Bible Student's Association, which are, to wit, that all members thereof avow a full consecration of will, heart and life to God's service—as footstep followers of the Lord Jesus Christ; and the doctrines and teachings concerning His Kingdom of Peace and good will; I am obligated by my conscience and by engagements with said Bible Students Association to "follow peace with all men" and to do violence or injury to none; that such is in harmony with the teachings of the Master, Christ Jesus, that His followers practise non-resistance; that the requirements of the International Bible Students Association are that its members of obedient to the "powers that be" in so far as their laws and requirements do not conflict with the teachings of Jesus Christ, that the provisions of said "Militia Act 4 E VII.," are in conflict with the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ, as I understand and believe the same.

Dated at Havelock, June 10, 1916

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me a space in your paper? I noticed in the Review of Wednesday night's issue the results of the Board of Health meeting. I think it was rather personal to mention my name only, as there is the Bradburn property and others between London and Edinburgh Streets, and I also understand that the Planing Mill on Dublin Street has no improvements. I know who this has eminated from, and that is Mrs. Birdsall at the rear of us. If the Board of Health consider my outer building a nuisance, as I know it isn't, I consider Mrs. Birdsall's hen yard equally as bad. People who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The Board of Health is welcome to investigate at any time. However, I am willing to comply when fair play is used.

Samuel Kemp.
George Street.

Dear Sir,—I feel I cannot let your two correspondents' letters pass without a word on the same subject. The one who signed himself "Disgusted" spoke of watching the slackers playing lacrosse, but one feels even far worse to have to work in a factory all day with the same class. I notice in your last evening's issue that the Canadian Manufacturers passed a resolution condemning the present system of recruiting. I could not help wondering how many of them fully agreed with that resolution. I think the manufacturers are to blame if they harbour great husky unskilled fellows while good tradesmen have been allowed to go. I also agree with the writer in condemning the enlisting of so many married men, leaving big families behind. We will have to pay dearly for this in the future. All this goes on while able-bodied single men are contented with walking round town getting a living by collecting for different companies or serving behind counters, work which any woman could do. Thanking you for this space, I am, sir,

A Father of Soldier Sons.

MILITARY NEWS

As a matter of fact, "We don't care where we go as long as its out of here," seems to be the attitude of the soldiers in camp.

Some one should wake the Kingston Standard up. In Thursday's issue the Standard says the 146th of Kingston is ready to meet any Battalion in camp at football and that the 156th of Brockville has won every football game it has played in camp. As a matter of fact the 93rd Battalion has already scalped both battalions this week, beating the Kingston crew 9 to 0, and the Brockville gang 10 to 0. The military editor of the Standard must be too busy at social functions to know what is going on around the camp.

Cache Of Dynamite In Auto Factory

120 Sticks Were Discovered Among Car Bodies in Walkerville

WINDSOR, June 15.—Employees of the Chalmers Motor Company, under the direction of Superintendent A. Buchanan, who are engaged in removing a number of old automobile bodies from the factory in Walkerville formerly used by the Tate Electric Company, came across 120 sticks of dynamite to-night. The explosive had evidently been where it was found for many months. There were 12 packages in all, with ten sticks of dynamite to each package.

The Ford police, who were notified of the find, believe the stuff is a part of that which was alleged by Charles Reese and Charles Leffler, convicted dynamiters, to have been brought across the river by Albert Kalzchmidt of Detroit at the time the Peabody building in Walkerville was dynamited last August.

Rainfall in April And May 8.63 Inches

The Meteorological Department Toronto, recently replied to a writer in the Stratford "Beacon" regarding the rainfall as follows:

"Regarding to your letter of the 29th ultimo, the rainfall is dependent on cyclonic movements which occur within the fairly regular circulation of the atmosphere. These cyclonic movements vary somewhat in different years, and in season when they are more numerous than usual the rainfall is excessive. The problem as to why the circulation of the earth's atmosphere varies somewhat from season to season is as yet unsolved, but we know now that the sun is a variable star and it is probably that the carrying solar heat affects the atmospheric circulation.

"We are confident that the heavy artillery firing in Flanders has no appreciable effect on the weather even a few miles from the firing line, and absolutely no effect at long distances.

"Following the the rainfalls of April and May combined in several different years:

1858	8.00 inches
1864	7.70 inches
1885	7.97 inches
1894	9.98 inches
1900	8.09 inches
1912	7.96 inches
1916	8.63 inches

"The rainfall of May, 1894, was 9.36 inches, the largest monthly rainfall on record.

"There are a number of instances where the rainfall of two summer months combined exceedd that of the two months just closed."

And this doesn't include the copious showers of June 1st all.

The Toronto Ball Club are making strong efforts to strengthen the team, and before many days the weak spots will be plugged. Already third baseman Art Bues has been secured from the Kansas City Club, and he will report within a few days. Bues is no stranger in this league, as he played for Buffalo and Jersey City. When in condition he is a valuable man, and in addition is a good hitter, his specialty being extra base wallops. Another seasoned pitcher is being angled for, while Arthur Irwin will leave Montreal in an effort to sign up a crack college pitcher, and one whom Manager Joe Birmingham declares will be a star of the first magnitude before long.

Both Trout and Hogan have proved unsatisfactory at third base, but Trout will be retained as a utility player, being able to take his place anywhere but in the pitcher's box.

Weather Has Jolted The Tennis Schedule

On account of the continued wet weather the conditions for the challenge tournament have been altered slightly. Players may challenge any one on list up till June 24th instead of June 17th. This will give players another week in which to improve their position on the list. This tournament has proved very interesting, and the interest should increase as the season advances. A number of changes have occurred in the standing, especially at the top. The following is the present line up:

Two Boys Killed At Level Crossing

Umbrella Hid View of Oncoming Train

GANANOQUE, June 15.—Two lads about eight years of age, Harold Leggett, son of Mr Leggett, owner of the Stewart House Landing here, and Robert McKay, son of George McKay, were killed about 7 o'clock this evening at Lansdowne crossing by a G.T.R. light engine going east. They were crossing the track with an umbrella up, and did not notice the engine. Their attention was also drawn to a train going west on the opposite track.

NEW YORK GERMAN HELD IN ENGLAND

LONDON, June 15.—The Daily News says the Liverpool police are detaining a German, Richard Hanemann, who travelled from New York aboard the St. Paul, with a passport issued by the German Consulate in New York his idea being to visit Germany.

Richard Hanemann, who is a wine importer, left here aboard the Baltician for St. Paul, on June 4, armed with a German passport, in an attempt to make a business trip to London, Holland and Germany. When he sailed he said that his trip was more less of an experiment, but that he expected to have no trouble proving to the British Government that his mission was purely commercial.

He has lived in New York for the last ten years, but never had taken out his first naturalization papers.

Railroad Workers Take Strike Vote

Demand Eight-hour Day and Time and a Half for Overtime

NEW YORK, June 15.—More than 400,000 union and non-union railroad workers of America will vote within a month on the advisability of calling a general strike to enforce their demands for an eigh-hour day and time and a half for overtime, as a result of the failure by representatives of the railroads and the men to reach a settlement here to-day after a two weeks' conference. The hope of adjusting the dispute through the conference faded when the railroads submitted a tentative compromise offer to the men, granting their demands, but eliminating the majority of existing "double compensation" rules. The conference adjourned yesterday to give the railway managers an opportunity to discuss further their stand on this point, but when they met the men to-day they not only refused to make a specific offer covering the compensation rules, but advised that their differences be submitted either to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to a board of arbitration to operate under the provisions of the Newlands Act. The men declined both offers and the decision to take a strike vote followed.

A. B. Garretson, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Conductors announced later that the ballot will be drafted to-night and rushed to the printer for distribution to all railroad men, whether members of the brotherhoods or not, before the close of next week.

The canvass will consume at least three weeks. Mr. Garretson and the other leaders agreed, and before August 1 the result will be known. If the men vote for a general strike the leaders will return here and again present the demands of the men to the railroads in an effort either to gain their demands in full or a compromise offer without the necessity of putting the strike actually into effect.

EX-POLICE CHIEF FINED FOR ASSAULTING MAYOR

INGERSOLL, June 15.—Ex-Chief of Police A. W. Gummerson was arraigned yesterday on a charge of assaulting Mayor W. J. Elliott, occasioning actual bodily harm.

A number of witnesses were heard for the prosecution and Mr. Gummerson and another witness for the defence.

Evidence was given that on the morning of May 22nd Gummerson, on pushing the Mayor, caused him to fall on the sidewalk and injure his right ankle, from the effects of which he has not fully recovered. A fine of $20 and costs was imposed, which defendant paid under protest stating he would appeal.

British Are Ready When Joffre Calls

Believed Sir Douglas Haig Has 1,350,000 Troops to Oppose 800,000 Germans

NEW YORK, June 15.—A Paris cable to the Times says:—Great interest has been aroused here by a statement made by Bonar Law to the Matin that the British army, completely in accord with Gen. Joffre, was prepared to move whenever the French headquarters staff saw fit. The statement is accepted as a sufficient answer to the charge of British indifference to the French losses before Verdun. The press expresses much satisfaction over Bonar Law's frank statement. From the outset the military authorities here have insisted that it would be playing Germany's game for the British to move before the psychological moment, and have scouted anti-British rumors as idle or malicious gossip. Bonar Law's statement will go far to reassure the peple here."

BRITISH OFFENSIVE SOON

There is reason, the Times adds, to believe that in addition to the great Russian offensive under way against the Austrians, and another already begun against the Germans on the northern part of that line, a third is about to be launched by the British in the west, if this last is not now under way.

From the internal evidence of Sir Douglas Haig's report on May 19, the British have 450,000 on the line and the Germans 500,000. It is well known that the Germans keep the bulk of their forces on the firing line, while the French and English, unless attacked, do not have more than a third of their forces exposed in the normal condition of a dormont front. They depend on the vigilance of their officers on the first line to notice the signs of a attack in force on the part of the enemy, when the reserves can be brought up. They thus save thousands of lives during the daily artillery duels.

THE LINE-UP.

In those circumstances the British force under Sir Douglas Haig should be about 1,350,000 men. Opposite him there are forty German divisions, exclusive of cavalry, or 800,000 men of all ranks. This aggregate, according to a British military expert, may represent in combatants 500,000 rifles and over 3,000 guns. It is an accountable concentration, and we must further assume that the drafts to make good losses are in the field depots behind the German lines.

An Opinion on The Presbyterian Union Fight

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 16.—That the property of the Presbyterian church belongs to the doctrine and not to any particular body of people, was the principle laid down by the House of Lords in 1904, the decision upon which the anti-unionists in Canada will base their claims to the funds and properties of the church, according to prominent legal members here to-day.

Your correspondent to-day obtained the following opinion from Mr. H. E. Irwin, K.C., who has made a deep study of the Scotch case which is the nearest parallel to the present situation in regard to church union.

"At the present moment there is no possible legal doubt that every dollar of funds and every dollar's worth of property belongs to those who are maintaining the Presbyterian church in Canada, and will continue to belong to them until the legislatures of the province exercise their power to take away the property of John Jones to give it to Tom Smith."

A FRIGHTFUL DEATH SUFFOCATED IN ASTHMA ATTACK

Every sufferer from asthma knows the terror, the abject fear that overcomes them when struggling for breath. The old fashioned remedies may relieve but never cure. Best results come from Catarrhozone which cures asthma after hope is abandoned. It's because Catarrhozone kills the asthma germ that it cures. Choking spells and labored breathing are relieved, suffocating sensations and loss of breath are cured. Every trace of asthma is driven from the system, and even old chronics experience immediate relief and lasting cure. Equally good for bronchitis, throat trouble and catarrh. The large one dollar outfit includes the inhaler and lasts two months. Sold by all dealers or from the Catarrhozone Co., of Kingston, Canada.

KILLS HIS WIFE AND SHOOTS HIMSELF

THEIR DAUGHTER, TWO YEARS OLD IS FOUND CRYING AT HOME AFTER THE SHOOTING.

New York, June 16.—Because his wife, Elizabeth, refused to live with him, John Farkader, 26 years old, shot and killed her in her home, No. 317 East Twelfth street, and then shot himself. He was then taken to the Bellevue Hospital in a dying condition.

According to the police Farkader was suffering from tuberculosis. Mrs. Ella McLarney, a tenant in the house, told the police that Farkader left the Sea View Sanitarium, where he was receiving treatment three months ago, and since that time his wife had refused to live with him.

Elizabeth Farkader, two years old, was found crying and clutching her mother's dress when the police arrived. Mr. Farkader had been killed instantly, the bullets having entered the head and neck. When the police asked Farkader why he had shot his wife he answered "Ask her." Two other children, Michael and John Farkader, are kept in a home for children.

Breach in the Austrian Lines Constantly Widening

Large Units Surrender in Entirety, Half of Austrian Army in Southwest Lost, Military Trains and Equipment Abandoned by Wholesale---One Wedge Driving Toward Kovel and Vladimir-Volynski in North, Another Toward Sokal in South. While Russians Occupy Sniatyn on the Pruth

FEATURES OF RUSSIAN ADVANCE

PETROGRAD, June 17.—The Russian advance along the whole southwestern front continues to develop with a degree of swiftness which has astonished the country. The success of the movement thus far is looked upon as the more remarkable in view of the strong defences which had been erected by the Austrians during the long period of preparation and their supposed readiness for resistance to any manner of assault.

The outstanding features are the steadily mounting number of prisoners, augmented by the surrender of large Austrian units in their entirety, the wholesale abandonment of military trains and all sorts of field equipment in such enormous quantities that they cannot yet be estimated, and, finally, so far as is known here, the comparatively small extent of Russian losses.

Expect in the centre of the front, which runs from Volhynia to the Roumanian border, the Austrians have been wholly unable to resist the Russian drive.

In the vicinity of Tarnopol the opposing forces are still in deadlock, but on both flanks, in the Lutsk region and in the Dniester sector, the breach made in the Austrian lines is widening constantly.

In the Lutsk region the Russian forces, after piercing the Austrian lines by capturing the fortress, have progressed in two diverging directions toward Kovel and Vladimir-Volynski, and have attained the points only twenty miles from both these objectives.

A similar wedge has been driven into the Austrian lines from Dubno toward Sokal. This wedge has penetrated thirty miles into the Austrian lines, and the breadth of the breach made has been increased to sixty miles. Another important breach extends for thirty miles between the Dniester and the Pruth.

It is estimated by Russian officers that the Austrians had lost nearly half the forces operating on the southwestern front.

More than 150,000 men have been captured by the Russians during the offensive movement on the Volhynian and Galician fronts.

SECRET MARRIAGE FOLLOWS DIVORCE

Mrs. Gladys Peck Pushee, Prominent in Stamford Society, Now Wife of Philadelphia Manufacturer.

STAMFORD, Conn., June 16. — Friends of Mrs. Gladys Peck Pushee, who is prominent in society here, were surprised Wednesday when they learned that she recently obtained a divorce from Roy Pushee, of West Newton, Mass., and is now the wife of Richard Salisbury Darling, manufacturer, of Philadelphia. The young couple evidently tried to keep the marriage a secret, for even the bride's mother, Mrs. Edward H. Peck, said she had not been informed of the wedding.

It became known, however, that the couple obtained a marriage license in New Rochelle, N.Y., on Monday, and were married there that night by the Rev. Dr. T. B. Johnson. In obtaining the license Mr. Darling gave his age as twenty-six and said he lived at the Bellevue - Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

His wife, who is twenty-two years old, was married to Roy Pushee when she was but sixteen years old. Mr. Pushee is a son of John E. Pushee and is a member of a family socially prominent in Boston. He met Miss Peck while he attended the Manor School here.

According to the marriage license obtained by Mr. and Mrs. Darling the latter got her decree of divorce from Mr. Pushee in May of this year.

Dublin Citizen Slain By Sentry

Private of Irish Lancers Goes to Trial Before Court Martial for Murder.

DUBLIN, June 16. — Another charge of murder arising from the Irish rebellion was heard before a court martial. Private Henry J. Watt, of the Irish Lancers, was placed on trial for the murder of Robert Glaister and the attempted murder of William F. Grey, proprietor of a Dublin hotel.

Grey testified that he and Glaister were walking along the street near the hotel, over which Watt was standing guard, when the latter put a rifle to Glaister's chest and fired. Glaister was able to walk back to the hotel, but as he was entering it, the witness said, Watt again fired, killing him.

The evidence for the defence was that Glaister resisted in passing the sentry, who had ordered him back.

Clam-Shell Bucket Brings Up Body In The River St. Clair

Clothing Badly Rotted—May Have Been Drowned Last Summer.

SARNIA, June 16.—The body of another unidentified man was recovered from the bottom of the St. Clair River here and is now lying at the morgue in Port Huron.

The steamer Sachem, which is in the gravel business arrived down-river, and the first dip of her clamshell bucket brought the body to the surface, the remains hanging over the side of the bucket, and giving a big surprise to the men on the boat.

The bucket was swung on board and the remains taken to the American side, as the boat was over the boundary line. The body had evidently been in the water several months, as the clothing was rotted away, although the flesh was fairly well preserved.

The man evidently was employed on some boat or dock, according to his dress, having on summer clothing.

Silver trimming which ranges from silver balls dangling from a scarf to silver lace on picture hats is the favourite adornment of newest millinery.

MR. AND MRS. TOD IN PERIL ON BOARD BURNING LAUNCH

EXPLOSION SENDS CRAFT TO THE BOTTOM TWO MINUTES AFTER THEY ARE TAKEN OFF.

Greenwich, Conn., June 16.—Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Tod, of New York, and Sound Beach, were near death when the tender of their big auxiliary yacht, the Katoura, caught fire off the Indian Harbor Yacht Club. They were rescued by members of the club, who hurried to their aid, and only a few minutes before two gasolene tanks exploded and sent the $10,000 tender to the bottom. Mrs. Tod suffered from shock and nervousness incident to her experience.

The Katoura arrived off Greenwich in the afternoon and being a large vessel, she dropped anchor a mile off the club house landing. Mr. and Mrs. Tod left the Katoura about five o'clock, and went to the Indian Harbor Yacht Club aboard her tender, a thirty foot gasolene launch.

They met several friends at the club house and after dinner went on board the tender and started back for the Katoura to spend the night aboard.

The tender was in charge of an engine man and a seaman of the Katoura's crew.

When the tender had gone only about 200 yards those who were dining on the verandah of the club house heard cries and looked to see the tender in flames. The club steward sounded the emergency alarm and a dozen men members of the club ran to the landing stage but only four of them could get into the club launch and leave room for the persons to be rescued. They were Abbot P. Brush, Lyman C. Butler, Robert Minucke and George Reed.

By the time the launch reached the tender the flames which had started near the engine, were sweeping back and threatening Mr. and Mrs. Tod, who were aft. The rescuers ran their launch alongside the burning tender, and while two held the boats together with hooks the two others lifted Mrs. Tod and then Mr. Tod, and the engine man and the seaman aboard the launch.

The flames were then attacking the two large gasoline tanks of the tender, and as soon as the four persons had been taken off the boat was pushed away. The launch went to a safe distance and then stopped and waited for the explosions.

Only two minutes elapsed before the tanks exploded and scattered fire over a wide area. The blaze was high for a few minutes and then the tender sank. Mr. and Mrs. Tod were taken into the club house and later went to their yacht.

Mr. Tod is a nephew of the late James S. Kennedy, and inherited part of his vast fortune. He is associated with his brother, J. Kennedy Tod, in the stock brokerage business in New York, where his town house is at No. 998 Fifth avenue. The summer home is at Sound Beach. He formerly was commodore of the Atlantic Yacht club, and is a member of the New York Yacht, Indian Harbor Yacht, Rumson County, Sleepy Hollow Country and Riding Clubs, and of the Colonial Lords of Manors. Mrs. Tod formerly was Miss Katherine Chew.

The Katoura, one of the largest and finest pleasure one in American waters was designed by "Nat" Herreshoff, and was built less than two years ago.

AUTOINTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

The Dangerous Condition Which Produces Many Well Known Diseases.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THIS TROUBLE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" — The Wonderful Fruit Medicine — will Protect You

Autointoxication means self-poisoning, caused by continuous or partial constipation, or insufficient action of the bowels.

Instead of the refuse matter passing daily from the body, it is absorbed by the blood. As a result, the Kidneys and Skin are overworked, in their efforts to rid the blood of this poisoning.

Poisoning of the blood in this way often causes Indigestion, Loss of Appetite and Disturbed Stomach. It may produce Headaches and Sleeplessness. It may irritate the Kidneys and bring on Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, Gout, and Rheumatic Pains. It is the chief cause of Eczema—and keeps the whole system unhealthy by the constant absorption into the blood of this refuse matter.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Autointoxication or self-poisoning—as "Fruit-a-tives" acts gently on bowels, kidneys and skin, strengthens the bowels and tones up the nervous system.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Letter Written by A French Soldier At Verdun Front

The following letter with enclosure from a French soldier at Verdun appeared recently in the New York Times.

To the Editor:

I am enclosing two letters from a young Frenchman 18 years old, written last month. He was then at Vaux but I fear may have fallen in the recent actions. I have known him since he was a child, and his is unusually simple and straightforward. His letters would surely interest your readers.

HAMILTON EASTER FIELD

(First Letter)

Verdun, May 6, 1916

The order to come out of the trenches has reached this evening. We are drinking our soup, and at 6 o'clock we shall be ready to start at the sound of the whistle and the order "En avant" A feeling of agony seizes us. We do not know where we are going. We pass before the barracks at Verdun, and begin to see along the road holes made by the shells. The Germans are firing on the barracks. Now we have reached our first halt—our knapsacks are heavy on account of a large supply of provisions. Now we are starting again. The sections march at intervals of 100 meters. My duty (with two other soldiers) consists of insuring the connections. We pass innumerable ambulances. Verdun is the whirlpool which swallows up everything which comes within its reach. We come to "Cabaret Rouge" as our second halt. It is there we meet the kitchens that will supply us with food. It is said on all sides that we are going straight to the fortress of Vaux and that is dreadful, according to all accounts. We are starting again, a bomb explodes near us, we have to run for the rest of the way at full speed. We reach an excavation and receive the order to tie down with our knapsacks to cover our heads. We must now wait. The smell of the dead horses is intolerable.

Finally we start again. Firing is on all sides of us. Our eyes smart from the irritating gases and flame projectors, but we do not put on our masks. We reach finally the fortress of Tavannes, from which we can see the Germans firing on the ambulances that go into the firing line to bring away the wounded. We meet a great many wounded being carried on stretchers. One poor boy with his broken arm hanging over the side of the stretcher groans at every step. The bearers look exhausted. Their eyes have a wild expression. Think of it! They have walked five miles carrying this boy with bombs falling about them.

As we approach the tunnel of Tavannes we notice a black mass of something. It proves to be a dead man. Soon we see nothing but dead men. We march over their bodies. There are bombs everywhere—a tremendous one bursts over our heads, no harm done. Now we enter a deep ravine called the "Valley of Death". On our right is the fortress of Vaux. We meet the brave troops who have been through the worst of the battle at Verdun—whom we have been sent to replace. They are wild with joy. They jump out of their trenches and run as fast as they can. To-night we go to the "Bois de la Caillette". What will happen there? My God what a life!

(Second Letter)

May 14, 1916

Your letter came last night. If you could only know how one's spirits rise to receive such letters! It is now three days since I have been out of the infernal regions—the first line trenches. To-morrow, however we are to go back. It is awful, horrible, and all that has been said about it does not approach the reality. One cannot convey any idea of it. We remained there without food, shaken every instant by the thundering of cannons; and yet I am alive. I escaped with nothing more serious than being buried a meter and a half deep. My shoe was torn by a bursting shell; my knapsack also and three guns were broken in my hands. What is most horrible in it all is the inaction. One must remain there without moving, awaiting death which comes so stupidly without reason. If one could only see the enemy; but no, there is nothing to see but an immense expanse.

I spent four nights in a trench many meters in depth, lying on my stomach, with my knapsack over my head—without moving, hearing only the roaring of the cannons. There is also another horrible thing, and that is the number of dead bodies lying about the excavations. One cannot get them out, and if one succeeds in burying a few, they are almost immediately disinterred by bursting shells. It is horrible. The second night that I spent in the trench as I lay on a dead man. You can understand that with such conditions I cannot eat, but a terrible thirst strangles me. The provisions bearers are so courageous. They bring us water during the night. In all this there is only one consoling thought, that the enemy cannot get through neither to-day, to-morrow, nor ever. Think of me often and write. Letters bring me nearer to you.

P. S.—May 17—For my dear father: I am well and everything is going as well as possible. Keep up your courage. It will soon be over.

CAT KILLS WOMAN.

Tears Artery in Her Forehead When Window Fell on Tail.

LONDON, Ont., June 14. — Mrs. Sarah Calvary, aged 60, is dying from injuries inflicted by her pet cat. It was sitting in an open window, and when Mrs. Calvary closed the sash it caught the cat's tail. Infuriated the cat sprang at her, biting and clawing her face. An artery was severed in her forehead and Mrs. Calvary lost so much blood before tearing the cat off and making her way to a neighbour's that doctors have no hope of her recovery.

Nervous & Sleepless

Take 2 Tablets at Bedtime and you will arise feeling Refreshed, Bright & Vigorous.

When you feel gloomy and depressed and cannot sleep, suspect your nerves. When you shrink from company and would rather be alone you are losing confidence in yourself, and that can only mean weak nerves. It is not natural to be solitary and unsociable, it shows clearly that vitality has become reduced, and the nervous system correspondingly weakened. But take Dr. Cassell's Tablets for such a condition and you will be astonished at the results, astonished at the bright new health you will gain, at the splendid vigour and vitality they will give you.

Mr. Poole, a business man of 60, Infirmary Road, Sheffield, England, says:—"I had lost all confidence in myself, and was actually afraid to meet people. The alertness and activity I had formerly possessed were gone. My digestion was feeble, and sleeplessness was terrible. But when I commenced taking Dr. Cassell's Tablets I soon felt better. Now I am as well and fit as any man of my age."

Britain's Greatest Remedy

SIGN PETITION TO HANG EVERY PARSON IN TOWN

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—June 11.—To demonstrate the truth of his contention that the average business man is so compliant he will sign almost any petition put before him in evident good faith, one of the most prominent business men of Anniston, Ala., circulated among thirty leading business men of that city a petition that the city council to adopt an ordinance hang every minister of the gospel in the town, and twenty signatures were promptly attached.

COUCHED IN LEGAL LANGUAGE

The petition started by asking the city council to adopt an ordinance excusing the ministers from paying a sanitary tax. The document was couched in legal language and ambled along with numerous "whereas" and "wherefore" until the final paragraph was reached, when it was shown that in order to make payment of the tax unnecessary the ministers would have to be hanged.

"Therefore, be it resolved," read the paragraph, "that the city council is hereby requested to appoint a committee whose duty it shall be promptly to hang until he is dead each and every minister of the gospel in this city, and may the Lord have mercy on their souls!"

MANY DIDN'T READ IT.

After the joke on the signers, many of whom are conservative, influential bankers, manufacturers and merchants became generally known, some of them ran to cover by declaring they knew all along it was a joke. But others frankly admitted they did not read the document, as they should have done, before signing it.

"GLAD" MURPHY'S BROTHER

Chatham, June 16.—Word has been received here that Lieut. J. H. R. Murphy is in hospital, suffering from a rupture of the ear drums. The wounded soldier is a son of Mrs. J. B. Murphy of Chatham, and a brother of the late "Glad" Murphy, whose death cast such a gloom over a wide circle of friends. Another brother, L. S. H. Murphy, has also enlisted with a Winnipeg regiment.

Quackery and Corns

Hundreds of treatments have been offered for corns.

Some were sedatives to quiet pain. Some were acids, harsh and risky. Some mere quackery.

But one man—a famous chemist—studied corns for 25 years. And finally discovered Blue-jay.

That is now the standard treatment, gentle, certain, scientific. It is used on a million corns monthly.

It has stopped the corn pain instantly, 70 million times. It has ended the corns completely within 48 hours, in 91 per cent of the cases. The others take a little longer.

Stop paring corns. Stop treating them in wrong ways. Use Blue-jay, and that ends them in a gentle, easy way. Prove that tonight.

MID-SUMMER FASHIONS IN SUITS AND FROCKS

Wash Satin Favoured For Suits, Separate Coats and Skirts—Handkerchief Linen, Striped and Dotted, Smart for Shirtwaists

STENCILED SHOE-TOPS THE LATEST FAD

NEW YORK, June 17.—With the first, sultry days of summer, one naturally turns to white, or the pale-toned linens and cottons. Owing to the popularity of stripes and checks, it is safe to say that it will not be an all-white season, but all-white is to be very popular, nevertheless.

Wash Satin in Suits and Dresses.

One of the coolest and most novel of the new summer materials, both for suits and dresses, is wash satin. This comes in the plain flat tones and also in white. It is a practical fabric, too, as it sheds dust, does not wrinkle readily, and launders perfectly. Coats and blouses, too, for wear with skirts of linen, the corded cottons, or the regulation suit skirt of serge or gabardine, are being fashioned of wash satin, most effectively. A tennis coat, in Norfolk fashion, a belted Russian, or one of the various other peplum models, developed in a soft tone of satin, may be worn for morning, sports wear, or for afternoons.

The sheer linens, cottons and silks are all very popular for frocks and blouses. Pale jones and white predominate. Organdies and voiles are dainty and cool for afternoon frocks, and net and taffeta are combined effectively for evening and the more elaborate afternoon dresses.

Separate Coats and Skirts.

How the separate skirt could ever have been laid aside for a season or two, as it was, is indeed a mystery, when one considers how very practical it is. Its popularity this season, however, is quite making up for the year or two of indifference. Separate skirts of taffeta, satin, faille and similar silks are being worn considerably for all daytime purposes, combined with blouses of Georgette, chiffon and the other sheer silks. For sports purposes, striped and checked linens, canvas weaves, cotton velours, corduroys, and the various white corded cottons are favoured, as well as the novelty wash satins and jersey silks; wool jersey in bright tones of rose, green, gold, and like shades is also popular.

The separate skirt and contrasting coat are particularly smart for sports purposes. Some of the good shops are showing cream-white serge skirts,

Pink Organdy Blouse, Black Satin Skirt

combined with wash satin blouses, and coats of blue serge, or the novelty striped silks or linens, for tennis, golf and the like. This combination of white skirt and blue coat is not new, of course, but it is unusually effective.

Handkerchief Linen Blouses.

Organdy, voile, crepe de Chine and the wash satins are practical and popular for blouses this summer, and a particularly dainty revival is handkerchief linen. Although one expects linen to crush more easily than almost any of the other materials, it is nevertheless cool and fresh for summer wear. There are some especially pretty stripes and patterns in these linens, combinations of rose, French blue, pale greens, and the various other pastel shades, now favoured in the crepes, voiles and other sheer cottons and silks. Two effective peplum blouses are illustrated here; one is of pongee, a slip-on model, finished at the normal waist with the new elastic shirring, and the other is of pale pink organdy. The pongee blouse is worn with a pongee skirt, making a cool frock for mornings or informal afternoon purposes. The organdy blouse, which closes down the front with loops and tiny crystal buttons, is belted with a narrow black grosgrain ribbon belt, and is worn with one of the new black satin skirts. This is one of the novel combinations of the season for afternoon wear.

Neck finishes and cuffs offer particularly interesting possibilities this season. A well fitting cuff has much to do with the success of the gown, and may be flattering or decidedly unbecoming to the hand. Although one sees but few short sleeves, as the season advances they will, in all probability, be as much favoured as in seasons past. High collars seem to have entirely given way to the open throat, which proves that Dame Fashion has more of common sense to deal with just now than ever before in her reign.

The Hand-Painted Fad.

Having reached its height, it is said that the hand-painted notion is now on the wane. Perhaps the very last thing to be talked about is the painted shoe-top; black patent leather shoes, with white tops, are finished with a delicately coloured fleur-de-lis or orchid, and canvas shoes also are stencilled effectively to carry out the colour scheme of the frock. For low shoes and pumps the stencilled stocking is the thing. Cretonne trimmed canvas shoes are being worn with white linen and cotton sports costumes.

If you have nothing better, a sheet of heavy blotting paper placed beneath your dresser cover will absorb anything spilled and save the cover. It can be easily replaced when soiled and if a color is used to match the room is very attractive.

A SPLENDID WAY TO REDUCE ONE'S WEIGHT

There is, perhaps, no one thing that shows the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 35 or 38. However young our face may appear, our figures "give us away."

The cause of this over-stoutness is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce a proper combustion to destroy the fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good druggist and get oil of orlene in capsule form, and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Oil of orlene taken at meal times gives you all the benefit of the food you eat, and at the same time dissolves the fatty tissues from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1208, Montreal, Can.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH.

Go back in history of cities and communities as far as you like, and you will find that harmony was the keynote of success. Nothing has ever been achieved by adverse criticism and sectional disputes. You may not like the cut of my coat and I may not like your hat, but there is no reason why we can't work together without picking and digging and nagging each other.

Some of the sweetest dispositioned children have been irredeemably spoiled by continual fault-finding. Probably there are some people with considerable tact who can tell us of our glaring faults without getting our ill-will, but such are few and far between.

More can be done for this community by upbuilding it than trying to tear down the existing structures, even if you don't like the colour of the paint, or as old sailors say, the "cut of his jib."

We all want this town to succeed. We want more permanent residents and more live boosters. Those who are here are doing all they can, but we always welcome new blood and new ideas.

We may not be able to get all we want, but one thing is certain, that if we don't go after things, they will never come after us. Working in harmony, we can accomplish great things. We do not need to attend the same church or vote the same ticket to be at unity in doing things for our home town.

YOUR BOY.

Under the above heading, Leslies, one of the greatest magazines, says: This is a good time to think of your boy. If you do not look after him in the right way, someone will do it in the wrong way. Begin now.

Teach your boys to follow in the footsteps of his father, to respect the law, to obey his parents, to regard the rights of all men, to honour virtue, to respect womanhood and to depend upon no one but himself for his advancement.

Teach him that the golden rule of life will be found in the ten commandments. They are short. They have survived the ages. They stand to-day unchanged and unchallenged.

They comprise the first great written law given by God to man. Before these few commandments all man-made laws fade into insignificance. Teach them to your boy. There is danger ahead if you do not.

The universal drift of mankind is toward decadence. Heredity pays its premium and also exacts its discount. The son of a good father and an affectionate mother, brought up in an atmosphere of parental regard, never will disgrace the family.

The boys of to-day are to be the men of to-morrow. The destinies of the American people are to be in the hands of their sons. If the boys are taught respect for the law, both human and divine, obedience to authority, manly independence and the fear of God, this great nation will be a noble monument to man's capacity for self government and self control at a time when all the world is seething in a cauldron of unrest, unreason and disbelief.

Teach your boy to rule, but first to rule himself.

The home that possesses a cheerful wife and mother is not only a veritable haven of rest, but the safe harbour whose beacon light will guide her bread winners safely past all rocks and shoals with unfailing certainty. The woman whose cheerful spirit can take that brave attitude toword life that enables her to bear courageously the inevitable burdens of her life's environment; that strengthens her determination not to fret or worry those who, for her sake, are fighting the hard battles in the world, has reached that altitude that proclaims her price above rubies; and her influence and example are not felt only within the limits of the four walls she has made the unassailable bulwark of state and society, a happy home, but reach to those she knows not of.

It is painful to read the particulars of the numerous divorce suits that fill the columns of the daily papers. Many of these sad events are from good homes and the interested parties stand high in social lift, and not a few in church life. This separation between husband and wife is one of the sad scenes in human existence. Many times, either would prefer death to this unhappy parting. For years they have lived together and their lives have been blended into one. They have learned by bitter experience, as the years have gone by that they are not suited to one another and finally, in a moment of discord or passion, the silken cord has broken and they separate forever. Let us hope that in the world to come, when they can all see things plainer than they do in this life they may be united again, but there is a probability that unhappy marriages, resulting from unsuited positions, will not result in union or happiness in the world or the one to come. "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder."

Blind Soldiers Taught to Read, Work, Fence, Box

Sightless Victims of War Surrounded with All Comforts Possible by Charitable People—Many Learn Occupation and Will Earn Meagre Living Afterward.

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

Among those wounded in the war, writes a contributor to the Paris Temps, none appeal to our tender sympathies more than the poor soldiers whose sight has been destroyed. Their loss is irreparable.

All our genius and science, triumphant in healing a thousand other kinds of wounds and afflictions, stand baffled before these extinct luminaries. In some cases a bullet in the temple has severed the optic nerve, in others a shell fragment may have ripped out the entire eyeball, leaving only a gaping red socket. In both instances the damage is irremediable so far as human skill is concerned, and the time is long past when the God-man went about restoring sight in a miraculous manner to the blind of Palestine.

In the asylums, where charitable people are solicitously surrounding the blind soldiers with all possible comforts, these unfortunates are taught to read by means of raised letters, and they devote hours every day to this study. Many of them are also endeavoring to learn some new occupation by which they may earn a meagre living afterward. But, although study and career practice at some kind of light work attract their interested attention during the greater part of the day, there is one thing for which these blind soldiers feel a craving, and that is muscular activity.

They experience a desire to use their surplus strength, of hustling about, for it must not be forgotten that they belong to a generation which has practiced athletic sports from childhood. In school they played ball and later they took up boxing, wrestling, swimming, cycling and other forms of healthy exercise. When their country called them they were drilled in the fatigues of arms and military evolutions for months, and came to look upon warfare itself as the greatest of all sports. Up to the very time of the fatal shot which robbed them of their sight they were constantly busy engaging the enemy. Now these same vivacious youths are huddled together in some charitable shelter, subdued in spirit and not daring to indulge in that expansion of strength which their surging vitality demands.

This sad predicament impressed itself on a young fencing master to such a degree that he evolved a scheme to arrange fencing bouts in which the blind men could take part, thus providing for them a sportlike recreation and a healthy outlet for their stored up activity. Fencing, one will inquire in astonishment? But that is a sport which more than any other requires acuteness of sight, quick perception and all that! Very well, that may be so, but take a look, nevertheless, into the fencing quarters of the blind soldiers in Rue de Reuilly and watch them disport themselves at the game.

It is a roomy, well ventilated hall, taking up almost the whole little summer house in the hospital garden, where our blind wards are learning the art of parrying and feinting. The instructor, of course, is especially adapted with due consideration of the defects of the pupils, who are expected to gain some skill in the manly art only gradually, by perseverance and frequent practice. Still, results are already being obtained. Look, for instance, at that blind soldier, who without any aid went to his place on the bench a little while ago. Now the instructor calls him and he gets up, making his way to the teacher, guided only by the latter's voice. Another command and the blind soldier turns half around and puts himself in guard position. By special direction of the teacher the fencer lowers the point of his foil in a direction toward the left shoulder of his opponent. During the bout the blind fencer keeps his foil in touch with that of his adversary as much as possible, so as not to run the risk of being disarmed. On the whole his aim is to keep on the offensive all the time, and his adversary, even one with perfect eyesight, will find the blind fencer an opponent far from negligible.

When you see two blind men fencing it reminds you strangely of war duellists in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, of D'Artagnan and others, who fought in the obscurity of narrow back lanes, but with as sanguinary effect as if they had battled in broadest daylight. Although he does not see his adversary, the blind fencer notices and watches all his movements through the contact with his foil. In this the intensified sense of touch in a blind person is most remarkably demonstrated. Seeing them exchange thrusts and parries so quickly and so cleverly one would hardly imagine that these men had lost the use of their eyes.

Teaching fencing to the blind soldiers gives rise to still further possibilities of providing adequate exercise and active diversion for these poor war victims, since boxing, wrestling, jiu-jitsu and similar sports may be just as easily taught them. A sage has once said that the greatest misfortune that could befall any one is to become dead to the world before the expiration of one's natural life. Such fate no longer threatens the blind French soldier, whose confidence in himself may be renewed by his participation in practically all kinds of athletic recreation that are open to his more fortunate fellow men.

FORTUNE TELLERS DOING THRIVING BUSINESS IN FRANCE SINCE WAR

Playing on the Anxieties of Those Who Have Relatives at the Front, They Have Reaped a Golden Harvest and Matter Has Reached Proportions of National Scandal so That Police Are About to Stop the Evil.

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

Fortune tellers, card readers, clairvoyants and diviners of all kinds have been reaping a harvest in Paris since the war began. Now the police are about to take the matter up to put an end to their frauds on the public and their cruel exploitation of the anxieties of the wives, mothers and daughters of men at the front.

As a matter of fact, the war has been a gold mine for them, and the development of their business has reached the proportions of a national scandal. The clients of these fortune tellers have steadily increased since the conflict began and now include, the Temps says, persons who before the war would have scrupled to yield to such weaknesses. It would seem, as though the fear in which those live who have some dear one at the front, exposed to every peril, has ended by altering the moral wellbeing of the clearest and most steadfast minds. Without really believing in the power of divination they apply to mediums and card readers in the hope that the pretended gift of intuition will furnish some new argument leading them not to despair.

But the Paris newspapers, while blaming the fortune tellers, declare that the evil goes further than that. The Figaro thinks it is all very well to imprison the charlatans who sing too well, if not into the future, at least into the police-books of their dupes, but says there will be always superstitious persons to believe in them. There would be no seers if clients did not flock to their parlors and, rather than repression, general education alone can obtain the desired result.

The same idea is contained in an article in the Temps, which says that it is not only the poor women who seek the future in the grounds in their cup of coffee that need to be protected against their own weakness. There is a general tendency in the public mind to accord to the most extravagant predictions a value which the most elementary reasoning could not justify.

A beginning was made in the early days of the war, when ancient prophecies were recalled, merely as curiosities. They were often interpreted in the most fantastic manner to agree with existing circumstances. Later the most definite predictions were hazarded. Men to whom was accorded, no one knows why, a certain authority in political or military affairs did not hesitate to determine with rare audacity the course of events.

The Temps in this connection cites the predictions of Colonel Harrison in June, 1915, in an American magazine, which it says were the subject of grave comment throughout the world—the adhesion of Bulgaria to the Allies' cause in August, the capture of Constantinople in September, Russian occupation of Hungary in October, invasion of Germany in November, and cessation of hostilities in December. Faith in this prophecy lasted until the Bulgars jollied the Teutons, when it was admitted the American prophet had been misled, "which is the fate of all prophets," says the Temps. "From the moment they begin to make definite predictions."

But there were thousands of other prophets of this kind, from the Emperor William announcing his arrival in Paris and the end of the war by the autumn of 1914 to the reporter interviewing the latest private returned from the front. Journalists are particularly addicted to this process, declares the Temps writer, "for it cannot be admitted that they, whose business consists in not being ignorant of anything, are not thoroughly aware of the most secret intentions of William II., General Joffre or President Wilson."

"The evil," he continues, "is in the minds of the masses, who cannot confine themselves to the definite realities of the hour and who want to obtain, even from impostors, the confirmation of their desires. In a few years, the great tragedy ended, persons will be amazed at what was written from day to day during the war and at the credulity with which the most absurd prophecies and predictions were received. Then those who have predicted the future will be severely derided unless—and this will be more fortunate for them—they are forgotten and thus obtain the benefit of that force of forgetfulness without which humanity would be ashamed of itself."

Germany Already Preparing for Another War After Victory Now

Newspapers and Periodicals from Teuton Cities Tell of Scheme Under Discussion to Train Boys in the Arts of Militarism Almost from Very Birth.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

"After we win this war it will not behove us to become inactive and indifferent. In fact, Germany will still continue to have powerful and bitter enemies, and it will be our duty, as the Japanese say, when a victory is won 'to set our helmets tighter on our heads.'"

These remarks, made by the late Field Marshal von der Goltz in a speech in Constantinople some months ago, have found a ready response throughout all Germany, and the German newspapers and periodicals that reach England tell of the scheme that is now being discussed in the empire of preparing for another war after the present conflict is over.

According to the scheme outlined militarism will be more deeply rooted than even this time, and a boy will be trained to be a soldier from almost his very birth. As soon as a boy enters school at six years of age, instruction in military matters will begin and will form an important part of his studies. Drills will be held in the open air and Spartan simplicity and discipline will prevail in his bringing up. He will be put through a severe course of athletics, will be exposed to all kinds of weather and hardships, and physically his body will be hardened in order that he may be prepared to meet all the vicissitudes of a campaign.

When the boy reaches his twelfth year the drilling will become still more strenuous and several hours daily will be devoted to military training in camps especially selected by the government. This will continue until his eighteenth year, when he will be considered fit to enter the regular army.

During the school term from the twelfth to the eighteenth year the boys will constitute a boy army by themselves. They will have their army corps, brigades and regiments, and they will be commanded by generals, colonels, lieutenants and captains selected from the boys from the big general staff of Germany will consider been fitted to fill such positions. There will be regular manoeuvres and sham battles, and nothing will be overlooked or left undone to train these boys to be the best soldiers the world has yet seen.

For girls there will be training along the same lines. Athletics will form an important part of it and Spartan endurance and indifference to pain and suffering will be their training also. In addition, they will receive special instruction in nursing the wounded and will be trained to grow up strong and hearty women, fit in every way to be the wives of soldiers.

The military spirit in Germany, instead of subsiding after this war, will be more and more encouraged, and pamphlets advocating these measures are being widely distributed throughout the empire.

Hungarian Youth Off to the War Pleads in Vain for Girls' Kisses

Herr Szep, Well Known Writer, Tells Tale of Unsophisticated Youth Who Came to Prague and Was Made Dizzy by Young Women's Transparent Dresses.

(Special Dispatch.)
BERLIN, Saturday.

The Prager Tageblatt which has just arrived in this city contains a rather pretty and amusing story of the experience of a young cadet by name of Paul Waisenkind, who was graduated from the military school and who had been ordered to the front. The story was written by Herr Ernst Szep, a well known Hungarian writer and poet, and was authoritatively translated into German by Herr Stefan I. Klein. Waisenkind was an unsophisticated young man from the country, who felt that every one, particularly pretty women, would be interested in the fact that he was leaving for the front. He was not long deluded, however.

"Ensign Paul Waisenkind, having received word that he would quickly start with his regiment for the front, thought he would amuse himself as best he could and started by taking a walk in Andrassy strasse," writes Herr Szep. "He had come from the provinces and the city fascinated him. He wore a brand new uniform in grey, wore gray gloves and even the scabbard in which hung his sword was gray in color. Slowly he walked along through the crowded street, mingling with recruits, soldiers, officers, students, servant girls and newsboys, as well as numerous other members of God's people. He was particularly interested in many women and young girls, pretty girls, that were walking in the street. They were all dressed in white, and talked and smiled and laughed, and no one would imagine by looking at them that there was such a thing as a cruel war going on and that he, Paul Waisenkind, would soon be on his way to the fighting line.

"Darkness came and the street lights shone out in all their electric brilliancy. Then it was that Paul Waisenkind received a shock. As the girls walked by in their white dresses and the rays of the street lights shone upon them he saw that they were transparent. He became dizzy. It was like a dream to this country boy, almost like a scene from 'Arabian Nights,' which he had read in his boyhood. And yet he had to leave all this and go to the front! Just then a young girl radiant in her blond beauty came toward him. Paul Waisenkind stretched out his arms so that she could not pass.

"'My dear, sweet girl,' he said, 'to-morrow I must join my regiment and go to the front to fight for our dear country. Give me a kiss.'

"The young woman looked at the handsome boy with his soft blue eyes and smiled good naturedly, but when he persisted in his attentions she screamed.

"'Don't be alarmed, my dear girl,' he said. 'My name is Paul Waisenkind. I have no friends or relatives to whom I can give a parting kiss, and now I must be off to the war. Who knows if I will ever return—only one kiss'—

"'Idiot!' said the girl, and she strode away.

"Paul resumed his walk and soon espied another pretty young woman, also attired in white.

"'My dear lady,' he said, stopping her, 'to-morrow I go to war and leave everything behind—life, love and beauty. Please, just one kiss—one kiss.'

"The young woman looked him over angrily from head to feet.

"'Away with you!' she cried.

"The bewildered youth gazed after her in amazement. A crowd collected and laughed at him, but he never even heard their taunts and jeers. He thought only of the war, and it saddened him that he found not a single soul who would give him a goodby kiss. And he strode back to his quarters, looking up at the stars, and he wondered and wondered."

FRENCH ACTORS MAKE TOUR IN SWITZERLAND

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

As a counterpoise to the recent tour of a German theatrical company in Holland, where they returned incidentally doing their clothing with names, packages of butter and other eatables scarce in their own country, the most distinguished actors of the Theatre Francais have been presenting some of the master pieces of the French classical stage to audiences in Switzerland. They carried beyond the Jura and the Alps of Savoy to the shores of the Lake of Geneva and to the inhabitants of Berne, Zurich and Basle the glory of their illustrious house.

The Swiss gave a triumphal welcome to the interpreters of Corneille, and in Basle they had a semi-official reception, the head of the Department of Justice thanking them for coming.

"Just now," he said, "you have heard the applause of the public. It has shown you not only how great has been our admiration but how dear our heart is to yours. Hearing your immortal Cornelle, it seemed to us that we heard the voice of France, mother of civilization."

"There is a good propaganda," declares the Paris Temps.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Dead Easy

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

We lived in a house situated on a park. I used to walk in the park a good deal and when the weather admitted often sat reading on a bench located near the park wall. A row of houses backed up against the other side of the wall, and one morning I saw a pretty girl sitting at a second story window doing some fancy work.

The situation suggested flirtation; but, though I kept my eye on the girl without cessation, I could not detect from her actions that she was conscious of my presence. When I had remained on the bench so long that I felt to remain longer would seem as if I were watching her I withdrew.

I was telling my sister Kate about my observation and regretting that I could not win a single glance from my beauty.

"How do you know you didn't?" asked Kate.

"How do I know? Why, she kept her eyes on her work all the while."

"Humph! I once sat in a window and kept my eyes fixed on a young man in a window opposite without his knowing it."

"How did you do it?"

"By a mirror."

"You don't mean it! Is that the way girls do?"

"When they want to."

"I don't believe this girl wants to."

"I'll go with you some time, and if I can get a look at her I'll let you know whether her indifference is assumed or not."

Kate went with me, and luckily the girl was sitting at the window. The latter did not scruple to look down upon us quite frequently.

"She seems to be more interested in you," I said, "than she is in me."

"No; she's interested in you. When you were alone she would not appear to notice you. Now that I am here she is making up for lost time."

"The dickens you say! You must come here with me every day."

"Indeed, I will not. If you haven't the courage to manage the affair yourself you'll have to let it drop."

"What shall I do next?"

Kate thought a moment, then told me to send a box of cut flowers anonymously.

I had sufficient courage for that, for the girl would have no reason, so I supposed, to think that I had sent the gift, so I acted on Kate's advice. The next morning, armed with magazines and newspapers, I took my seat on the bench. In a vase on a mantel in the room occupied by my charmer were the flowers. I waited for her to appear at the window, but she did not, and I went home.

"Nothing gained by the flowers," I said to Kate. "They're on her mantel, but she did not come to the window, and I fancy she has a lover whom she suspected of having sent them."

Kate laughed and said she would go out to the bench and have a look at them. When she returned she said:

"Dick, you're a fool."

Would Wake Up With Smothering Spells.

There is nothing that brings with it such a fear of impending death as to wake up in the night with that awful sense of smothering. The terrible smothering, choking up and sinking feeling is caused by the heart and nerves being in a deranged condition, and calls for prompt relief.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the only remedy that can give prompt relief and effect a complete cure in all cases of such severity.

They strengthen and invigorate the heart, tone up the nervous system, and the trouble which is the cause of so much fear and anxiety becomes a thing of the past.

Mrs. Wm. McElwain, Temperance Vale, N.B., writes: "I am not much of a believer in medicines, but I must say Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are all right. Some years ago I was troubled with smothering spells. In the night I would be sound asleep, but would wake up with my breath all gone, and think I would never get it back again. I was telling a friend of my trouble, and he advised me to use Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. He also gave me a box which I tried, and I had only taken a few of them when I could sleep all night without any trouble. I did not finish the box until some years later, when I felt my trouble coming back. I took the rest and they have cured me entirely."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Able Says:

PEOPLE ask me why my tea tastes so good. First, I use freshly drawn water. When boiling briskly I pour it over the leaves, allowing the tea to steep, not boil, five minutes. Next, I pour the tea off the leaves into another pot. In that way you get the flavor of Red Rose Tea in all its fullness and richness. Try it.

In sealed packages only.

"Why do you say that?" I asked hopefully.

"She has put the flowers in the only place in the room where they could be seen from the bench."

I was delighted. Why had I not noticed that?

"What shall I do next?" I asked.

"Well, you might write a message and hold it so that she can read it without appearing to mean it for her."

"She couldn't read letters less than two or three inches high at that distance."

"Make them as large as you like. But she can use a glass."

"You don't mean that this girl would descend to that with a man she has never met?"

"She's not so nice but that she will do any spying that will not be found out. Of course you must sit with your back to her, else she can't see the message."

"I see. What message shall I write?"

"The words 'May I call?'"

"Good gracious! Without an introduction?"

"Leave that to her. However, you had better write your name and address."

I wrote the message in charcoal and held it up with my back to the window. By this time I had learned some points myself and held a pocket mirror so that I could see the window. Before long I saw the girl leveling a pair of opera glasses at me.

With my tiny mirror, not more than an inch in diameter, I could see her straining to decipher my message. To my delight it took her some time to do so.

"It's all right," I said to Kate when I got home, and I told her what had occurred, adding that I should take my field glasses with me the next day to read the answer.

"You'll not get an answer in that way?" said Kate.

"Why not?"

"Because it wouldn't be ladylike."

"How will I get it?"

"I don't know."

A few days later a girl told Kate that a friend of hers wished to know her. Kate assented to an introduction. The girl who wished to make the acquaintance was the girl at the window.

"Eureka!" I cried, dancing around the room. "And she asked you to bring me to call on her?"

"She did no such thing. She was not so bold. I asked her to come and see me. When she does the rest will be easy."

The rest was as easy as falling off a greased log.

Judge Rewards Man For Brave Deed

SUSPENDS SENTENCE ON YOUTH WHO STOPS RUNAWAY.

Yonkers, N. Y., June 16.—City Judge Beall on his way to court saw a young man dash into the street, grasp the bridle of a runaway horse, and bring it to a standstill after having been dragged half way across Getty Square.

The judge ran out to shake hands and compliment the youth for his bravery.

"Thanks, judge," the man said. Then he laughed. "I hope you will remember this when you get me into court."

He explained he was Frank O'Neil, and was on his way to appear for fighting on the street.

Judge Beall later suspended sentence.

FELIX DIAZ CAUGHT, DECEIVES CAPTORS AND ESCAPES DEATH

THREE DISTINGUISHED WOMEN PUT IN JAIL FOR AIDING HIM AFTER HIS IDENTITY BECAME KNOWN.

New York, June 16.—News of the capture of General Felix Diaz, by Carranza forces near Matamoras, his imprisonment and his subsequent escape from death at the hands of a firing squad, reached here yesterday, when his chief representative in the United States returned to New York City from a three months trip to New Orleans and the Texas-Mexican border.

He brought with him recent advices from Mexico City, which said that Senora Amada Diaz de la Torre, daughter of Porfirio Diaz, Senora Ramon Corral, wife of the late Vice-President of Mexico, and Senora del Villa, wife of Senor Don Pedro del Villar, a wealthy Mexican, who is now in political exile here, have been thrown into prison and charged with having conspired to defeat the ends of justice. These women who for years have occupied the highest social positions in Mexico, and whose families were up to the beginning of the Carranza revolution among the wealthiest in the country, are now imprisoned in the penitentiary in Mexico City and everything not accorded to the meanest criminals in the prison is denied them.

The account of General Diaz's adventures since March 12 was like a chapter from the life story of the most daring of revolutionary adventurers. It eclipsed the famous exploits of his uncle, Porfiro Diaz, when he escaped from his captors, the government forces, who took him prisoner on board the steamship City of Havana half a century ago. That capture was effected not many miles from where the Carranza troops seized Felix Diaz on March 15.

SHIPWRECKED IN STORM.

Diaz and more than a score of his leaders were on board the sloop La Providencia off the coast of Tamaulipas on March 10. A storm came up and for two days the little vessel was cast about in a heavy sea. Two days later she was wrecked near the shore in the vicinity of Matamoras. Diaz and his companions managed to swim ashore. They were without any clothes, food, arms or money.

Carranza troops patrolling the coast line came upon Diaz and two of his friends on March 15. They were arrested and taken before the de facto government authorities at Matamoras. His skin browned by exposure to the sun and rain and his beard unshaven, covering his face, his captors did not recognize him and accepted his statement that his name was Francisco Sanches, engineer of the sloop La Providencia. His two companions gave false names but all were regarded as suspicious characters and were charged with being reactionaries. They were confined in the barracks of the Ninth cavalry at Metamoros, from March 15 until March 19, when they were transferred to the general prison. Daily they were taken before the military commander at Metamoras, and threatened with death as reactionaries.

That the Carranza authorities believed that they had caught important enemies to their government became known to Diaz and his companions on March 26, when at daylight they were taken from the prison and sent under heavy guard to Monterey, the military headquarters of that division. An investigation into their case was at once started by Licenciado Zambrano, representing the Carranza Minister of Justice. Licenciado Quintinella was named as attorney for the prisoners, and Diaz was locked up in cell No. 10, of the Monterey penitentiary.

DECEIVES HIS CAPTORS

For thirty days every effort was made to make the prisoners confess that they were enemies of the de facto government. They were questioned and cross-questioned and investigators were sent to Brownsville, Metamoros and to points along the Tamaulipas coast to try to obtain evidence to show that the leader of the prisoners was not Francisco Sanches, as he represented himself to be.

A court martial was called to try them on April 29. No evidence could be obtained to show that the prisoners were others than seafaring men, whose small vessel had been wrecked. They were released.

Protesting that he and his companions had been unlawfully held and that in the event they should leave Monterey and the jurisdiction of the court they would again be arrested, Diaz persuaded the judge advocate and the commander of the district to grant to him and his companions a passport and safe conduct. They got it and left Monterey on April 30, for Mexico City. They were there during the excitement over the exchange of note between President Wilson and Carranza over the movements of the punitive expedition in Mexico. Diaz attended to his personal business there and remained with friends in the capital from May 3 to May 12.

WOMEN FRIENDS ARRESTED.

It was in connection with his stay in Mexico City that Senora de la Torre, Senora Corral and Senora del Villar subsequently were arrested.

General Diaz's agents here said yesterday that this report which they had just received from Mexico accounted fully for the absence of reports from Diaz for the last three months. Many reports had grown out of this failure to hear from him. One of them was published in the Herald about a month ago, when persons in close touch with Mexican developments said that they had received advices that Diaz had disappeared from Oaxaca and that he had been deposed by the revolutionary leaders under him, or that he had returned to New Orealns and was in hiding there.

General Diaz's agents here yesterday catgorically denied these reports. They have for weeks admitted that had been unable to hear from him, but they declared that he still was in Mexico. They discounted suggestion that he had been killed or captured and asserted that had either of these things occurred the Carranza authorities would have spread the news broadcast over the world.

Yesterday they said that their latest advices from Diaz clear up everything and that they are confident that he will go ahead with his revolutionary campaign against Carranza. They estimated that negotiations are now being conducted by Diaz agents with one of the most important of the Carranza leaders, and that developments may be expected within a few days.

POLICEMAN THROWS RUNAWAY HORSE

ANIMAL FALLS UPON HIM AFTER A LONG CHASE SEVERELY INJURING HIM

New York, June 16.—The flight of a horse through 110th street from First avenue to the Riverside Drive, and his pursuit by a policeman upon the running board of an automobile, with the final capture of the horse, and the infliction of serious injuries upon the policeman in the capture, excited all lower Harlem.

The horse broke away from its owner, a William Gallagher, of No. 1920 First avenue, at First avenue and 110th street, when a stone thrown by a boy struck him. Policeman Foley, of the West 123rd street station, at Eighth avenue and 110th street, boarded a passing automobile, but although the chauffeur speeded up his car it was not until the horse had reached Riverside Drive and 111th street, that he was caught.

At that point Foley sprang from the running board of the automobile and threw his arms around the horse's neck. His weight caused the animal to turn a somersault, coming down on top of the policeman. Policeman Crowley of the West 125th street station, and several near by automobilists hurried to Foley's aid. The horse was lifted from him and he was sent to the Knickerbocker Hospital, suffering from many contusions of the arms, legs and back and from the shock. It is feared also that there may be internal injuries.

Nervous and Almost Crazy With Pains in the Head

Clergyman Certifies To This Cure of Nervous Prostration by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

No ailment is more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. You may feel better for a day or two, only to find the next day that you have lost ground and are worse than ever. The headaches are worse, languid feelings are terribly depressing. As you lose strength you lose hope and courage and look to the future with fear and trembling.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the greatest blessing that has ever come to the sufferer from nervous exhaustion. It is not narcotic in its influence. It does not deaden the trembling, irritated nerves, but through the medium of the blood nourishes them back to health as nothing else can.

Mrs. Alonzo B. Eisner, Billtown, King's County, N.B., writes: "I was very low with nervous prostration and was about discouraged, as I could not sleep nights and was almost crazy with pain in my head. I had tried many doctors, but seemed to get little benefit from their treatments.

"A friend handed me Dr. Chase's Almanac, so that I might read about the Nerve Food. A single box of this treatment convinced me of its value for I was better. I cannot tell how many boxes I used, but the results were so highly satisfactory that I cannot praise it too much. My health and strength have been restored so that I can do all my own work, and I recommend the Nerve Food to all who suffer from nervous prostration.'

"This is to certify that I am acquainted with Mrs. A. B. Eisner and believe her statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to be true and correct."—Rev. Arthur A. Whitman.

Some patience is required in the treatment of nervous prostration, but you will not be using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food long before you begin to find your strength and good cheer returning. You will then be encouraged to continue the use of the food cure until cured. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmandson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

ECONOMY

By Charles F. Thwing

Economy is as remote from stinginess as it is from profuseness. It is the middle highway between the dry field of sparseness and the slough of over-expenditure. It represents an understanding of values and an appreciation of the proper use of each. It stands for a careful and just employment of every force and the realisation of every condition.

Economy is usually applied to the use of money only. This is a proper application. The results of such application make for the highest interests of man. Without it the progress of the race would be retarded, its wealth impaired, its resources exhausted.

But economy applies quite as fully to the use of time and other values. There seems to the youth little need of carefulness in the use of time. There is so much of it! The years are numberless. The opportunities which each year opens are endless. The forces that lie about are inexhaustible and imperishable.

Strength of body and mind also seem as large as time and as space. From boyhood to youth, from youth to maturity strength increases. It reaches its midday, and from the midday of maturity it either slowly or rapidly declines. It has gone forever.

In order to promote economy there should be:

1. The keeping of a record of the use made of one's money, of one's time and of other treasures.

2. The making of a plan for the use in the future of money and of other resources.

3. A willingness to learn from the experiences of past mistakes. Spendthrifts should become wise through sad lessons of prodigality.

4. A willingness to endure opposition in the practice of economy. Such opposition one may be called upon to meet. For economy is not a popular virtue in this young and rich America.

5. The forming and the nurture of the conviction that economy is a moral virtue and a moral grace. The determination should be earnest to make the most effective use of the grace and of the virtue of economy. For economy promotes the happiness of the whole community and of the individual. The happiness which it promotes is of the permanent sort. It often represents the sacrifice of trivial frivolities, but it also represents the forming and the growth of life's permanent satisfactions.

6. It is ever to be remembered that the earlier the habit of economy is formed the longer will be the time for enjoying its blessed results.

Total Abstainers

are becoming more and more appreciative of the benefits of insuring with The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company, as we not only give Total Abstainers the advantages of special plans and rates, but keep a separate classification as regards mortality. In 1905 the ratio of business done in the Abstainers' Section to that in the General Section was 2 to 3; in 1915, just a decade later, this ratio had changed to 4 to 3 in favor of the Abstainers' Department.

Two essential factors are responsible for this wonderful increase: First, the popularity of our special policies for Abstainers, coupled with public approval of our Assets and progressiveness; and, Second, the growth of temperance sentiment.

Wouldn't you like to carry a policy in a Company that recognizes in a concrete way the advantages you are entitled to as a Total Abstainer?

RUSSIAN ADVANCE MAY BE THE TURN IN WAR'S FORTUNE

Transfer of German Troops to Eastern Front Would Create Opportunity For Allied Offensive—Muscovite Swiftness Astounds Austrians

LONDON, June 15.—A despatch to the Daily News from Petrograd says: The story of Lutsk repeated itself with another town far in the Austrian rear. The garrison, thinking the reports of the Russian advance exaggerated, took no steps until too late. The cannonade was heard nearer and nearer. In the evening there was wild panic in the streets, with the soldiers running from house to house and shouting: 'The Russians are coming! The Russians are coming!'

OFFICERS FLED.

The officers fled without giving orders. Two companies who attempted to collect their baggage were captured bodily when the Russians poured into the town.

Much is due to the Russian cavalry which destroyed the enemy's communication and broke through to the rear. In some cases they actually met the Austrians in full retreat. One battery of 4-inch guns was captured with shells lying ready for reloading. The guns were swiftly swung about and the shells put into them by the Austrians were sent shrieking after the men who had been loading them.

ADVANCE IS STEADY.

"The Russians are piling victory on victory," says the despatch. "Prisoners are pouring through Kieff on the way to the interior. The Russian advance is continuing steadily in spite of the great difficulty of transport.

"It must be remembered that almost everywhere the Russians have crossed the rivers separating their system of communications from the Austrians. They have had to bridge not merely for infantry, but for heavy gun transports, for the whole fighting force swept forward in pursuit of the Austrians.

PRIMITIVE BRIDGES.

"The bridges are built with tree trunks, the axe is the only tool used and the Russian is the only nation which can use the axe with such rapidity and skill. The astonishing speed and development of the original success is largely due to the marvellous axe-work of the Russian Engineers.

"There is further evidence of the Austrians' miscalculation of the Russian strength. The Lutsk environs were heavily fortified, and only fell after a 20-hour battle, but the Austrians did not expect the fall of the town.

"It has not suffered, because after the fortifications were outflanked the Austrians were utterly nonplussed, taking to headlong flight, offered no resistance in the town, but fled westward with the Russians at their heels.

ARCHDUKES FLED.

"The Russians entered Lutsk at 8.30 in the evening. The Archduke Frederick had dined there at noon. The Archduke Ferdinan, however more wary, left the day before.

"When the pursuers had passed through the town and the Russian reserves marched in to music, extraordinary scenes were witnessed in the streets. Men, women and children threw themselves on the necks of the rescuers and the whole town cheered.

"It is evident that the stories of Austrian lack of food were not exaggerated. Great stores of wines and spirits were captured, but absolutely no eatables. The Russian organizations have already opened feeding stations and these are surrounded by the hungry but pitifully joyful population."

A COMPLETE SURPRISE.

The military corresponent of the Morning Post discussing the present war situation, says:

"The Russians have shown their usual perspicacity in choosing the time and scene for their new offensive, and their customary adroitness in concealing their plans from the Germans and Austrians, who appear to have been taken completely by surprise.

SERIOUS FOR TEUTONS.

"The country south of the Pripet marshes has recovered from the floods following the spring thaw, and the roads are in tolerable condition. The Germans are deeply committed to their offensive in France, and the Austrians to their operations on the Italian frontier. It is difficult for either to desist and to withdraw troops with a view of re-establishing the situation in Russia.

"A month ago the case would have been different. The fragmentary way in which the Germans have brought up reinforcements to Verdun, and the necessity they have been under, of denuding other parts of the front would seem to indicate that they have few reserves left in hand, while the British force in France has been gaining steadily in strength and efficiency.

"The transfer of troops to Russia would not only entail the abandonment of the offensive, but would create the opportunity for which the Allies have been waiting in France. The events now in progress, in fact, may mark the turning point in the war."

ARTILLERY'S FINE WORK.

All the special despatches from Petrograd remark on the fine work of the Russian artillery, to which the recent swift advance is mainly attributed. They contended that the Russian advance proves that the German-constructed field fortresses of steel and concrete, which were supposed to be impregnable, can be taken by assault despite all the latest scientific devices. The incomparable Russian guns and mining says one correspondent, made short work of five fold defences. It is reported that in some places, where the Austrian preparations were most elaborate, the Russians captured twelve lines of entrenchments in rapid succession, while armoured motor cars supplemented the cavalry in pursuit of the retreating forces. The pursuit was facilitated by the excellence of the roads, which the Austrians had constructed for their own transports.

USED GAS RESERVOIRS.

Northwest of Tarnopol the Russians employed gas reservoirs captured from the Austrians, "overwhelming the enemy with his own poisonous fumes."

Lutsk was surrounded by nineteen rows of entanglements when the Russians received the order to storm the place at dawn on Wednesday. The issue hung in the balance until noon then a breach was made in the Austrian position.

The town of Dubno, say the despatches, was almost demolished by the Russian artillery fire which preceded its occupation. Before their departure the Austrians removed all the civilians capable of working.

IRISH GIRLS REACH U.S.

NEW YORK, June 15. — The first girls who have left Ireland since the Dublin rebellion have arrived in New York on board the steamship Philadelphia — 256 of them — to enter domestic service in the United States. They told the immigration officials at quarantine that they could have made from $8 to $15 a week in the ammunition factories at home but they preferred to come to America and work in households.

BRUSSELS FULL OF SPIES WHO PREY ON INNOCENT PERSONS

MAASBRICHT, June 15.—Russia at its worst or Constantinople under Abdul Hamid never have been so over-run with spies as Brussels is at the present time.

Everlasting espionage has made life a burden for the Belgians, and nowhere in the country are conditions so terrible as in the capital according to reliable information smuggled across the frontier, despite all the vigilance of the kaiser's secret agents.

The spies are declared to be well paid—but only according to results. They do not draw regular salaries, but get their rewards on the strength of their reports' volume and supposed value.

Consequently, if they have no genuine information to turn in to their superiors, it is charged that they manufacture it. To be accused by them means arrest and much difficulty at the best. It is more likely to mean prolonged imprisonment.

It may mean a firing squad.

REIGN OF TERROR.

A reign of terror has resulted. Nobody feels safe, even in the privacy of his own home. The people live in a constant state of nervous dread. A tap on the shoulder—prison, and perhaps death, may come at any instant.

In Brussels alone it is declared there are 1,500 spies. How busy they are is proved by the extravagant style in which they live.

Whenever funds run short fresh victims must be found.

Women are numerous among the secret agents. They may be found all up and down the social side, from the relative of Gen. von Bissing, who took advantage of her position to keep an eye on the most fashionable functions in the most exclusive residences, down to the humblest seam stress or domestic servant.

ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS.

There are officers' and professors' wives who keep watch in middle-class circles.

There are the demimondaines who send in reports from the theatres, restaurants and boulevards.

There are men formerly prominent in business, of which now, practically there is none, who use their former connections and acquaintance to keep the German authorities posted concerning doings in fiancial and industrial circles.

Even the most ordinary working man is carefully watched.

A case is reported from the Rue de Flandre, in Brussels, where the driver of a brewery wagon and his assistant were arrested because after they had unloaded a heavy barrel of beer one of them remarked: "The Kaiser himself could not have done it so neatly."

THE PALE, BLOODLESS YOUNG GIRL

Easily Noticed by Her Blanched Cheeks, Bloodless Lips and Dull Eyes

Perhaps she is sixteen. Suddenly she seems to lose strength. Her beauty fades because her vitality is steadily decreasing. Dark circles appear under the eyes which become lustreless and dull. Her spirits droop, for no girl can be contented and happy in such a condition.

This may be quickly corrected by taking Ferrozone. It supplies what is lacking in the blood, purifies and strengthens it, and keeps it in perfect order. Ferrozone makes plenty of red blood corpuscles that manifest themselves in a healthy ruddy complexion. It aids the stomach to do its work, and creates a natural healthy relish for food.

Every organ of the body is benefited by Ferrozone. It rebuilds the entire system, makes new tissue, strengthens weak flabby muscles, makes thin people fat and sick people well.

No case of Anaemia is too chronic for Ferrozone. It may take time, but if persistently used will cure in the end. It will give you a well-developed form, clear complexion, pure breath and will restore the bloom to faded cheeks and color to the lips more quickly than any other remedy.

Every woman who desires a vigorous constitution, and the good looks that come with good health, should take Ferrozone after each meal regularly. It is a wonderful tonic for the brain, the nerves and the blood, and acts also as an efficient but harmless regulator of the menstrual flow. In fact for all diseases peculiar to women and growing girls, Ferrozone has no equal as your druggist can tell you.

Three weeks' treatment costs 50c. or three boxes for $1.25. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

Regulate Kidneys AND Relieve Constipation

Gin Pills are acknowledged to have the largest sale of any proprietary medicine in Canada—an achievement solely due to their remarkable virtue as a Kidney and Bladder remedy.

But users of Gin Pills have discovered that this invaluable remedy also acts as a mild cathartic. The evidence of hundreds of letters we have received establishes the very logical fact that in compounding a medicine to heal and tone up the Kidneys and Bladder certain of the ingredients have a stimulating effect upon the other organs, especially the bowels.

It is important to know, in the case of constipated patients, that Gin Pills do not act harshly on the bowels; there is no griping, but a gradual and gentle restoration of the function. Try Gin Pills for constipation. In thus relieving the bowels, you safeguard yourself against possible Kidney trouble.

Gin Pills are 50c. a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50 at your dealer's. A trial treatment will be sent upon request, to

Duchess Gives Timely Advice to Pretty Slacker

The American Duchess of Marlborough has a sharp and graceful wit, which she turned recently, as an American diplomat reports, on the unmarried slackers—on the young men who have rushed into war works in order to escape the trenches.

The occasion was a London dinner party, and a young and pretty girl said to the philanthropic duchess.

"I want to do something for my country. What do you advise me, duchess, to take up?"

The duchess smiled at the pretty girl and said:

"I'd go into the ammunition factory if I were you, my dear. That's where all the single men are."—Washington Star.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON.

The blood must be filtered, otherwise the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid, you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail you are poisoned. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. Dead Man's Hill Near Verdun Now An Inferno of Shell Fire

Violent Artillery Attacks All Along the Verdun Front---German Grenade Attack at Avocourt Was Easily Repulsed ---French Troops Penetrate German Lines in the Vosges, Killing Many of the Defenders.

GERMANS MAKE SEVERAL AIR RAIDS

PARIS (French Official Communique), June 17.—Violent artillery attacks are continuing on both banks of the Meuse-Verdun front, according to the official statement of the French War Office to-day.

The duel of heavy guns in the Avocourt sector is particularly heavy. Dead Man's Hill last night was an inferno of shell fire. A German hand grenade attack at Avocourt was easily repulsed.

In the Vosges, east of Thann, a detachment of French infantry penetrated two German lines, killing many of the German defenders and taking other prisoners.

The attackers returned without suffering losses.

The German flyers bombarded Dunkirk, Pont a Mousson and Barledue yesterday and last night, killing four persons and wounding fifteen, according to the French official statement.

A French air squadron bombarded Longuyon, Montmedy and Auduin.

Austrians Striving To Make a Stand

Examiner Special:

LONDON, June 17.—That the Austrians, driven back from their first line of trenches on the eastern front, have settled into new positions of strength and are stubbornly resisting the Russian advance, is the conclusion gained here from the fact that the Russian official report does not carry statements of tremendous territorial gains daily as in the first several days of the drive.

The capture of Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, is not yet officially confirmed, though reported unofficially from several sources. Its capture has not been denied from Vienna.

From a few miles north of Tarnopol to Brody, the Austrians have held their ground steadily, due, says Petrograd, to the fact that the greatest violence of the Russian drive has been developed north and south of this sector.

The drive has already had the effect of lessening in a marked degree the Austrian pressure against the Italians on the Trentino front. King Victor Emmanuel of Italy has congratulated the Czar on the success of the offensive.

FOE'S BATTLE CRUISER WAS BADLY DAMAGED

Officers' Casualty List is Growing Steadily

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, Ont., June 17.—An additional list of officers killed and wounded bring the total of of Canadian officers' casualties up to 416 since the fighting commenced on the Ypres salient, on June 2. With few exceptions they all belong to the First Canadian Division, which regained the ground lost when the Germans attacked. Following are the Ontario men killed:

Major P. S. Ballachey, Capt. D. J. McKinney, Capt. R. J. Aitken, Lieut. O. W. Grant.

LOCAL OFFICER IS SAID TO BE PRISONER OF WAR

Lieut. E. Massie-Cooke, Engineers, Is Unofficially Reported a Prisoner in Germany—Had Been Reported Missing

PTE. YOUNG WOUNDED

Mrs. E. Massie Cooke, Bethune street, received a wire from Ottawa this morning stating that her husband, Lieut. Massie Cooke of the Canadian Engineers, is unofficially reported missing last week and today's wire makes it appear as if he was taken prisoner by the Germans during the Zillibeke fighting two weeks ago. Lieut. Massie Cooke went overseas last autumn as a sergeant in the 2nd Canadian Pioneer Battalion and was given a commission in the Canadian Engineers while in England.

Pte. Young Wounded.

Still another local member of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles is on the honour roll. Yesterday's casualty list contained the name of Pte. Harry Young, who enlisted here in B squadron, 8th C. M. R. in January, 1915. Pte. Young, who was employed in the C.G.E. before enlisting, lived at 48 Jackson avenue and was well known in Peterborough. Pte. Young's relatives live in England.

Lakefield Casualties.

A telegram was received by Miss Lily Frankish, of Lakefield, on Wednesday, stating that her brother, Lance-Corp. Arthur Frankish, was officially reported killed in action in France between June 2nd and 5th. L.-Corp. Frankish enlisted in the Canadian Mounted Rifles at Calgary and went overseas last November. He formerly resided in the township of Douro, near Lakefield, and moved to western Canada a number of years ago. Mrs. A. J. Young and Mrs. J. H. Payne of Lakefield, are sisters, and Messrs. Charles and William Frankish of Douro, are brothers.

Mrs. E. Robinson, Lakefield, received a telegram on Thursday morning stating that her son, Private Wm. Robinson, of the 39th Battalion, had been wounded in the arm and leg, on June 5th, in the fighting at Hooge, France. Pte Robinson's many friends hope for his speedy recovery.

Signaller H. G. Simpson, of Lakefield, has been removed to the base hospital in France and is now convalescing from his illness in the famous English hospital, the Royal Victoria, Netley, Southampton.

SOCCER TEAM OF 93rd BATTALION IS PROPERLY ORGANIZED

Team Has Run Up Big Scores in Exhibition Games and is Ready For the League Fixtures---Officers Elected--Paragraphs From Barriefield Camp---Many 93rd Men Home on Leave---To-day's Military News.

Barriefield Camp, June 16.— At a well attended meeting in the sergeants' recreation tent, it was decided to form a football club in connection with the 93rd Battalion, in view of the interest shown in this particular sport. The officers and committee were chosen and the club put on a sound basis. A collection was taken up amongst the officers of the battalion and a few of the men, which resulted in $25.00 to start out with. Up to the present time the boys have played three matches, scoring 26 goals to their opponents' nil. This alone speaks well for the future of the team. The following officers were appointed:

Captain— Co. Sergt.-Major Hartshorn.

Vice-Captain—Co. Sergt-Major Calladine.

Secy-Treas.— Q. M. Sergt.-C. W King.

Committee—Corpl Clappinson, Pte. Marsh.

The committee have to arrange a series of matches with other battalions and a full report will appear in the Examiner from time to time.

A meeting of the Barriefield Camp Athletic Association was held in the headquarters mess tent on Wednesday evening with every battalion represented. Capt. James T. Sutherland, 146th Battalion, resigned as president, in order to allow for the election of Lieut.-Col. E. A. Thompson, G.S.O., which election was carried unanimously, the members recognizing the splendid asistance that Col. Thompson is giving to camp sports.

It was decided that as the association was to be strictly military in character, the application from the Y.M.C.A. for representation on the committe was rejected.

Every battalion has its parade ground for practice purposes, and inter-battalion sports will be held every evening. On Friday evening the grounds would be used by the team scheduled in camp orders of that day for the game on the Saturday following.

The meeting was a very enthusiastic one, and extensive plans for sports are being arranged.

The Machine Gun Section of the 93rd Battalion is home on leave from Barriefield Camp. Sergt.. Herb O'Heron, Sergt. Stan. Anderson, and all the other members of the "suicide squad" are home, the section obtaining leave in a body, so as to not interfere with the training any longer than was necessary.

Quartermaster-Sergt. C. W. King, Sergt. Cook Wride, and Sergt. J. Knowles are among the 93rd noncoms home on leave from Barriefield.

Corp. Harry White and Lance-Corp. P. Smith, of the 93rd, who were in hospital at Kingston for some time, are now home on leave.

Sergt. D. G. Melton, of the Paymaster's Office, 93rd Battalion, is spending a few days' leave at his home, Park street.

Lance-Corp. Norman Saxby, who was one of the 93rd squad to attend the Bayonet Fighting and Physical Training School at London, is home on leave from Kingston.

Ptes. W. Loader and H. Loader, of the 93rd Battalion Band, were the principal factors in a concert given in the Y.M.C.A. tent at Barriefield the other night. The ability of the Loader brothers is well known in Peterborough.

Lieuts. Stock and Hughes, 93rd Battalion, have left for Ottawa, where they will attend the School of Musketry course at Rockcliffe ranges. Lieuts. Eastwood and Dupuy have returned from the school.

Capt. Wilson, the new medical officer of the 93rd Battalion, has taken over his duties and on inspection has found that the Peterborough command is made up of a splendid body of men. The general health and conduct is excellent.—Kingston Whig.

CAMP NOTES.

The Sergts. of the 93rd are well aware of the prowess of Battalion Sergt.-Major Miller as a whist player. Last night he certainly ran up against a tough proposition when he and Sergt. O'Heron met Bandmaster Hughes and Sergt. Toone in a friendly game. When the game was called you could not see the Sergt.-Major's face for tears. He dropped into the hole to the tune of three games to nil.

It is raining hard here to-day, but the boys are nicely fixed up in the large marquee. It is certainly a great acquisition to the camp, and this is the kind of weather we can appreciate being under cover.

Q. M. Sergt. King and Private Field of the B.O.R. staff are taking their leave this week end.

No. 196627 Pte. F. E. Post and No. 196853 Pte. J. Johnson have been discharged from the field hospital.

The 93rd Battalion are supplying the guards and piquets for the camp on Sunday, June 18th.

Lieut. Hills of the A. S. Corps, who was in Peterborough for the greater part of the winter, unfortunately sprained his ankle through falling in a sewer on the camp grounds. He is, however, able to get around.

Bandmaster Hughes is trying to make arrangements to return to Kingston with the excursion that is being run to Barriefield camp June 26th. The band are taking their instru-

A MOST MOMENTOUS DECISION FOR IRELAND

PTE. LAURENCE CAMPBELL, well known local boy with the Mounted Rifles, who was wounded in the Zillibeke fighting.

Will Be Ultimately in Favour of Lloyd George's Proposal It is Expected But There is Much Room For Doubt.

THE ALTERNATIVES

By T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, June 17.—Ireland pauses before making the most momentous decision of her history. I believe the decision will be ultimately in favour of Mr. Lloyd George's proposals, but there is room for much doubt. The chief difficulty is not the nature of the proposals. The Ulster Nationalist minority, living under oppressive conditions, are the most vehement, energetic and United Nationalists in all Ireland. They resent bitterly the separation of any portion of their province from the glories and protection of a Home Rule Parliament.

The difficulty comes from the blunders of the military, especially from the number of executions. In my brief visit to Dublin I found this bitterness of feeling more widespread, deeper, and fiercer than we in England could realise, and as a result of a rebellion which nine out of ten Irish Nationalists disapproved even execrated as fatal to Ireland's chance of final liberty, there is now found a great wave of pity for the men executed. Wholesale arrests of men absolutely loyal to Mr. Redmond and Mr. Redmond's policies, created a similar though not as fierce exasperation in other parts of the country.

It is difficult to get calm consideration for any proposition in such an atmosphere.

THE ALTERNATIVES.

In addition, all the enemies of Home Rule and the Irish party are attempting to kill a settlement in order to kill Home Rule and the Irish Party. Their campaigning is ferocious, unscrupulous and mendacious. But the alternatives are now clearly before the Irish people. They are, first, immediate liberty with a Home Rule Parliament and a Home Rule Ministry for twenty-six out of thirty-two Irish counties, with the certainty that in time the other six will be draw in by economic causes. The other alternative is the continuation of the military regime with coersion, bloodshed and anarchy for perhaps another generation. I trust the instinct of my race to make the one wise choice between such alternatives.

The negotiators to whom was entrusted the great attempt to settle the Irish question had as big and as difficult a job as any body of men that ever had to help in the decision of a long outstanding quarrel. Some words may be welcome with regard to the main figures in this remarkable enterprise.

Lloyd George is at once the most energetic and vehement of fighters, and the most indefatigable and successful of peace negotiators. His first great success indeed in official life was in preventing a disastrous railway strike which would have held up all the trade of the country and perhaps led to bloodshed. He took the bold step of interviewing everybody; he did not attempt to bring the railway directors and the labour leaders into the same room, but he had them in adjoining rooms, and he passed from one room to the other. He was vocal and he was silent just as the exigencies demanded.

A GREAT ADVANTAGE.

Lloyd George has a great advantage in playing his present part by being on equally good terms with all the parties to the transaction. The Nationalists have always regarded him as one of themselves, partly because he is a Celt, partly because he has fought so strongly for the National principle in his own little country. On the other hand there is no man who is in more thorough

Trouble At The Incinerator

Property Committee Consider Ways and Means of Securing Help

The Property Committee of the City Council met last night and considered the management of the incinerator. The two men who have been in charge have been compelled to retire, one by sickness, and the other has enlisted.

Ald. Saunders and the Sanitary Inspector were given power to employ capable men for the work.

A LOSING PROPOSITION.

The collection of nightsoil in the city, where sewerage connections are not available, is a source of considerable worry to the Committee.

It was decided to recommend to the City Council that the question be referred to the Board of Health to solve a system of collection that would satisfy all parties, and to report.

The Council has been losing money on the scheme now in vogue and will continue to do so unless the recommendation is accepted.

Justus Blodgett, who has the contract, is quite willing to give it up.

LIKE THE RUSSIANS THE 57TH CAME BACK

Had Thirty Pieces For Last Night's Concert After Losing Twenty-four During the Winter

The 57th Regimental band demonstrated to the large crowd at the first Friday concert of the season in Victoria Park last night that although many of its minstrel boys have gone to the war, its harps are still vibrating to the old music augmented by the indomitable spirit that has responded to the sacrifices. Since the last concerts a year ago, twenty-four players have joined the colours, a band in themselves; yet Bandmaster Gliddon counted thirty players last night who surprised the crowd by the quality of their music. Messrs W. E. Loch, J. M. Greene, John Harper, R. J. Devey and others helped fill the conspicuous vacancies and it is needless to say that their cooperation in this respect will be thoroughly appreciated by the public. The programme included a Rossini overture and other acceptable numbers. The band not only made a very favourable impression last night, but it gave the promise of future programmes and other satisfactory work.

POINTS OF VIEW.

There are said to be 40,000 auto licenses issued in Ontario. Assuming that the average cost of an automobile is $1,000, that means four million dollars rolling here and there through the country, and to and fro, and round about in our towns and cities, not to speak of the cost of upkeep and fuel, which, in the course of a season, very considerably fatten the four millions. This is inferentially construed into extravagance of luxury by one journal, which computes its conclusion with the fact that the mission funds of the Presbyterian Church are short of the needs by $100,000.

But is the fact of four million dollars invested in autos in Ontario a thing to be deplored? A large portion of this amount represents labour—employment in manufacture, and the daily bread of thousands of families, and it is not all luxury thousands of autos are agencies in the work of commercial and industrial world. If autos were not bought there would be lack of employment, and money borrowed to pay for autos would not be earning interest. If autos are regarded as luxuries that might be dispensed with and the money they represent as due to missionary funds, why not regard the millions of money piled up in churches, unduly expensive, elaborate and ornate, as representing money due to the missionary cause? It is a nice thing to decide to what extent any one interest can assert superiority of claim above the interests of the daily life comfort and even even moderate luxuries legitimately enjoyable by the mass of the community or country.

It would be impossible to prescribe the degree of sacrifice one is in duty bound to make in the support of even the best of causes. Ministers of the Gospel who are expected to be most zealous of the interests of missions, deserve, and get good salaries; yet they would hesitate to make, and we would not demand, that they make in the devotion of their income to the funds for missions, as much sacrifice as many members of their flocks make in pinching to contribute their mite to the minister's stipend.

If we carry analysis of motives, duties and performance and relative conditions far enough, we shall see that the "luxuries" of autos, cigars, and tobacco and drink are not the only things that might be eliminated from the expenditures of all of us in order to bring missionary, patriotic and other good funds up to just level with our responsibilities of giving, and into true relation to the sacrifices we are required to make for the cause of God in the mission field and the fight for His Christianity in the battlefield.

While too many utterly ignore and neglect the duty of doing their share in this time of war, can many of us claim that, in this regard, in whatever we give, or whatever we do, no matter how much, we are sacrificing one-hundredth part of what the mother and wife does in sending her son or husband to the fighting line, or of what the son or husband does in taking on the colours? The giving or doing that does not involve sacrifice, be it great or small, has much more material than moral merit.

The immense and wicked national waste represented by expenditure upon drink and tobacco, and tea and coffee, too, is only wicked when it transgresses true and just ratio to the discharge of duty in other expenditures demanded of us. If we analysed our lives, took stock of our manner and measure of living, we should find that beyond the necessities of decent and comfortable living and reasonable enjoyment of pleasure, we collectively, spend millions that could be better employed in good causes; so that in principle, when we impose our definition of luxury and expenditure upon others, we are setting up a standard of living and conduct, by which, in effect, we fail to regulate our own lives and actions. We are fighting this great war for liberty; and we must not deny to others the liberty of words, of judgment, and of conscience we claim for ourselves. We must respect each other's point of view.

IS IT "DAMNABLE?"

A good citizen said to the Examiner this morning— "Did you see that damnable thing on Charlotte street?" "What?" "Why, after the city workmen had nicely levelled, raked and seeded the boulevard on Charlotte street, at the corner of Pearl avenue, some scoundrels have tramped a deep and wide path across it." This is the truth. And this is not the first time that Canadian Huns have destroyed this work. The city workmen before they left the street came back and repaired the first damage done to the boulevard.

This may seem to be a small matter; but it becomes a great matter by being only a type of the vandalism that is working in every part of Peterborough to destroy the public beauty of the city. Did the citizen who described the destruction done to the boulevard on Charlotte street use too strong a word when he called it "damnable?" Any school boy can tell us that "damn" and "damnable" are derived from the Latin verb, "damnare," to condemn. Should not such destruction be condemned, and should not the perpetrators of it especially be condemned—to a term in jail? They see city workmen spending city money to beautify the streets in the interests of the citizens, and by destroying the beauty and tidiness created, they show no more respect for the rights and pleasure of citizens than the Germans did for the rights and happiness of Belgium when they walked over it with their brigand armies, tramping out and destroying the neatly tilled fields and farms. The men who destroy the Charlotte street boulevard, are perhaps making shells to destroy the might of German "frightfulness," but they are undoing their own work, by committing acts prompted by the real German spirit—disregard for the rights and the decencies of civilization.

What are we going to do about it? What can we do? We might prevail upon the pulpits and schools to preach and teach the gospel of the golden rule—respect for the rights and feelings of others; but for those whose thick-skinned souls can't be reached by such means, we should have our authorities pass by-laws and enforce them. But can we put much faith to the authorities; to the authorities that have dumped a stoneheap from a farmer's field upon Victoria park in the shape of a cairn—a monument to the good taste and artistic conception that lie buried beneath it?

COUNTRY AND DUTY.

One who picks up that charming "journal of a happy man," by Emile Souvestre—"Un Philosophe sous les Toits," and happens to open the volume at "La Patrie," will find a thought-stirring definition of what one's country and what patriotism is. A one-legged veteran of Waterloo is telling the "philosopher of the attic" how he came to go "fight for his country at Waterloo. When a boy, every time he visited his uncle, himself a retired veteran lieutenant, the latter always told him something that made him think.

"But one day," the story goes on, "I found him very serious."

"Jerome," he said to me, "do you know what is going on at the frontier?"

"No, Lieutenant," I answered.

"Well," he continued, "the country is in danger."

I didn't understand very well, but what he said affected me.

"You have, perhaps, never thought what your country is," said he, placing a hand upon my shoulder; 'it is all that surrounds you; all that which has raised and nourished you; all that you love; those fields that you see; those houses, these trees, these young girls that pass laughing, they are your country. The laws that protect you, the bread your labour earns; the words you exchange with your neighbours; the joys and sorrows that come from the men and things among which you live, these are your country. The little room where you have seen your mother; the memories she has left you; the earth where she lies at rest, these are your country. Call to mind, my boy, your rights, your duties, your affections, and your wants, your recollections, and your gratitude; gather all these under one name, and that name will be your country.

"I was trembling with emotion great tears in my eyes. "Ah, I understand," I cried; "it is the family in full—the nation. It is that part of the world to which God has attached our body and soul."

"Right, Jerome," continued the old soldier, "and you also understand, do you not, all that we owe it?"

"Parbleu," I replied, "we owe it all that we are—it is a matter of love."

"And a matter of right, too, my boy. The member of a family who does not give his share of service, and does not contribute to its happiness neglects his duties and is a bad relative. The associate who does not enrich his firm with all his forces, with all his courage, with all his good will, defrauds it and is a dishonest man. In the same way, the man who enjoys the advantages of having a country without accepting all the responsibilities, forfeits his honour and is a bad citizen."

"And what must I do, Lieutenant, to be a good citizen?"

"Do that for your country which one should do for his father and mother."

There may be little new in all this to those who have used their minds to think; but, if we judge by the attitude and actions of those around us, we shall see that there are thousands who do not know—because they do not think and feel—what their country is, and what duty and what affection they owe it. They do not realize that all they have and are; all the good they enjoy, all the protection in the pursuit in peace and safety of happiness; all the joys of life, they owe to their country, which is the concrete complement, and, indeed, instrument of the benefactions of divine Providence.

If our country and all it represents for us, is in danger; if its liberties are threatened; if all it means to us is menaced, our duty is to use all our will, all our powers, to avert the calamity.

At this moment our country, our Canada, our liberties, all our interests bound up in, and with, our beloved Canada are as distinctly threatened as if the enemy were at our gates. If Germany, and the powers in conspiracy with her, win this war, we are doomed to lose our country as we know it and value it. Germany's asserted ambition is world-domination. Canada is a big part, and, to us, a great part, of the world. If Germany wins, we may look, in our turn, to suffer all that Belgium is suffering, and all that Germany is suffering from the rule of tyrannic militarism.

In this view, the man physically fit, who does not come forward to fight for his country, to protect all he enjoys, and all his friends and relatives and dependents enjoy, is a bad citizen, unworthy of the protection of the state, and he becomes a pauper in that he accepts what he will not work for and fight for; and the man who stands idly by and leaves his friends and acquaintances and chums to fight and bleed and die for him, is an indescribable cad, a parasite, a wart upon the body of citizenship. These may seem hard words, but anybody who feels that they apply to him and feels like complaining of their character, has a remedy in his own hands—by ceasing to deserve their application to him. He has only to think what his country means to him, what he owes his country, and act accordingly, and by doing his duty, cease to be a foreigner, an Ishmaelite, a man without a home; for the man who will not fight and work for his country and his home has no country and home. He forfeits all claim to what he will not help protect.

FEDERAL AID IS SOUGHT

Ontario War Committee Confers With Ministers.

OTTAWA, June 17.—An important conference between representatives of the Dominion Government and of the War Committee established by the Ontario Legislature, at its recent session, was held in the office of the Prime Minister. The Federal Government was represented by Sir Robert Bordon, Hon. A. E. Kemp, chairman of the War Purchasing Commission; Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture; Mr. F. A. Acland, Deputy Minister of Labour; Adjutant-General Hodgins, and Dr. C. C. James, Agricultural Commissioner.

It was contended by A. H. Abbott, secretary of the War Committee, that the work of that body could be rendered very much more effective and would produce more valuable results if Federal co-operation on certain specific lines were forthcoming. It has been found that recruiting is proving a serious drain on the supply of farm labour, and as agricultural production is considered a very important element in Canada's participation in the war, a system which will not impose an undue burden on this class of industry is very desirable. Sir Robert Borden explained that the conference was only a preliminary one, and that the matters in question will be further worked out between the Dominion and Provincial authorities.

THE PETERBOROUGH RED CROSS SOCIETY COLUMN

Peterboro boys are paying toll for their manhood and patriotism these days, as the casualty lists prove.

They are paying unflinchingly, and their payment is saving the soul of the human race.

We mourn their loss and we sorrow with those to whom they were dear, but our grief is intermingled with a glorious pride.

Many who have fallen were looking out on life and listening to its many calls, the call of fame, of comfort, of money.

To these calls the splendid young manhood of our country turned a deaf ear, though the sheer hard logic of a material world bade them stay. We thank God that the possessed qualities of mind and soul, which alike in nations and individuals, money cannot buy or comfort replace.

The call of the Empire to come and aid in preserving for all peoples a true and high civilization found them ready, and their abilities and lives, though holding forth great promises of attainment, have not been wasted, if we as a nation regain those essentials, without which life is worthless.

Grief must have its course, but over such men who die in the path of duty shall we not also chant a song of joy, that Canada, the land we love, can still produce such spirits. They have soared to a grandeur of character to which those who hear and understand the call, and could, but will not respond, can never attain.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breast; no weakness, no contempt,
Dispraise or blame; nothing but well and fair
And what may quiet us in a death so noble.

The Canadian Red Cross Society has now no less than 484 branches throughout the Dominion, an increase of no less than 300 over last year.

In addition to these new branches, a large number of auxiliary societies acting in co-operation with them, have been established in places where owing to sparse population it has been found difficult or undesirable to issue warrants to establish branches.

This large increase speaks loudly of the confidence of the general public in the work and administration of the Society. No society has nobler or grander aims, and the affairs of no other society are more ably or economically administered than are those of the Red Cross Society.

The magnitude of the work is realised in a small degree when the hospitals and institutions which have been the recipients of Red Cross supplies reaches a total of 98. Not only England, but France, Belgium and Serbia have had large supplies sent to them.

The question is often asked, Why does the Red Cross need socks? The answer is that frequently the wounded man comes into the hospital literally stripped; he goes out again well-equipped.

When he begins to get well, to the joy of the soldier who has lost his all, he finds besides his bed a kit-bag, containing shirts, socks, slippers, hair and tooth brushes, towels, soap, writing paper, pencil, razor, etc.

In the Red Cross exhibit shown in Turnbull's windows recently over 50 of these bags were on view and proved very interesting. They cost a good deal to get up so we cannot send them every month along with other supplies, but Miss Rush is always glad to explain about them to anyone who would like to make and fit one out completely. There is no more welcome gift to the convalescent soldier than one of this nature.

Canadian Hospitals, Canadian doctors and Canadian nurses are winning great praise for their splendid and efficient services. The fine new hospital, gifted by the province of Ontario, and situated amidst lovely scenery on a hillside at Orpington, England, affords evidence of this. It has splendid surgical conveniences and should prove a model of its kind; all the staff of doctors and nurses are Canadian, but the patients will be drawn from every section of the Empire army. Canada has no desire to limit her medical gifts to her own sons, and moreover the Canadian soldiers prefer that this should not be done, for if it were, the only visitors the Canadian boys would have would be the weekly Red Cross ones, but as it is they share in the brightness and cheeriness brought into the wards by the British soldiers' friends.

To illustrate the efficiency of the Canadian doctor, one has only to draw attention to the big hospital at Treport, France, where over 11,000 patients, direct from the battle front have been treated, and where the death rate has been only three-fifths of one per cent.

The sending of supplies by the Canadian Red Cross to France, which has suffered so terribly by the long-drawn out struggle for Verdun, was limited by the military authorities to one hundred cases a day, but arrangements have now been made with the French authorities to take delivery of five thousand four hundred and ninety cases, which will be removed immediately to France by one of their own transports.

It is a happy thought to we Canadian women to know we are helping to allay and soothe the suffering of the heroic men of France.

We have been asked for the best method of washing socks before sending them to the Red Cross.

The way we do them is to make a good lather of Lux, taking care not to use water that is very hot; we wash them twice in the hot water and then rinse them in two lots of clean water of the same temperature, never wringing them, merely squeezing them well. Never rub soap on the socks.

On Monday afternoon at the Red Cross work room, Mrs. Nattrass has very kindly agreed to bring her knitting machine and demonstrate the knitting of socks to all those present. Mrs. Nattrass has been knitting for the Toronto Women's Patriotic League and her work has been greatly appreciated, and the Peterboro Branch is much indebted to her for so kindly agreeing to give the workers an opportunity of seeing her at work on her machine. We hope there will be a large attendance.

The attendance at the workroom this week has been good, especially on Monday. We would like to see it just as full on all the days.

The workers have toiled faithfully this week in their endeavour to make up for the week when the room was closed. There is ample gauze on hand now, so everybody who wishes to lend a hand now is welcome. It is a little hard for those who have not been in the habit of doing work outside their own home or church to make the first start and come to our work room at the public library building, especially if they do not happen to know many present.

The knowledge that you are trying to help others by coming helps wonderfully.

We women of the 20th century are gaining a larger outlook on life, undreamt of channels of service are opening up to us in these sad and eventful days.

Life is teeming with interest to the thinking woman, and it is to her credit that she is responding so willingly and so capably to the call, and she proving her fitness to help in the solving of life's problems.

Women who live in the real world, who have eyes to see all the struggling and suffering learn to care for the community, and the woman who learns to care for the community soon learns to think in terms of humanity, and humanity means the world.

The home life in Peterboro does not suffer one iota because the wife and mother is learning to come out from the home for on afternoon and is endeavouring to do a little to ease the bodily pain caused by the struggle, which we pray will end victoriously ere long.

SERVICE.

Youthful, Beautiful Skin Easy to Have

You may be as healthy as a bird in the air and still have a poor complexion. Changing seasons and temperatures, wind, dust and dirt, are apt to injure any skin, even though the general health be good. When these external influences spoil the complexion the natural thing to do is to remove the spoil by external means. Ordinary mercolised wax will do this. It will actually absorb the weather-soiled film-skin, a little each day. In a week or two you will have a brand new complexion, a new skin. The exquisitely beautiful and youthful complexion thus acquired, comes so easily, without harm or discomfort, there's no reason why any woman should not adopt this simple treatment. Get an ounce of mercolised wax at any drug store, apply nightly like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. This will not fail in any case.

To quickly remove wrinkles, signs of care and age, bathe the face occasionally in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. of witch hazel. The results will surprise you.

Stole the Cargo Forgot Vessel

LIGHTER UNACCOUNTABLY LEFT BEHIND WHEN THIEVES GOT AWAY WITH SEVEN TONS OF COPPER.

NEW YORK, June 16.—One of the most pathetic robberies that has come to the attention of the police since Shrove Tuesday occurred early yesterday morning when sneak thieves stole seven tons of copper from the lighter John McAllister, in the Hudson River at Morton street. How the criminals got the copper away from the pier without being searched because of their bulky appearance is a mystery.

The watchmen were on duty at the time the copper was spirited away and luckily neither of them were stolen. If the thieves had taken the lighter itself and started to drag it across the lower end of Manhattan the police would have more to work on than they now have, for when copper bandits get away into the maze of New York life with only seven tons of copper it is no easy matter to track them down.

Several detectives were assigned to the case and were instructed to follow any lowbrow discovered pulling a truck in a suspicious manner.

Montreal Mail Continues Attack On Gen. Hughes

Says Sir Sam Intimated That Kitchener Was Responsible for Losses at Ypres—A Charge Against Dead Hero

MONTREAL, June 15.—The Daily Mail (Conservative) returned to-day to General Sam Hughes and his letter and interview about Lord Kitchener and the Ypres salient. It says: "In defence of General Sam Hughes whose recent remarks reflecting on Lord Kitchener have aroused wide resentment, a letter, alleged to have been written by Hughes to the British War Minister in March last, has been made public. The question is asked in a tone of injured innocence: "Is there anything wrong in that.' Decidedly not. Gen. Hughes as Minister of Militia, had every right to make a respectful suggestion to Lord Kitchener with regard to any matter affecting the Canadian troops. But the apologists for Gen. Hughes cannot clear this matter up by ignoring the whole basis of attack.

"The Grave Offence."

"The grave offence charged against Gen. Hughes is that he gave out an interview putting the blame for the recent heavy losses suffered by the Canadian troops at Ypres upon the head of Lord Kitchener, coupled with those who had him recalled from Great Britain for the fuse enquiry, thus accusing the dead hero of incredible stupidity or criminal carelessness. Gen. Hughes is accused of attempting to make cheap personal capital out of the nation's agony, taking mean advantage of Lord Kitchener's ever-to-be regretted misfortune.

"It is not surprising to those who know the soldier who has spent a year on dress parade nor every week he has spent on the field to learn that Gen. Hughes considered himself competent to save the Canadian troops from what he represents as the incompetence of Lord Kitchener. But it is amazing that a responsible official of the Canadian Government would deliberately make a public statement reflecting discredit upon the hero who recently crowned a life of noble service with the noblest self-sacrifice, and calculated to give the Canadian people the impression that the lives of their soldiers overseas are being wasted through defective leadership.

The Climax.

"Every public suspicion of fear arising from war conditions has been held up as a cloak for that high-minded patriot, J. Wesley Allison and his close associates. But surely the climax is reached when General Hughes sinks so low as to seek his justification in the graves where the dead at the front are buried and in the homes where the heroes are mourned, under cover of an attack directed at the great soldier who sleeps in the grave of the Orkneys.

"General Hughes had a chance to say what he has said while Lord Kitchener was living. He showed evidence of being in dire need of these excuses on several occasions long before the Hampshire disaster. While Kitchener was alive and able to answer his insinuations, Hughes said nothing. If what he says of the Ypres salient is worth hearing now, it was ten times more worth hearing before the recent costly action at Ypres. The impression is inevitable that General Hughes had good reason to withhold his reflections on Kitchener until the man who could refute his charges—Lord Kitchener—had passed away."

War Routs Gout Europe's Health Growing Better

LONDON, June 11.—Good, old-fashioned gout has practically disappeared in warring Europe. That suspicious swelling of the lower extremities which usually is the dire climax of a series of gastronomic disturbances, spots before the eyes, and dark brown tastes has all but ceased to exist, according to the medical authorities.

About all the red paint daubed over prominent portions of European cities by the fast livers from somewhere in the neighbourhood of the time of Henry VIII.' has vanished. Ben Franklin's noted adage: "Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealth and wise," is the vogue in Europe just now.

War economy in London, meatless days in Berlin, prohibition in Russia, and self-abnegation in Rome and Paris is making the people healthier and acting as a solar plexus to the coffers of the medical profession.

Physician's Practice Ruined.

"My practice has all gone to pieces," sighed a popular London general practitioner the other day. "Everybody is leading too regular a life."

An American just returned from Germany brings the same news from Berlin physicians. The verdict in the German capital was that people consumed too much meat before the war. They were too carniverous and not half enough herbiverous.

Now that Berlin cannot buy meat on two days a week for love or money they are paying more attention to garden truck. And they are healthier for it. Night life in the fashionable cafes and restaurants from Paris to Petrograd has not diminished much since the beginning of the war. But the crowds have changed.

It is coloured in a major sense with khaki, "Joffre" blue, gray-green, or Russian drab, which means that the officers and men on leave from the trenches are making the best of a well earned furlough. These men are fit in their lives. They lead a neutral fit. Most of them have never been so fit at the front, free from financial cares and nourished on food that army experts have selected to make them fit.

People Are Economizing.

The ordinary civilian in most any European city is economizing now. He has given up his costly week ends at the sea shore. He is getting along without the occasional "cure" at a fashionable bath resort and the "rest cure" has gone out of the fashion.

Playing bridge until the early hours of the morning isn't fashionable at all in the best circles at present. It's more au fait to slave long hours in an army canteen, or do something to help in the war. Likewise, after theatre parties at fashionable restaurants have gone out. The money that was once spent here is going into the war loan or is wisely applied to the ever increasing tradesman's bill.

Also it isn't fashionable for elaborate dinners at home. Food prices make this sort of a thing extravagant. In London especially there is a strong inducement to the early bed policy. The restriction of drinking hours, making 9.30 p.m. the latest that one can buy liquor, affects the attendance at the clubs as well as drives the workingman from the corner saloon. Anti-Zeppelin darkness also contributes to this practice.

All reports from other European war capitals show that the war is making the people fitter. And only the doctors are lamenting.

WOULD PROSECUTE PRIESTS.

Mayor of New York Asks District Attorney to Act.

NEW YORK, June 17. —The wire tapping scandal assumed unprecedented proportions on Thursday. The most significant developments were: Mayor Mitchel sent District Attorney Swann the police wire-tapping records relating to Mgr. John J. Dunn and Father William B. Farrell in the recent charity investigation. The Mayor asked that criminal prosecution be instituted. Alfred J. Talley, counsel for the two priests, met this attack by saying: "If all the facts are presented to the grand jury of New York(county, it may indict Mayor Mitchel."

Mgr. Dunn replied that the Mayor's "latest outpouring" was an attempt to dodge the blame for wire-tapping activities of police spies. The priest said he welcomed the fullest investigation.

District Attorney Swann said that he would conduct a far-reaching John Doe investigation, at which both the Mayor and the priests would be heard. The District Attorney was also asked to inquire into the police tapping of the wires of innocent women.

Labour leaders before the Thompson committee charged the police with spying on the wires of labour unions.

LIMIT TO ASSIGNED PAY.

Government Insists That Privates Retain $13 a Month.

OTTAWA, June 15.—Some comment has been excited by a recent order-in-Council limiting to 30 days' pay the amount that a soldier should be permitted to assign. A private soldier gets $31 a month, and his wife gets a separation allowance of $20, in addition to the pay her husband assigns to her. Some men had assigned almost their entire pay, with the result that they got into financial difficulties. They were unable to avail themselves of leave, and were confined to barracks or camp all the time.

The authorities considered that $13 is not an excessive amount for a soldier for the little necessaries he must procure out of his own pocket.

WIDOWS

According to the census of 1910 there were 3,147,232 widows in the United States; 2,826,684 were between fifteen and sixty-four years of age; 702,000 were below age forty-five. Can you picture the struggle of the thousands thrown upon their own resources and fighting for an existance for themselves and their children? How many of the 2,465,396 above the age of forty-five are dependent upon relatives and the public for support? Among all these hundreds of thousands there is not one single inmate of a poor house, home for the aged, or friendless who was provided with a monthly income under a life insurance policy. What a splendid opportunity right now for husbands to protect widows of this land.

Any husband can do so by purchasing a Guaranteed Income policy from THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA. The Company guarantees payment to wife at your death of any sum you choose followed by a like amount on the same day of every month as long as she shall live.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

No sane thinking person, having the slightest knowledge of the Boy Scout movement, would for a moment deny that the boy who lives up to the Scout laws, is sure to be a brighter and better boy for having done so. But some may ask whether the ideals of the movement are in reality possible of attainment.

This very question is aptly dealt with, and a most convincing answer is found in Ian Hay's wonderful new war book: The First Hundred Thousand. Mr. Hay found his 'Good Scout' in the thick of the fighting in Flanders. He gives some wonderful word pictures of the type of men who are wrestling inch by inch the ground gained in the early days of the war by the Huns. He depicts a most pointed illustration of good and bad scouting by describing the methods adopted by a soldier who had not been accustomed to Scout training, and the soldier who before his soldiering days had belonged to the Boy Scouts. Both men had been detailed to obtain knowledge of the composition of the enemy's line. Private Dunshire, who had not reaped the benefits of a Boy Scout training, picked his way towards the enemy's line in such a manner as would indicate him an advertising agent for the approaching attack. "But two hundred yards to his right, picking his way with catlike care," writes the author, "was Private M'Snape." He was the true Scout breed. In the dim and distant days before the call of the blood had swept him into khaki he had been a Boy Scout of no mean repute. He was clean in person and courteous in manner. He could be trusted to deliver a message promptly. He could light a fire in a high wind with two matches, and provide himself with a meal of sorts where another would have starved. He was truthful and amenable to discipline.

The spirit of self-denial has always been manifest in Boy Scouts during times of peace, but the manner in which this high and lofty ideal has been practiced by Scouts and Scout troops since the beginning of the war is a matter worthy of particular note. One splendid example is given by a small troop in Williamsburg, N.B., which is practically a village, ten miles from any railroad station. The troop in this hamlet consists of only fourteen Scouts and a leader. Not very long ago the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts' Association sent an appeal out for individual subscriptions of ten cents each from the Canadian Scouts towards a fund which Sir Robert Baden-Powell was raising to replace the Boy Scouts' motor ambulance at the front and to provide for the erection of recreation huts for the members of the expeditionary forces in France and Flanders. Had this troop responded with a subscription of ten cents each from the members the Canadian Council would have received $1.50, but, instead, the secretary received a cheque for fifteen dollars. This is only one of many examples of what the Scout training will lead a boy or a set of boys to do.

The Boy Scout movement is spreading rapidly in every part of the Dominion. A good example of the manner in which the idea is catching hold in the western provinces is found in a recent report from the Manitoba Boy Scout Council. The Scout movement in this province is now organized in some hundred centres with an enrolment of about 1,600 boys and 125 officers. The movement has overcome its pioneer difficulties and has assumed greater activity, and is appealing to the intelligent citizens of the province as the highest kind of organization for the development of boy life, each boy taking as the basis of his training the Scout oath, and building thereon by obedience to the Scout law. Each Scout is put upon his honour to play the game and play in fair.

Chancellor S. B. McCormick, of the University of Pittsburg, recently paid high tribute to the Boy Scout movement in the following words: "I consider the Boy Scout movement one of the very best modern activities in behalf of the boys of the nation. The wisdom of the principles underlying the movement is undoubted. The practical success which has been attained is unquestioned. The movement should have the hearty support of good people everywhere. It is a conservation proposition. The saving of boys and directing them in the line of the development of their powers, so that they will attain the highest usefulness, commends itself because it is a process which begins at the right place, at the right time, to accomplish the largest results for the community and for the nation.

LOANS TO GERMAN EX-SOLDIERS.

Steps have been taken by the Ministry of the Interior of Saxony toward granting financial aid to returned soldiers and to other persons who need money to help them fulfill their obligations and whose principal supporters are at the front. These loans, according to reports in the German press, are repayable within five years. They will bear no interest for the first calendar year in which they are issued, nor for the six months following, but after that the borrowers must pay 3 per cent.

A MOST MOMENTOUS DECISION FOR IRELAND

agreement with him on the war than Sir Edward Carson. When Carson left the Cabinet he proclaimed loudly that the one man in the Cabinet was Lloyd George. It was a little unfair to the other members of the Cabinet—Lloyd George himself would say it vehemently—I only give it as showing the terms between the two men. And in Ulster generally, the undoubted Protestantism of the great Welsh Nonconformist frees from any suspicion of leanings towards that Church which is still so dreaded and hated by the typical Orangeman. Lloyd George has in negotiation one quality for which he does not get credit. An impulsive man with great capacity for defiant temper if he be attacked, he exhibits infinite patience and are too serious and the emotions too deep for smooth words—he gives a gentle smile. The brilliant eyes become soft and he says just the right soft word to turn away wrath. The only thing he said once in reply to a hot address was, "Now, really, you must give me a chance." It had an instantaneous effect.

CARSON A COMPLEX.

Sir Edward Carson is also complex. In exterior and in public there is no grimmer figure in the House of Commons. Tall, rather slight with a hatchet face, a high forehead, clean-shaven, black in hair, black in expression, he might pass for one of those ruthless squires of the close of the eighteenth century who helped Castlereagh first to put down the rebellion and then to destroy the Parliament. How daring and desperate he can be was proved by his organization of the threatened rebellion in Ulster, when he certainly risked his life and abandoned a great position and a princely income. Yet this dour spirit is in private a charming, good-tempered man, with the soft Irish accent of Dublin, and much fonder of friendly than unfriendly words to even a political opponent. Once he and Mr. Redmond went together to the Speaker's house at Westminster to see if there was a possibility of a deal just after the outbreak of the war. Carson was fierce against any deal—used violent language—even struck the table vehemently before the calm Englishman who presides over the House of Commons with always imperturable temper. And then it was all over: he went away with Mr. Redmond and spoke to him with almost affectionate terms, and with deep and almost uncontrollable emotion.

Strong in purpose, Carson is, and always has been, weak in health. He has been cursed all his life by dyspepsia, with the consequent horrors of sleeplessness and profound depression; and often if seen early in the morning, looks like a man who is unable to face the work of the day. But when he gets to his work, he forgets his despair and his pain, and fights like a tiger for his client, either legal or political.

A POWERFUL FIGURE.

Colonel Craig, who is undoubtedly one of the most powerful figures on the Unionist side, semed even more unpromising material for friendly negotiation than Sir Edward Carson. Tall, broad-shouldered, robust, with a fierce bellicose expression, and hot in speech and temper, he seemed to embody all the violence of Orangeism. He was for a long time considered simply as a man of violent temper and dull and impenetrable mind. But his friends used to say to incredulous Nationalists that knowing him well, they regarded his as the coolest brain in the Orange ranks; that it was his clear, business-like mind that lay behind all the Orange moves, and if peace were to be made he, next to Carson, was the man most to be counted with. And then suddenly, the real Craig began to reveal himself to Lloyd George, and he was sound, good-natured, clear-headed, with however, the shrewd temper at a bargain of the genuine Belfast.

Joseph Devlin, in some respects, resembles James Craig more than any of his colleagues among the Nationalist representatives. Fierce in his Nationalism—fiercer, perhaps, than many southern Nationalists—he is as much a Belfast man as James Craig. He is intensely proud of the great city in which he was born, and in which he has passed most of his life. His fellow Nationalists there, while sharing the convictions, have few of the characteristic weaknesses of the Southern Nationalists. They have not the same charm, the same softness of voice, and of temper—their temperament has something of the same harshness as their accent; and they have never for an hour allowed disunion or weakness of purpose to enter their ranks, and every proposition they weigh with a characteristic Belfast spirit of business. Joseph Devlin is the embodiment of these qualities. Subject now and then to fierce bursts of passion where he sees wrong or the spirit of ascendancy, or any of the other grievances of the minority to which he belongs, Devlin has yet one of the most frigid and scientific minds that I have seen in public life when a political situation has to be met, or political proposal to be weighed or appraised. This fiery little man with the resonant voice, with the hot temper, with the savage indignation of Swift against the injustice of the world, becomes in council a soft-spoken tactician who soothes, instead of rousing, resentment, and adresses just the right word to the question or to the person when things become critical.

A SELF COMMAND.

Redmond and Dillon are too well known to require elaborate description. The two men are about an opposite in temperament, in physique, and in manner as two strong Irish Nationalists could be. Redmond is a characteristic product of the County of Wexford—a county which for a good while was in possession of the Danes, and has a considerable admixture of Norman blood. The Wexford men are distinguished from the men of other counties by a certain dourness, both of speech and temper. They are slow to be roused, but they are fierce when roused. The strong aquiline nose, the prominent eyes, the strong chin, the rather impassive expression, the absence at all times of any expansiveness, makes Redmond appear less Irish than any other Irish leader, except Parnell, who I have always thought, was more American than either British or Irish. Redmond has superb self-command. He is orderly as a clerk, commits nearly all his speeches to writing, keeps and preserves a memorandum of every important conversation or transaction in which he takes part, has his papers in as orderly arrangement as if he were a statistician.

A WORD ABOUT DILLON

Dillon is from Connaught—the most typically Irish part of Ireland. Yet he might well pass for an Italian—especially when he was a young man. The raven black hair, now white, the raven black eyes, the long delicate face with a delicate nose and an olive complexion together with the expression suggesting melancholy—as a matter of fact he is not in the least melancholy—might make him pass for one of the comrades of Mazzini or one of the other spirits who raised Italy from impotence and division to unity and splendor. He has ordinarily a very calm temper, but no man has such volcanic depths of hatred for oppression, and though he is not an enemy of Englishmen—he has innumerable English friends and admirers—he often gives the suggestion of remembering the wrongs of Ireland as fiercely as the peasant untutored in the frigid spirit of the old politician. No man is more dreaded by the enemies of Ireland, no man is regarded as so extreme—as a matter of fact he has a cold, keen, political judgment, and insists on his country getting every thing she can win in these strange times.

HEARD FRENCH PUT APACHES TO DEATH

American Traveler Told Many Were Shot When Paris Was Preparing for Siege

NEW YORK, June 17.—Theron F. Pierce, a member of the Pierce Oil Corporation of 26 Broad street, who returned from France last Friday, said that while in Paris he had been struck by the quiet of the city and the absence of Apaches.

"I was very much interested to know what had become of the Apaches of Paris," said Mr. Pierce. "One day I was taken to a certain Colonel in the French Army, and he told me very frankly some very interesting things. When the French Government moved to Bordeaux, this officer said, and the city was in charge of General Gallieni, a German siege seemed imminent. There were many Apaches in Paris who had never been convicted. The police knew them, though, and naturally they had the home address of the leading Apaches. When it was thought that Paris would be besieged the Apaches were ordered removed as a precaution of war.

"Just as buildings sometimes must be razed to afford observers a chance to watch the enemy or to let an army pass it was considered necessary to relieve Paris of the known Apaches, this Colonel told me. The city would have been practically unprotected during the absence of the defenders and the Apaches would have had the run of the city.

"It was said they were taken outside of the city after a great round up lasting two days and put to death in platoons. I am inclined to believe the story.

"The officer said those Apaches who gave themselves up and who were not routed out of dens were spared. If they came forward they were treated as any other citizen and enjoyed the same privileges.

"I thought I knew the French people until I got over there this last time. Every year for the last eleven I had made a trip across the water. I talked with all classes of people from Ministers to the boys employed in the hotel, and all were supremely confident of victory. Paris I found extremely quiet. One lady told me the very nearly ever piano in France was under lock and key, and there were certainly no orchestras.

"I had a chance to witness an interesting sight while on the return trip.

"Our little boat was suddenly ordered not to leave Havre. Many women became frightened and hysterical. Later we were told that a submarine was outside the harbour. There were also six transports waiting to bring in troops outside the harbour.

"That all happened on a Tuesday night. On Wednesday we awoke to find six torpedo boat destroyers, a large mine sweeper and six trawlers in the harbour. We pulled out on Thursday in a straight line. Most of the people went to bed as soon as the mile-wide harbour mouth was passed, but I was curious, and, with a few others, remained on deck. It was pitch dark. Presently far ahead we saw a little town of lights in the water. This was more than four miles away.

"As we drew near the lights a torpedo boat destroyer signalled and darted toward us. The city of lights came closer and closer, and as we slowed down we saw that it was a ring of torpedo boat destroyers and the mine sweepers and trawlers, all with their bows pointed toward the centre of a circle.

"There came a toot of a whistle and the destroyers drew in a little closer. Through a glass I saw that there was a gigantic net spread out in the middle of the boats. Inside the circle somewhere was a German submarine. The destroyers kept us in sight until they had the submarine rounded up."

AUSTRIAN HELD IN SHIP'S BRIG

ENGINEER OF THE MARY E. PALMER IN IRONS CHARGED WITH SETTING HIS VESSEL AFIRE.

NEW YORK, June 16.—While some of the crew of the American schooner Mary E. Palmer were fighting a fire which threatened to destroy the ship at sea, others were struggling desparately to overpower the ship's infuriated engineer, an Austrian, who, it is alleged, had started the fire in a fit of anger at three Russians and an Englishman aboard.

The schooner arrived here with the engineer in irons. For six weeks he had been locked up in the dark "brig" of the schooner, and to-day he will be arraigned before a United States Commissioner n the charge of having attempted to destroy the ship by fire.

The Mary E. Palmer left Buenos Ayres laden with quebracho wood for New York on March 24.

"Almost from the first day the engineer conceived a deep and outspoken hatred of the Russians and Englishman," said Captain Hunter. "He would often revile them without any provocation at all. I think the man must have gone crazy brooding over the war. Well, anyway on April 25 we discovered he had dismantled the pumps, drawn water from the 'donkey' boiler and started a fire under the boiler. By the time this discovery as made the ship was in flames and we had our hands full for a time."

The struggle to overpower the engineer is described as having been almost as stirring as the fire itself. When this was accomplished and the fire extinguished Captain Hunter put into Ceara, Brazil, for repairs, reaching that city on April 28—three days after the fire.

"You may imagine what chance we would have had, three days away from land if the fire had not been discovered in time to get it under control," said one of the sailors who had struggled to subdue the engineer and put him in irons.

The engineer had signed the ship's articles as John Smith.

PRESENTATION TO MR. J. T. HARDWICK

A pleasant feature under the head of good and welfare took place at regular meeting of Court Peterough, No. 29, Canadian Order of Foresters, last evening, when an address and J.P.D.D.H.C.R. Jewell was presented to Brother John T. Hardwick, who has so faithfully filled the office of D.D.H.C.R. for the City of Peterborough during the past number of years. His resignation was reluctantly accepted, entitling him to above rank.

Brother Hardwicke, although taken by surprise, made a fitting reply, promising life long interest in the welfare of our noble order.

Russ Offensive Was Unexpected By The Germans

Major Moraht Endeavours to Minimize the Prospects of Russian Achievement in the East

BERLIN, June 16.—Major Moraht, in the Tageblatt, writes as follows concerning the Russian offensive: "That the Russians' newly colected forces would be so numerous as to carry on a general offensive along a front of four hundred kilometres was hardly to have been expected. We must, therefore, recognize an extraordinary energy in this gathering together of forces. If we are optimistic we can say that Russia is staking her last great force. If we would judge that carefully, we must bear in mind that populous Russia produces at least two million young men annually, whom Russia has so far been able to turn into soldiers. The truth, however, will always remain that this new prolongation of the fighting in the east is mainly due to the furnishing of guns and ammunition by America and Japan.

Army of 4,000,000.

"The Russian March offensive against Von Hindenburg, which was smothered in 'blood and mud,' was undertaken by about fourteen divisions. Judging from the extent and ferocity of the present fighting, we see that the Russian forces are twice as great here, and that the enemy's southwestern army has hurled at least six million men, not counting reserves, against our defensive positions between the bend of the Styr and Vzartorxsk and the zone of Czernowitz. All will be forced to struggle hard, but at present we need not give credence to the Russian reports. That fable of the great number of prisoners and great losses was ever a Russian characteristic.

Laid To Allies' Council.

"The general situation of the war forces us to seek the impulse for the Russian attack in agreements reached at the Paris conference. The purpose of the Russian offensive from the standpoint of great strategy would be attained if the armies of the central powers were forced to stop their own offensives and weaken their forces. This, however, is not noticeable, nor will it ever be achieved by the Russian attack. For a short time the Russian spring offensive against Von Hindenburg showed some small success. Four weeks later it ended in defeat. We hope the same thing will happen to the Russian offensive in the southeast."

UNKISSED, HE WINS ALIENATION ACTION

JURY DECIDES FOR WEALTHY BROKER WHEN HE SWEARS LIPS NEVER TOUCHED ANY WOMAN'S.

Mineola, L. I., June 16.—A jury in the Supreme Court decided this afternoon that Warren A. Brown, a wealthy real estate broker of Hempstead was not guilty of alienating the affections of Mrs. Myra St. John, wife of Joseph St. John, who was suing for $10,000.

Mr. Brown took the stand in his own behalf. He admitted writing letters to Mrs. St. John, but said he did so with the knowledge of her husband, and that Mr. St. John always read the letters, as they were intended for the family. Kisses which were spoken of in the letters were intended for the children, said Mr. Brown, who added that he had never kissed any woman, although 52 years old.

Mr. Brown is gray haired, and Mrs St. John is 28. The St. Johns have four children.

TWO WOMEN IN COURT CLAIM SAME MAN

CHARLES LEE MacCARTHY, ARRAIGNED ON BIGAMY CHARGE DECLINES TO COMMENT.

New York, June 16.—When Charles Lee MacCarthy a realty broker, walked into his home ,at No. 101 East 123rd street, on Monday night, he was confronted by two women, each of them bearing a marriage certificate in which his name appeared as one of the contracting parties.

In Yorkville Court yesterday, where Mr. MacCarthy was arraigned on a charge of bigamy, Mrs. Emma Jane MacCarthy said that she had married the defendant in June, 1887, and had lived with him until May, 1915. She had been taken to the East 123rd street house, she said, by her daughter, who said she had seen Mr. MacCarthy enter there with another woman.

Mrs. Mae Elizabeth MacCarthy said that she had married Mr. MacCarthy in October, 1914, at the Little Church Around the Corner, and that he had told her that he was a widower with no children. She took to court her daughter, 10 months old.

Mr. MacCarthy declined to comment on the case. He was held in $2500 bail for examination Thursday.

COST OF LIVING SOARS.

OTTAWA, June 17.—A sustained upward tendency in the cost of living is indicated by the index figures for May. In the retail market a budget of 28 staple foods cost $8.27, as against $8.34 for April, $7.84 for May, 1915, and $7.42 for May, 1914. For the month increases appeared in beef, mutton, rice, beans and sugar, with decreases in eggs, milk, butter and potatoes. Rent averaged higher in Ontario and Quebec, but declined in Alberta. Wholesale prices stood at 180.9 in May, compared with 179.1 for April.

MRS. MASSIE WILL SPEAK

Lady Superintendent of Feller Institute, Quebec, to Give an Address in Murray St. Church

Mrs. Arthur E. Massie, the lady principal of Feller Institute at Grande Ligne, Quebec, will speak at the evening service in Murray Street Church on Sunday. In this College, where nearly two hundred young men and young women, Protestant and Roman Catholic, are being educated and evangelized by the Baptist denomination, a very wonderful record has been made. Two weeks ago an honour roll of ninety-two names of students serving the Empire was unveiled.

The story of the conversion of hundreds of Roman Catholics and others by the instrumentality of this Mission, and much information concerning the Church and the war, will be given by this gifted lady, on Sunday night.

Expect German Sub. Liner Here July 5

WAGER MADE THAT UNDERSEA BOAT WILL ARRIVE SAFELY.

New York, June 16.—A bet of $500 at even money was made to-day that a German submarine merchant liner would register her arrival with the customs authorities of this port before July 5th. The wager was made between officials of two well known steamship companies.

The man who bet the super-submarine would arrive was not only confident she would make the voyage without trouble, but would enter this port without submerging. He ridiculed Captain Guy Gaunt, British naval attache's statement that the undersea liner could be trailed by her oily waste and the British could smell the exhaust from her engines.

"The British blockade of this port might be trebled in effectiveness," he said, "and there would still be only one chance in 100 that a submarine would be caught in making Sandy Hook if he chose to come in at night. Ask any captain of any ocean going vessel, and see if he does not give you a similar opinion."

A person in close touch with the German embassy stated last week that the first U-boat liner would arrive here from Cuxhaven on June 22, and would sail for home on July 9. Her cargo will consist of mail, parcel post, express matter and drugs valued at more than $1,000,000.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

There is much wisdom contained in the letters of your correspondents of the last few days anent 'the slackers.'

A slacker becomes infinitely worse when, amid war's great alarms, he can indulge in any kind of sport or frivolity, especially if he be a big husky fellow, while so many young boys have gone to the front, some of a delicate nature, to fight for the freedom which these slackers enjoy. It is just such fellows as baseball players and the fans who are the best qualified to do the fighting. When they should be impressed with the sadness which this war brings home to us, we find them hilarious at the ball game, and with raucous voices belching forth the coarsest language in their own peculiar vocabulary, and evincing at once a low moral and cowardly nature, notwithstanding the solemnity of this crucial juncture. I cannot understand how any one can consistently enjoy such sport under present conditions.

Yours, etc.,
Consistency.

"WE FIGHT MIT HUGHES"

RALLYING TO HIS SUPPORT BECAUSE "WILSON LIKE, HE IS NOT PRO-BRITISH," SAYS NEW YORKER HERALD.

NEW YORK, June 17.—The New York World says editorially: President Wilson drove straight to the heart of the hyphenated issue yesterday in his Flag Day speech. If Mr. Hughes wishes an inspiring example of "undiluted Americanism" we commend to him the President's challenge to those alien sympathizers "who are trying to levy a species of political blackmail" on the American government.

"There is disloyalty active in the United States," as the President said, and Mr. Hughes' party is seeking to make itself the political beneficiary of that disloyalty. This disloyalty 'must be absolutely crushed," as the President said: yet Mr. Hughes' party is helping to keep it alive. In spite of all his admirable expressions of personal patriotism, Mr. Hughes has not uttered a word that remotely relates to this issue. At best, he is merely endeavouring by means of platitudes to show that his own skirts are clean, while the professional German-American leaders are rallying their forces to his support.

"FIGHT MIT HUGHES"

Under the ecstatic headline "We Fight Mit Hughes," the New-Yorker Herald yesterday gave its unqualified approval to Mr. Hughes personal doctrine of "undiluted Americanism," and said:

We subscribe to every word of this utterance. We know that Mr. Hughes is not a pro-British candidate, like Mr. Wilson, who, as soon as Ambassador Spring-Rice demanded it, shut down the German wireless stations, without being required by law or even authorized to do so. We know that Mr. Hughes would not have sanctioned the shameful agreement with the Republic of Panama which, as we have shown, was entirely in the interest of Great Britain and her allies.

Mr. Hughes' undiluted Americanism would have prevented him from committing the many other un-neutral and unjust acts we charge Mr. Wilson with. All these things will be more fully set forth during the campaign. We are glad Mr. Hughes has spoken these words, although we knew right along that he is not pro-British or pro-German or pro-anything except pro-American. And therefore, changing the well-known refrain "I fights mit Sigel," we say, "We fight mit Hughes."

German military establishments have recently recruited 900,000 women for the manufacture of war materials.

This is a sight we will probably not be privileged to see again, so make up your minds to go.

No matter what other tire makers may do for the betterment of their product, a close examination generally reveals the fact that we have been offering similar, or greater, virtues in our product for a long time previous.

This is simply because we are the pioneers of the industry in Canada If anybody should know tire-making from A to Z we should.

We have been manufacturing tires in Canada for nearly a quarter of a century. No other tire company has been making tires in Canada for half that length of time.

"Traction" and "Special" are in the forefront to-day, because Dunlop has always led the way in tire betterments.

ments along with them to Peterborough.

Mrs. J. C. Davidson and daughter have returned to Peterborough after visiting Barriefield camp.

Lieut. L. J. Stuart has returned to his duties and received a welcome after his illness.

Quartermaster Sergt. B. Target of B Company, 93rd Battalion, is home from Barriefield for the week-end. Among the other non-coms. home are Sergt. P. T. Martin, Sergt. E. Donschue and Corp. Parker.

The many friends of Corp. Walter Spring, C Company, 93rd Battalion, will regret to learn that he received news on Thursday of the death from wounds received at the front, of his brother. The latter, only 19 years of age, enlisted in the Royal Field Artillery, London, Eng., on the second day after war was declared. He had been in continuous service at the front for thirteen months, without a single leave.

Two Peterborough members of the 216th Bantams Battalion, Toronto Pte. H. Knowles and L. W. Bailey are home on leave from Toronto. There are now six Peterborough boys in the Bantams.

Pte. Jas. Beattie, of Cobourg, writing to the Cobourg Sentinel-Star tells of a ball game played in France in which Sergt. McDougall, Gunner Dorris and other Peterborough boys of the 4th Battery took part. His letter is as follows:

France, May 25, 1916.

Dear Readers:

The good old 24th of May has come and gone, and no doubt some of you people wondered how we spent it. Lt. Paton, of Toronto, our officer, said if we could get a baseball team to play us a game we could have a half holiday. The 4th Battery is not far from here, and I went over and saw Corporal Love and the boys, who consented to come over and give us a game. Sergt. MacNachtan, N. McIntosh and Markle were on duty and could not come. Lieut. White, of Ottawa kindly consented to be umpire.

Both teams had many victories to their credit, so a good game was looked forward to. Promptly at 2 o'clock the coin was tossed. The Transport Lost, and the Battery took the field. Love hurriedly placed his men, and the umpire called, "play ball."

Sleeman from Port Hope, pitcher, took off his coat, and Chitterton, an old Toronto ball-player went to bat and the game was on. I don't know enough about the game to tell you about the different runs, and at the end of five innings the score was a tie, but at the finish the Battery was ahead by two runs. It was sure a good game and every man played his best, and the best of good will prevailed on both sides. The line-up of the Battery was pitcher, G. Sleeman of Port Hope; catcher, Dobbin, 1st base, Sergt. McDougall; 2nd base, Mandlay, of Peterborough; 3rd base Love of Cobourg; field, North, Montgomery, O'Hara, Dorris; score-keeper Mulhall; mascot, Macdonald. Transport line-up: Manager, Macdonald; pitcher, Wilson and McLaren; catcher, Chitterton; 1st base, Petty; 2nd base, Bruley; 3rd base, Rolls; short stop, Grey; field, Sergt. Rierson, Atkinson, Vivian; score-keeper, Kyle.

It was a model day. On a hill to the west an old-fashioned windmill slowly turned on its axles, and all around the noon-day sun a drowsy radiance cast. Ever and anon, a German shell would come over and break in a field nearby. But for all the difference it made to the game it might have been 1,000 miles away. For the time being forgot was war, forgot was Britain's glory and each man's heart recalled the happy 24th of May spent in his home town far away. Much credit is due to Lieut. White for his fairness in conducting the game.

Mr. Chas. Duggan, of Peterborough, has received an interesting letter from Mr. John H. Foster, of Nottingham, Eng., a gentleman who has been very kind to Mr. Duggan's relative, Pte. Patrick Duggan, a former Peterborough boy who went overseas with the First Canadian Contingent, and who was wounded some time ago. With the letter came a piece of shrapnel extracted from Pte. Duggan's body. The fragment is on exhibition in the window of the 93rd recruiting office. In sending it Mr. Foster says: "A further examination by the X-Rays has revealed a small splinter of shell left betwen the 11th and 12 ribs. The doctor, however, does not think there is now any danger to fear from that. The flesh may grow around it so that Patrick will probably always carry about this momento of the great and terrible European war." Mr. Foster adds: "The friends of the gallant soldiers in the First Canadian Contingent must indeed be full of sorrow and grief for loved ones lost and buried on the battlefields of France and Flanders. To think that only 10 per cent. are left is a dreadful thing, hardly to be realized, and when one remembers that of so small a remnant your brave lad Pat, still survives, one is absolutely compelled to recognize the providence to which you allude and to bow in grateful thanks to Him who has directed it. Pat told me that whilst a comrade was carrying him from the dressing station to an ambulance, shells were falling all around them, and he thought each moment would be their last in this world. The shell fire, he says, was the most awful of any experienced at the front, and this bears out all you tell me with regard to the awful losses which the Canadians are experiencing."

The 238th Battalion, North Bay, will soon have more famous athletes than the Sportsmen's Battalion in Toronto. The 238th have a galaxy of hockey stars that would give any team, amateur or professional, a battle royal, including the two McNamaras, one from the Torontos and the other from the Canadiens, Goldie Prodgers, the big defence man of the Canadiens, Gordon Keats of the Toronto professionals, Hesson and Duncan of the Pacific Coast League, Red Briden, the Northern player who was in Peterborough for part of the past winter, playing several exhibition games with the Electrics, and others stars, while Jack Marks of the Quebec professionals, is expected to join shortly. In other lines of sport the 238th is landing stars, among the latest being Pitcher Cook of the Toronto International League ball club. Cook was bought by Toronto for $1,500 from an American Association club, and has now donned the khaki. He should shine as a bomb thrower.

MILITIA COUNCIL MINUTES.

None Kept Since 1911, Despite the Regulations.

OTTAWA, June 16. — When the Davidson Commission resumes next week a point which will be pressed is why, in violation of the regulations, no minutes of the Militia Council have been kept since 1911, or, in other words, since the change of Government.

In the course of his recent examination Gen. Gwathin, chief of the General Staff, was asked whether the Allison transaction regarding ammunition was recorded in the minutes. He answered that no minutes had been kept "for a long time." Afterwards it was disclosed that no record had been made since 1911.

General Order No. 1, of 1905, constituting the Militia Council, says: "A full, but not necessarily verbatim, account of the proceedings of the Council shall be kept by the secretary and printed for record, together with a schedule of the decisions arrived at."

According to Gen. Gwatkin, not only have no minutes been kept, but in this Allison-Dawson-Lewis transaction the Militia Council was not consulted at all.

FINEST IN THE WORLD.

OTTAWA, June 17. — Sir Sam Hughes referred to the Nova Scotia brigade, which he inspected at Aldershot, N.S., this week, as "the finest body of men in the world."

Even the wheels on a Ford car cost you 60 per cent less than on the average car priced around $1000 and under $12.87—cost of new wheel on average car priced around $1.000 or less.

$ 5.00—cost of new wheel on a Ford car.

$ 7.87—the 60 per cent. saving secured by the Ford owner.

And this merely indicates the general saving in every item of upkeep in which the Ford possess a big advantage over any other make of car.

An assembly of Ford spare parts—enough to build the touring car complete—cost only $40 more than the standard list price of the car, while on the average car priced around $1000 and less a complete set of spare parts costs $941 more than the car—over twenty times the Ford excess cost.

And yet tests conducted by one of the most authoritative Government laboratories in the world have shown that the quality of Ford constructive material is actually superior to that in most of the best cars made.

REGISTRATION IS NOT FAVOURED

Government Showing no Signs of Adopting the Proposal

OTTAWA, June 17.—Considerable time will be required to work out the details of the plan discussed here between representatives of the Dominion and Ontario Governments in regard to recruiting and the need of following such lines as will conserve agricultural labour essential to the war. It will be necessary to consult all the provinces in elaborating a general scheme. Instructions had already gone out to the recruiting officers to consider the vital need of agricultural production and not to press too heavily either upon it or upon those industries engaged in the manufacture of munitions or war necessities. Associated with this subject is the national registration, now favoured by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and pressed forcibly some time ago by an influential delegation.

At that time the Premier's reply was that recruits were coming in at the rate of a thousand a day. Advocates of registration do not question that men are enlisting, but they claim, with much to back it, that they are coming from industries that can ill afford to spare them. Moreover, in some parts of the country enlistments are heavy, while in others the minimum of enrolment is recorded.

Backed by such influential bodies as is in the registration movement cannot well be passed over, but from what can be learned here the probability of such a system being adopted in the near future at least is not pronounced.

IRISH REBEL COUNTESS IS A QUEER WOMAN

(By Norah Meade.)

Constance, Countess De Markievics, is now a prisoner of the British Crown, serving a life sentence of penal servitude. In the recent Irish rebellion she led the attack on Dublin Castle, and to citizens whose memory goes back some thirty years her part was peculiarly ironical.

For in those days Dublin Castle was the official residence of her maternal uncle, the English Marquis of Zetland.

By birth the Countess de Markievics is Constance Gore-Booth, daughter of Sir Jocelyn, an Irish Baronet. Her mother is the daughter of the late Marquis of Zetland and sister of that Irish Lord Lieutenant whose reign is still remembered by reason of its social brilliance.

Her youth was spent in the manor house of Lissadel, a village of County Sligo, and here so thoroughly Lady Gore-Booth preserved her native English atmosphere that she had the clocks set by Greenwich time. She was less successful in setting the tone for her daughter's sentiments.

Two stories come down from the girlhood of Constance Gore-Booth which indicate her attitude toward paternal authority. At that time Parnell was the premier patriot of Ireland, and the youth of the country was at his feet. Evidently he had fired the girl's imagination, for when he was scheduled to speak in a neighboring town she determined at all costs to hear him. Her mother, however, decided that she should stay at home.

There are no trolleys and few trains in the west of Ireland, so Lady Gore-Booth laid an embargo on all means of conveyances and considered her position safe. But she reckoned without the resourcefulness of her daughter. Corralling two horses from a neighboring farm, Constance and her sister Eva rode recklessly across country and arrived in time to hear the speech.

SHE STUDIED ART.

But if her conduct in this case amounted to insult in the spirit it aimed at deliberate injury.

Land trouble was rife in the west and the tenants had decided on a strike. "No rents" was their war cry. But at that time landlords were still formidable and there was some hesitation in carrying out the campaign. A meeting was called to decide the matter finally. It proved sensational in an unexpected way.

Among those not invited but nevertheless present, was the courageous and irrepressible Constance, who came to advise the tenants to refuse payment to her own father.

With all due respect for the maternal tenderness of Lady Gore-Booth, one has a vivid picture of her relief when Constance discovered her genius for painting and thereupon betook herself to Paris to become a student.

Constance Gore-Booth spent many years in Paris where she was soon well known in artistic circle. When she finally returned to Ireland she had acquired the title of Countess.

Her Russian Polish husband, Casimir de Markievics, is now in his own country, where he has been reported wounded on the Russian front. But for many years he was a familiar figure in Dublin, beside his tall, queer, untidy, Irish wife.

About 1905 the two settled in Dublin, where they lived until the outbreak of the war.

A New York bride has been married in her great-grandmother's wedding gown and veil.

Camellias are often the close rivals of gardenias for hat trimmings.

A new society is suggested, called "The Discouragement of Uplift."

Mabel Taliaferro carries a "gossip box," a tiny change purse into which a person who says an ugly or malicious thing in her presence is made to put a fine which goes to charity.

THOSE IRRITATED WESTERN STATES

ALWAYS PLAY PROPER IRONS SAYS OUIMET

Use Club That is Equal to the Distance Desired, Advises Famous Golfer

(By Francis Ouimet)

In playing the irons, I think there is the same underlying principle for every club from the cleek to the mashie niblick, and that is to hit the ball before taking the turf. In that way there is a firm, true stroke and a minimum amount of roll to the ball at the end of its carry. If distance is desired use that club which is equal to the distance without depending on a long roll, for I think one of the greatest mistakes of the average golfer is to try to force an iron. Instead of trying for a long mashie shot, therefore, I would advise playing an easy jigger, or, instead of trying to force a midiron try a cleek, sammy or a driving iron. As the golfer develops his game he will derive no end of pleasure from playing an iron as it should be played, using it well within the needs of the distance to be covered, and landing the ball well up to the spot intended with a slight roll at the finish.

To have the ball come down 'dead' I have found that the best method is to play the ball off the left heel let the club go out a little from the body on the back swing, and back towards the body on the down stroke, so that the face comes slightly across the line of play at the moment of impact, causing what might be termed a "mild sister of the slice". It is not a slice in the accepted sense of that word, for the ball is hit with power and accuracy and there is only a slight deviation to the right from the ball's line of flight most of the way.

KEEP EYE ON BALL.

Many golfers have difficulty in playing an iron, especially a cleek or a driving iron, because they push their body forward in making the stroke and 'smother' the ball. If they play well off the left foot, and allow the arms to go through ahead of the body, they will probably get much better results, the same as with some of the other distance irons, and I sometimes think that it would be beneficial for the majority of players if there were a trifle more left to the faces of the distance irons.

With the irons, on the putt as well as from the tee, it is essential to keep the eye on the ball, perhaps even more so than on the tee, where there is the initial advantage of having the ball always nicely set up for the shot. But there is something more needed than merely to keep the eye on the ball. Everyone knows that a person ofttimes may be gazing directly at something or somebody, but with a vacant stare that denotes that the mind is far away and the object at hand not even seen. If a golfer's eye is on the ball and his mind on something else he might just as well be looking at the sky as at the ball.

CONCENTRATION NECESSARY.

I had a recent illustration of that act in playing on the course of the Country club at Springfield, Mass. There is one hole there about 85 yards in length, just across a pond. I played a mashie shot and kept my eye so well on the spot where the ball had rested that I did not even look up to see it drop into the water. I knew it went into the water for I heard the splash, but without once looking up I felt in my pocket for another ball. This one I also sent into the pond without looking up.

The sole trouble was that while my golfing experience had taught me to keep my eyes on the ball, I was not to the least concentrated on playing that particular shot, and concentration is as much the keynote of success in golf as it is in any other thing. In a championship match it becomes more or less a mechanical action both to keep the eye on the ball and to concentrate your mind on the work in hand. Nevertheless, the golfer who really desires to improve his game should strive to have these factors a part of his second nature.

GREAT DRIVE COMING AMBULANCE MAN SAYS

American Artist Wrote on May 21st That "Summer's Attack" Would Surpass Verdun and Ypres

NEW YORK, June 17. — That a great movement of the Allied armies in the west front is coming soon is the prophecy conveyed in a letter recently received her by Mrs. E. V. Douglass of 970 Park avenue. The letter is from her son Victor White an artist, of this city, who has been with the American Ambulance, Section 1, and has been twice decorated with the Cross of War for unusual bravery, an honour which has been conferred only on one other meber of the American Ambulances, the chief of the Vosges squad.

The letter, which speaks of the tremendous "Summer attack," is dated May 21, at Paris, whither the writer has gone on special work.

One paragraph of this letter contains the following:

"The reason why I did not return to New York as I had planned was this: I have been in the ambulance quite a long time and if I were to leave before this Summer's attack, I would consider a lot of time wasted for I would just miss what I have always wanted, and that is being in a big attack and seeing how it is carried out. True, the Ypres attack in April a year ago was tremendous, but it will be a mite in comparison with what is going to happen soon. In fact, the tremendous thing at Verdun will even be secondary. At least, that is my impression from what I've seen and know to be."

GOLDIE PRODGERS WITH 228TH.

Creek Hockey Player Member of North Bay Battalion.

TORONTO, June 17.—Pte. Goldie Prodgers, of the 228th Battalion, passed through Toronto yesterday on his way back to join his battalion at North Bay, after several days' leave of absence at his home in London. Pte. Prodgers is the famous professional hockey player, the crack defence man of the Canadians of Montreal, N.H.A. champions and Stanley Cup holders. The 228th is the Mecca, apparently, for the good hockey players. The two MacNamara brothers are officers in this battalion, while Gordon Keats and Jack Brown of the Torontos, Briden of North Bay, and Brown of Bethn Union Jacks are in the ranks. The men are anxious to hear from Jack Marks, the Quebec player, who lives in Toronto. They are eager to have Marks with them, as they understand he intends to enlist. The 228th have a crack ball team, and Marks is some player.

Many Thrills Crowded Into Young Officer's Life; Given Distinguished Service Order

LONDON, June 15.—Seeds of thrill—enough to make the wildest dreams of a movie hero pale to insignificance—have been packed into the young life of Lieutenant Clifford Probert aged 17.

The full story came today from Blaenavon, Wales, Probert's native village.

Daring deeds under fire, promotion from the ranks, awarded the D.S.O., wounded 22 times, blown up while on hospital ship and lapse of memory are a few of the youthful soldier's experiences.

Before the war young Probert operated a haulage engine in a coal mine and was the assistant chief Boy Scout of the district.

In Sept. 1914, he joined the army by misrepresenting his age to a recruiting sergeant. He told the sergeant he was 18 when he was only fifteen. His parents objected to his militarism so he changed his name to William Gordon Williams.

His Baptism of Fire.

At Hill 60, in Northern France, the youthful soldier received his baptism of fire. He also went to the hospital for twelve weeks with two wounds in the head, and two in the legs.

Some time after he rejoined his regiment, the colonel, commanding, decided that a distant tower was being used as an enemy observation post. The colonel chose two men to cut the wires that connected the tower with enemy batteries.

The men chosen were Lieutenant Murphy and Williams, (Probert).

After crawling two hundred yards through darkness, in the direction of the tower, Murphy was shot through the head.

On Dangreous Mission.

Probert crawled forward and eventually arrived. He dug in the ground around the tower for an hour with his hands before he discovered the wires.

There were seventeen, which meant that seventeen German batteries were being accurately informed of the accuracy of their fire on the British positions. Probert tried to snip the wires with his pocket knife. The metallic sound produced, however, made the operation dangerous and he searched his Red Cross packet for vaseline.

Smearing the oil on the wires, he spent several hours in ponderously cutting all seventeen and then crawled tediously back to the British trenches.

Survived Charge.

It was on September 25, the start of the big British offensive, that the young trooper again got into action. His regiment charged. A handful reached the third line German trenches.

Probert was one of the handful. A shell exploded nearby and threw him into the air. Dazed and suffering from shock he arose and charged again but came under the fire of a machine gun and fell with five bullet wounds in his abdomen, both hips riddled and his head badly shattered. He lay in the open, without attention, for two days before stretcher bearers came along.

Probert hovered between life and death in a base hospital for weeks. Youth and vitality finally conquered until he had sufficiently recovered strength to be sent to England.

Subsequently, with other wounded men, he was taken to Boulogne and placed aboard the hospital ship Anglia. The Anglia was half way across the English channel en route to Folkestone when she was mined. The explosion occured just as a nurse was raising Probert's head to see the coast of England.

Awarded the D. S. O.

The nurse and an orderly carried Probert, cot and all, to the main deck and, telling him to hold on tight, slid him into the sea. A rescuing destroyer picked him up before he had swallowed too much sea water.

Eventually he arrived in an English hospital. Here he was awarded the medal of the Distinguished Service Order for gallantry and apprised of his promotion to a Lieutenancy.

Weeks later Probert was well enough to be discharged from the hospital. But he had not gone long before something seemed to snap in his brain and wipe away his memory.

The young officer finally was found in London, wandering. Someone recognized him from his photograph published in a London newspaper.

It was not until he caught sight of familiar scenes in his native village that Probert regained his memory. He hopes to rejoin his regiment in another month.

"I want to get back into the scrap before it is all over," Probert is telling his townsmen up in Blaenavon, Wales.

Allies Tighten Financial Grip on Constantine.

ATHENS, June 17.— The International Financial Commission repeated its protest to the Greek Government against permitting the National Bank to issue an additional 30,000,000 drachmas ($6,000,000) in paper currency. The Franco-British members of the commission stated that Greece could not accept financial assistance from either France or Great Britain so long as the issue remained in circulation nor would any further Greek loans be admitted to the London or Paris markets.

POLICE CHARGE THREE WERE LOOTING STORE

BOTTLES OF MORPHINE AND HEROIN ARE STOLEN.

Buffalo, June 16.—Detective John Dumke and policemen attached to the Genesee station, surrounded the drug store of Radder and Young, at 1322 Fillmore avenue, at 1.30 o'clock this morning and arrested three men who the police say were caught ransacking the place. Those under arrest on a charge of burglary and larceny are: John Heintz, 23 years old, 703 Rose street; John Warner, 24 years old, 508 Front avenue, and Walter Smith, 21 years old, 193 Hickory street.

Dr. H. J. Siedler, whose office and apartments are above the drug store, was aroused shortly after one o'clock by a noise in the store. Bottles were crashing on the floor and he could hear persons walking. Dr. Siedler telephoned the police and Detective Dumke and Patrolmen George Borschel and William F. Hall were hurried to the scene in the auto patrol.

The machine was stopped some distance from the store and the police officers surrounded the store and had little difficulty in arresting the men. The police say the men broke a side door in entering the store. Two bottles of morphine and one bottle of heroin were stolen from the store.

Another Striking Indication Of Unsettled Conditions in Shoe Trade

The unsettled conditions of the shoe trade are clearly illustrated in the following letter issued to the retailer dealers of Canada by Getty and Scott Limited of Galt, manufacturers of the Classic Shoe, a copy of which was shown The Examiner by Mr. C. E. Smith, as follows:

To the Canadian Shoe Trade in General:

Dear Sirs,—We beg to advise you that on and after this date all prices on our line of Classic Footwear will be withdrawn and new prices will prevail throughout. The scarcity and abnormally high prices of raw materials consoined with the shortage of labour has compelled us to take this action. The tanners and producers of leather and raw materials that enter into shoes have decided not to accept any orders ahead on these materials and they can only be bought from day to day with a small supply in sight. Could we get placed ahead for these materials we assure you this change in price would not take place but that is an absolute impossibilty under the existing conditions in the country, conditions which have been brought about, no doubt, from the present European crisis. We have the market on raw materials from day to day and cannot see any relief whereby we could assure our customers of placing orders ahead farther than we have done already with you. In reference to further quantities of shoes you may require from us we will accept these orders with the understanding that the prices on these shoes prevailing at the time the shoes are shipped will be the prices charged for them.

Quebec's Canadianism Affects Recruiting

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, speaking before the Ottawa Canadian Club recently, gave expression to a truth that many people are apt to forget when considering the attitude of the people of Quebec toward the war:

"The habitant," he pointed out, "has belonged for many generations—for centuries—to Canada. He has no connection except, so to speak, intellectually, and that in a qaulified degree, with France. His estrangement from France is manifold. First, he was ceded, as I have stated, in 1763 by the Treaty of Paris. Then, even before the cession, there was a marked difference between the habitant, the Canadien, of whom Montcalm speaks in his letter, and the military class, the soldiers, the officers, the bureaucracy, lording it over him. The correspondence between Vaudreuil and Montcalm is conclusive evidence of my statement. Moreover, the French Revolution, which destroyed Monarchy, reorganized the Church, centralised the government, codified the laws and customs, has created an abyss, a gulf, between the habitant and modern France, and for more than half a century after 1879 there were no relations between the old French colony and the old mother country. Sir Wilfrid Laurier will bear me out if I say that when he began to study law in the sixties there was but one bookseller in Montreal, and another one in Quebec, who made direct importations of books from France. It was the old firm of Fabre & Gravel in Montreal and the old firm of Cremazie in Quebec. Indeed it was not until the Crimean War that the French-Canadians took some interest in the affairs of France. The alliance of England and France on the battlefields of the Crimea aroused the enthusiasm of the people, just as does the present Entente Cordiale. For the first time since 1760 a French warship, La Capricieuse, anchored in the waters of the St. Lawrence. For the first time also, the Tri-colour, hitherto unknown in Quebec, was imported by English merchants, who distributed it amongst their customers to decorate their houses after Balaclava, Alma and Sebastopol.

"The habitant has therefore worked out alone his destinies in the new world. He has won his civil and religious liberty under the regime which followed the cession. All his traditions are therefore Canadian. On the contuary, British settlement in Canada is of a more recent period, and especially during the last half century an unceasing tide of immigration has poured in from the United Kingdom. Nearly all English-speaking Canadians, mostly all of you gentlemen of the Canadian Club, have many relations on the other side of the water, and when you cross the ocean you are still 'going home.' Hence, blood, which is thicker than water, will quite naturally stir your feelings in all matters, be they political, social, or intellectual, which affect Great Britain and Greater Britain."

The appeal to Quebec must be made not on the ground that France is in peril, but by urging that freedom and the right of self-government are in peril, and that if the Prussian triumphs, militarism will be introduced upon the continent of North America, with all its attendant evils. More than other people, the French Canadians may be moved by arguments based on the idea that this is a war against war. Appeals to come to the aid of France, their mother country have not been very successful. Mr Lemieux's Canadian Club speech tells why.

Holland Suffering From Food Prices

Premier Says Embargo Will Continue Until Supply Is Adequate.

THE HAGUE, via London, June 17.—The Socialist Deputy Schauer in the Chamber of Deputies Thursday interpellated the Government on the high cost of living.

He demanded extensive food control measures to prevent speculators from carrying out swindling practices and to enable workers to buy foodstuffs at reasonable prices.

Premier Van Der Linden in reply detailed the various measures already taken to prevent the exportation of home grown foodstuffs on which he said the embargo would continue until the quantity required for consumption at home was provided for.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EMPIRE

Great Changes Must Come When the War Has Ended.

LONDON, June 17.—The Daily Telegraph, discussing the re-fashioning of the fabric of the Empire, as indicated in Premier Asquith's speech says the present insistent demand for reorganization has not originated here or it would require to be approached with far greater caution. The old opprobrious phrase, "Downing Street rule," has fallen into abeyance. It is our part to enter a council of the Empire, prepared to discuss far-reaching projects, which only yesterday were deemed abstract and visionary. "There are still some among us," continues the Telegraph, "who think along the old lines of free trade tariff reform, but those old antiquated trenches have been obliterated for most of us by the high explosive of the war. The Empire has really begun to think Imperially now, it has realized how careless and haphazard was the old system, how wasteful and neglectful of Imperial resources, how naked and open the Empire lay to the economic strategy of the enemy. Laissez faire is no longer a working theory. Those who fly that flag must infallibly go down in the strenuous days of the peace that will inevitably follow the war."

Towns in Central District Report Severe Shocks—No Casualties.

ROME, June 17.—A heavy earth shock was reported at 3.25 o'clock yesterday morning at Forli, a town of Central Italy, having a population of 50,000, and at Rimini, a town with the same number of persons, 28 miles further east. There were no casualties.

HE WEDS AN HEIRESS.

Daughter of London Morning Post Owner Weds Son of Duke.

LONDON, June 14. —Lady Meriel Bathurst became Lady Alastair Graham when she was married recently at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. She is now on her honeymoon in the picturesque Isle of Arran. Lady Alastair, whose handsome husband is the youngest son of the Duke of Montrose, and holds the rank of lieutenant-commander in the navy is the only daughter of Lord and Lady Bathurst and an heiress.

Her mother is the famous and clever woman who owns and manages "The Morning Post," one of the oldest and most influential of the London dailies, the proprietorship in which she inherited from her father, the late Lord Glenesk.

EGGS HARD AS BULLETS.

Albanians Boil Them With Onions for Thirty Hours.

If less meat, shall we eat superboiled eggs after the manner of the Albanians? asks the London Chronicle. It testifies to the strength of their digestions. An equal number of eggs and onions are boiled together for about three hours daily on ten successive days, the eggs being slightly pricked after each boil, so that the juice of the onions thoroughly permeates them.

They are, naturally, as hard as bullets at the end of this treatment; but an Albanian will bolt down a huge platful—helped down by lashings of olive oil — and then clamour for a second helping.

Flower of Youth

In a recent address in London, the editor of the Poetry Review pointed out that at a time when the greatest poets of the day had left no impression, the two most remarkable features of the poetry evoked by the war had been one of the fine spirit revealed in the work of the numerous soldier poets, and the rare quality and beauty of the war verses of the women. Thus the London Times points out "poetry has resumed its ancient place as an inspiration and consolation, the message of soul to soul instead of being an exercise in banality, such feminine poems as Katharine Tynan's beautiful 'Flower of Youth' have been a solace to many burdened hearts and drawn tears alike from wrinkled lawyers and bearded farmers"

Lest Heaven be thronged with grey beards hoary,
God, who made boys for His delight,
Stoops, in a day of grief and glory
And calls them in from the night
When they come trooping from the war
Our skies have many a golden star

Heaven's thronged with gay and careless faces,
New-waked fom dreams of dreadful things.
They walk in green and pleasant places
And the crystal water-springs
Who dreamt of dying and the slain
And the fierce thirst and the strong pain.

Dear boys! They shall be young forever;
The Son of God was once a boy.
They run and leap by a clear river
And of their youth they have great joy.
God, who made boys so clean and good,
Smiles with the eyes of fatherhod.

Now Heaven is by the young invaded;
Their laughter's in the House of God.
Stainless and simple as He made it
God keeps the heart o' the boy unflawed.
The old wise saints look on and smile,
They are so young and without guile.

Oh, if the sonless mothers weeping,
And widowed girls, could see inside
The glory that hath them in keeping
Who went to the Great War and died,
They would rise and put their mourning off,
And say: "Thank God, he has enough!"

GEN. HUGHES RETURNS.

Will Review Troops in Ottawa, Then Visit Lindsay.

OTTAWA, June 17.—Sir Sam Hughes has returned to Ottawa after a tour of the recruiting and training centres in the Maritime Provinces. He announced that he found things in good shape in the East.

The Minister had no comment to make on newspaper criticism with regard to his letter to Lord Kitchener respecting the Ypres salient.

General Hughes spoke very highly of the work of the Highland Brigade under Col. Borden, Col. Tremaine, M.P., Col. John Stanfield, M.P., and Col. G. W. Fowler, M.P.

The Minister held a review here yesterday, and then went to Lindsay. He will attend a memorial service for the late Col. G. H. Baker, M.P., at Sweetsburg on Sunday.

WHY DUNN STAYS AT HOME

STORY OF A MODERN JONAH—HOW HE WENT DOWN IN THE GREATEST WRECKS OF ALL TIME—AND LIVED TO BE TORPEDOED.

British sailors are strange, interesting, fascinating studies, brave and hardy as the old Vikings, from whom many of them are descended, and just as superstitious. They admire Charles Dunn, but they will not sail with him; they are thrilled by the marvellous tale of tragedies he has survived, yet they swear that they will drop him overboard if he should ship with them.

For this Charles Dunn has had a career of probably unparalleled misfortune. He was board the Titanic, when an iceberg sent her to the bottom of the Atlantic. He was on the Empress of Ireland when a Swedish steamer accidentally sank her in the fog-bound waters of the St. Lawrence. He was on the Lusitania when the German assassins torpedoed her off the coast of Ireland, and he was on the Florizan when she, too, was torpedoed.

What other man has had an experience like that? Othello rejoiced that his Desdemona "loved him for the dangers he had passed," but our Jack Tars seem to hold Charles Dunn responsible for the disasters he has been in. They call him the modern Jonah. They say that he brings bad luck to a ship and they will not sail with him.

In spite of all his appalling experiences, Dunn was ready to put his fortunes to the touch again, and was about to sail on an Admiralty transport, when the sailors who knew him vowed that if Jonah made the trip with them they would heave him overboard. Dunn took the hint and left the ship, but he had not finished with the sea. He joined the Royal Naval Reserve, only to be discharged as unfit for further service.

To crown all he was prosecuted by the Admiralty for not making the voyage on the ship whose superstitious sailors would not have him on board but happily the magisterate treated him handsomely, merely binding him over not to offend again! And so poor Jonah seems condemned to the life of a longshoreman. It is a strange story.

The present day Greeks are supposed to be the lineal descendants of the men who won Marathon and Salamis. Of course, the breed of modern Greeks (as is true of about every other people) is somewhat mixed, but there is much in the Greeks of today to remind us of the men who built the Parthenon.

WARM PRAISE FOR KITCHENER FROM EGYPTIAN

NEW YORK, June 17.—Major J. Abellini, retired, of the Egyptian Army, who sailed for Bordeaux on the French liner Rochambeau, said that every true Egyptian would weep when he heard of the death of Lord Kitchener.

"When Lord Kitchener came to Cairo as diplomatic agent for the British Government," Major Abellini continued, "he commenced at once to undo the harm which had been done by Lord Cromer, who never understood the Egyptians or their country. Instead of adopting an unsympathetic attitude and keeping the natives at a distance, as if they were of an inferior race, Lord Kitchener listened to their complaints and tried his best to remedy them.

"I knew him in the early days of the British campaign from 1884 to 1889, when I was chief interpreter on Lord Wolseley's staff and was later attached to the Intelligence Department at Debbah on the Nile between Khartum and Berber. That was the place where Kitchener did such fine work in keeping the country quiet with his Sudanese troops while the British expedition went up to the relief of General Gordon.

"I served with Kitchener at Dongola, Berber, and also in the Nile expedition with Lord Charles Beresford under Sir Evelyn Wood. At that time the late Field Marshal was a major in the Royal Engineers and was the most popular of all the British officers who took part in the Egyptian campaigns. He had a fine constitution and never showed fatigue or was laid up for a single day by sickness except when he was sent to the hospital after his wound at Handoub. I can see his tall, sinewy figure, clad in khaki, with the deep red tarboosh showing up his bronzed forehead, dismounting from the high trotting military camel and striding through the crowded bazaars at Berber, as if it was yesterday. He never glanced to right or left to see if an assassins were on hand to kill him and he knew no fear. Lord Kitchener was a great man in Egypt and we shall never see his equal there again."

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N. S., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat troubles and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

The Growing Tendency of the Age—

A noted English scientist asserts the tendency is towards "Neurasthenia, 'nerves,' etc." A remarkable statement.

No less remarkable is the cause which, he adds, "is not unlikely due to removing from our diet those elements of cereal food which Nature has hid in the husk of the grain, and which man in his ignorance discards."

The elements to which he refers are the well-known mineral salts of phosphorus, lime, iron, etc., removed in milling flour to make it white, but which physicians know are indispensable to normal, well-balanced nerves, bodies and brains.

A real Guarantee

To be more than a mere "scrap of paper," a guarantee must be absolute—and backed by a concern able and willing to make it good.

The General's guarantee is not only absolute; it is backed by a business operating the world's largest roofing mills, and making one-third of all the roll roofing made in America. That's the guarantee behind

Certain-teed Roofing

The guarantee is for 5, 10 or 15 years, according to ply (1, 2 or 3). There is no evasion about it—no attempt to substitute a high-sounding something "just as good." There is no substitute for a real guarantee. You get an absolute guarantee on CERTAIN-TEED because the General knows that no better roofing can be made. Its raw materials and method of manufacture are both certified by the General's board of graduate chemists, and he knows he's taking no chance in guaranteeing them to you. That's what "CERTAIN-TEED" means—certified and guaranteed. Experience has proven that the guarantee is conservative, and that CERTAIN-TEED will outlast the period of guarantee.

The roofing felt, as it comes bone dry from the rollers, is given a thorough saturation of a special blend of soft asphalts, the formula of the General's board of expert chemists. It is then given a harder coating of another blend of asphalts. This keeps the inner saturation soft, and prevents the drying-out process so destructive to ordinary roofing. Roofing is impervious to the elements only so long as the asphalt saturation lasts. CERTAIN-TEED retains its soft saturation, and is in good condition for years after the harder, drier kinds have become useless.

CERTAIN-TEED is made in rolls; also in slate-covered shingles. There is a type of CERTAIN-TEED for every kind of building, with flat or pitched roofs, from the largest sky-scraper to the smallest residence or out-building.

CERTAIN-TEED is sold by responsible dealers all over the world, at reasonable prices. Investigate it before you decide on any type of roof.

Hun "Efficiency" vs. Britain's Competency, Unity, Tenacity

Germany's Fatal Miscalculation Was Failure to Foresee Isolation of Teutonic Empire—Like a Locomotive Track—Even If Britain's Allies Deserted Her, She Would Not Stop Short of Victory, Declares New York Times.

(From the New York Times)

It has become the fashion of political thought to apologize for democracy in war, to compare it unfavorably with its opposite, which is autocracy, and to apostrophize the manner in which a mechanical nation meets its great emergencies. It has been particularly trite to contrast the multiplicity of councils among the English, their 'muddling' and general ineffectiveness, with the marvelous efficiency of the Germans. Democracies, one hears, are slow to make up their minds, and slow to act and waste their energies, whereas an autocracy, on the other hand, begins with its mind made up, acts swiftly and conserves its energies.

By none more than by the English themselves are these conclusions asserted and the lessons abstracted. "The one condition of victory," said David Lloyd George in a recent speech, 'is unity,' as if that were a paramount enemy virtue. 'Let us apply the enemy's methods to our means,' he said, 'and we win.' Winston Churchill, attacking the British government for its conduct of the war, counts the men supposed to be under arms, estimates the number that are in contact with the enemy, concludes that there is a "large margin not yet applied to the prosecution of the war," and rises to a peak of bitterness in saying that, whereas the government talks of "combing" the industries for more soldiers, he would say: "Physician comb thyself." One might think, to read what they say to each other, that the English were in a moral panic, divided in counsels, self-discovered in their inefficiency, and now resolved to be efficient without knowing how to begin. But that is not so.

TWO PREROGATIVES.

Earl Curzon said recently that there were two prerogatives of which they could never deprive an Englishman—the passion for depreciating himself and the right to abuse his government. He spoke then of unity. The greatest contribution that Great Britain has made was not the number of men she put into the field, the munitions turned out, or the ships which sailed the seas, but the unbroken front, the solidarity, the stubborn tenacity of the nation as a whole. Of that unity and tenacity the government was a symbol. That is the true picture of the English the one which one knows instinctively to be true. The confusion is in the technique, and that is unimportant.

There are nations that might run a war better, there are perhaps few that could do worse in technique of conduct, but there is not one that could be more trusted to win a war, and that, after all, is the thing that counts. To be sure of this you have only to consider what would happen to the allies in the event of England deserting them, and then, on the other hand, what England would do if her allies deserted her. She would go on alone, as she has been known to do before, because, as Earl Curzon says, she is united and tenacious, even in a mood of self-depreciation, or perhaps more so in that mood than in any other. England, denouncing herself as inefficet, is yet the greatest moral asset of democracy in Europe.

FETICH OF EFFICIENCY.

Against her is arrayed what the world has been pleased to make a fetich of, namely, German efficiency. And what is that? How shall it be judged? By results, perhaps. Well, then, its first justification would be victory. Being that quality wherein an autocracy may be superior to democracies in war, efficiency is obliged to triumph in war against inefficiency so-called. In this it has failed so far, and is in danger of failing utterly. It may be argued that the test is not fair, because there is a point at which the highest efficiency will have to succumb to sheer numbers. Very well, we take it on other grounds.

A democracy, being inefficient politically, is unprepared for war, as England was; but in German preparedness there has been great efficiency. There is a thing now, taken altogether for granted. True, Germany was remarkably prepared for war, but in her preparedness there were fatal defects, not political and economic alone, but physical defects. Having put its trust in great guns, and in the rapidity with which the enemy could be overwhelmed by their fire, German efficiency failed to provide itself with sufficient ammunition, so that by the end of Sept. 1914, the shortage of it was a calamity. By its own testimony this is true, and military plans had suddenly to be recast at a loss of precious time. It was counted on a short war, which was a fatal miscalculation. It underestimated the strength and resources of its enemies, which is thought to be a vice of democracies. It failed to foresee the economic isolation of the German empire, which was automatically bound to happen. Having been confronted with the fact of this isolation, it parleyed with the food question, and only after the lapse of nearly two years took the necessary arbitrary measures to conserve the means of life. In the meantime hopeless blunders had been made, as German critics of their own government now unite in saying bitterly. There was first a great slaughter of swine, so that there was more pork than people could consume, and next there was a great scarcity of fat on that account, which apparently now cannot be made good. There was plenty in one place and scarcity in another because the seperate states were loath to yield control of their food to a Prussian dictator, now tardily appointed. These things might all have been done very much better. Doing them so badly in a democracy would be a mark of inefficiency.

GERMANY HAS FAILED.

German efficiency has failed to overwhelm either of its great enemies. It has conquered only Serbia and Belgium. On its second wind it does its mightiest against the French at Verdun and is nonpulsed by the resistance of a democracy that was thought to be more valorous than efficient in war.

So there is efficiency contrasted with inefficiency in war. Wherein is the triumph of one over the other? German efficiency will be less made of in the future, its limitations are as obvious as those of an analytical conclusion. It solves a given problem working from premises laid down, but lacks imagination to foresee new conditions. It sees narrowly in a straight line, and when reflected by unconsidered obstacles, which imagination might have provied for, it is like a locomotive off the track.

Twice a Day for Half the Year

SOMEONE has to attend to the furnace: most people look on it as an irritating, dusty job. It need not be. It is not, if you have a Sunshine Furnace.

Shaking down the Sunshine Furnace does not raise a dust. The fine ashes are drawn up the chimney; there is never that fine sprinkling of dust that lights on everything in the basement, and even floats up through the house. No. That is one thing the owner of a Sunshine Furnace never has to contend with. The Sunshine is as clean as a piece of furniture.

There are extra sturdy grates that turn with a long handle to crush with ease the hardest clinkers. A slight rocking that hardly requires stooping, cleans down the ashes. The ashes fall as the grates are shaken, for the sides of the fire-pot are straight. This saves bother—and heat; because if ashes bank up around the fire-pot they stop the radiation of heat. The ashes come out in a big ash-pan. There is no shovelling or spilling ashes about.

And the door is large, as it should be for convenience in firing up. Or if need be, a large chunk of wood will go through this door. The dampers can be operated from the rooms above. This saves you the nuisance of running up and down stairs to shut off the drafts and open up the check damper.

All the fond hopes so rudely blighted here
Shall find fruition in a happier sphere;
Youth's joyous prime wasted by dire decay,
A thousand fold will endless bliss repay.

We loved her so, yet selfishly would fain
Have kept her with us, though our loss her gain;
Surely we miss her, but submissive still,
We bow obedient to the Father's will.

Tho' ne'er her smile will cheer us here below,
A few short years, and we to her will go;
Then wherefore weep, for, at the pearly gates
Our own dear Bessie, for our coming, waits.

REMEDIES FOR STAINS.

To remove fruit stains put a layer of salt on the stain as soon as made and pour boiling water through same as for tea stains.

To remove ink stains: While fresh soak in milk, using fresh milk as it takes up the ink. If the stain has been allowed to dry use salts of lemon, first wetting the spot then rubbing the salts on and rinsing well with cold water. It may sometimes be necessary to repeat the process.

For grease spots, chloroform, ether, turpentine or alcohol may be used, but if very delicate fabric, naptha is better than either, as it leaves no mark of its own.

To remove mildew, rub over the marks with the juice of a raw tomato, sprinkle with salt and lay in sun. Repeat the process if necessary two or three times.

A PATRIOTIC MOTHER.

'Twas when the gallant ninety-third
Stood ready to entrain
For Barriefield, and from sad eyes
The tears fell down like rain,
For sweetheart, husband, brothers, sons,
Mothers and maidens mourn,
For only heaven above can know
If they will ere return.
I heard a nobler mother say
To one oppressed by woe,
Proud would I be, had I to-day,
Like you, a son to go.

Our country's calling, and expect
Stern duty promptly done,
And breathes there a Canuck, would flinch
To face the hellish Hun,
Nay, dearer far than life we prize,
Fair honour's stainless worth,
Our hearts and homes, and Canada,
The land that gave us birth,
That parting rends the heart with pain,
My friend, full well I know,
But cease all sorrow and rejoice
That you have a son to go.

My only son, who should have been
In feeble age my stay,
Fell 'mid brave Besnet's valiant band
In wild St. Julien's fray.
I loved him so, oh what sharp grief
Pierced deep my bosoms core,
What time we parted, but I loved
Fair freedom's cause still more.
And though across life's lonely years
Hope flings no radiant bow,
I would not, were here again,
Reluctant let him go.

High every loyal mothers heart,
With patriotic pride should swell,
Whose son is not afraid to fight,
The despots' power to quell.
And where the paths of glory lead,
Grim danger scorns to shun,
For cowards die a thousand deaths,
A brave man only one,
Though battling for the right he falls
Before the furious foes,
Weep not, but glory that your son
Was man enough to go.

Would worthy mother keep her son,
Not think it dire disgrace
To have him shirk at home the while,
Another takes his place,
Dark will the craven's name go down
To everlasting shame,
Who never to his country's aid
Against the mighty came,
But on fame's roll, emblazoned bright
The hero's name will glow,
Who to defraud his kith and king
Was brave enough to go.

Lift up your head and bear your part.
While they are far away
And be ye sure, just Heaven, the right,
With victory will repay,
Pray that celestial hosts encamp,
Round tented Barriefield,
There or in far off France entrenched,
Our boys protect and shield,
Until the Teuton tyrant's pride
Is in the dust laid low,
And laureled they return, rejoice,
That you had a son to go

AT REST.

(In memoriam of Bessie Powell)

Softly as dews at evening gently fall
To our dear Bessie, came the Master's call.
Forsaking all, she rose and followed Him;
Nor shrank to pass the shadow valley dim.

Fold now her hands upon her tranquil breast;
The storm is o'er, the voyager at rest;
Aye, sweet repose from wasting sickness free,
From sorrow, pain, and all earth's misery.

And sweeter rest than even the peaceful grave,
After life's toils, the body ever gave
The emancipated spirit surely knows
In realms where life's deep river blissful flows.

Like one of old, from day to day she trod
The narrow way that leads us home to God;
But now the Cross for ever is laid down,
And won the victor's amaranthine

They catch you just right

W. G. & R. summer garments are so light, so porous and so flexible that they fit over the body like a second natural covering. And yet are just as comfortable of them. They possess, too, a certain stubbornness of character that resists wear.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP

OVERSEAS BATTALIONS OF EASTERN ONTARIO MAKE FORWARD MOVE TOWARD BRITAINS FIRING LINE

TO many thousands of our enlisted Canadians, impatient to get into the fight, this move to central military camps is more than welcome. Ten thousand men under canvas at Barriefield, with plenty of open country around, can train under conditions far more nearly approaching actual warfare than have been possible at the home town barracks.

A few weeks work here, and our hearts and hopes will go with them as they sail for the Motherland, to do their gallant part in smashing the attempted tyranny of ruthless might and "kultur".

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Complication Removed

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

"This John King," said Mrs. Haskins to her daughter Isabel, scanning a newspaper, "who is spending his money so lavishly must be the same man with whom you had that flirtation ten years ago when we were staying in Rome."

"Oh, mamma!"

"Why are you so moved, my dear? Surely there was nothing serious between you and him, and that was a long while ago."

"There was something between us, mamma."

"There was?" asked the mother in her turn, showing concern.

Isabel made no reply to the question, but after deep thought said:

"I wish to meet this Mr. King. If he is the same I met ten years ago I shall do all I can to win him."

"Why so—to secure his large fortune?"

"No; to remove a serious complication."

That was all the mother could get out of her daughter. The society news was scanned from day to day until Mr. King was mentioned as a guest at the house of one of Mrs. Haskins' friends. The lady was appealed to to bring about a meeting between Mr. King and Miss Haskins and did so at a dinner given by the mutual friend. After the dinner Isabel returned to her home with a red spot in each cheek and a spark in each eye.

"Well?" said Mrs. Haskins.

"Oh, mother, he has no remembrance of me whatever."

"Then he is the man we supposed him to be."

"He is."

"And do you still desire to marry him?"

"Absolutely."

"Did he seem pleased with you?"

"I think so."

"Why is it not to his interest as much as yours that you and he should be married?"

"Perhaps it is."

"Then why do you not tell him of your meeting ten years ago, giving him the reasons, if he does not already know them, why he should marry you?"

"Because I loved him then. I love him now, and I wish him to marry me for love, not for any other reason whatever."

The mother was obliged to be satisfied with this statement, though curiosity was sharpened by her interest in her daughter. In time Mr. King was invited to the Haskins' to dinner. He came and set Isabel's heart wildly throbbing by saying some deliciously sweet words to her. But when later he met her at a social function she saw him chatting with another girl, and, judging from his expression, he was saying sweet words to her, causing Isabel's heart to sink as rapidly as it had risen.

A few days later Mr. King called, making as an excuse the offering of his box at the opera. Either he was the same skillful love maker he had been a decade before or he was much smitten with Miss Haskins. In his conduct were many of the indications of a sure affection.

And so the affair went on. At one time he would be devoted to her; at another she would hear that he was browsing among the prettiest girls in the social swim. What most troubled her was that he was passing into that age where a bachelor's admiration is bestowed upon girls much younger than himself.

However, as the weeks flew by his devotion to Isabel grew more constant. He had appeared to purposely display attentions to young girls when she was present to observe them. This he was gradually giving up. Indeed, the affair between them had gone so far that his attentions to other girls ceased to trouble her. Flowers had begun to come from him to her, a sure sign that a proposal is about to be made. One evening when King followed a box of them he had sent he called, and when Isabel came down to meet him he put his arms about her, kissed her warmly and said:

"My dear wife, it is time this play came to a climax."

"Wife?"

"Yes. I knew you the moment I saw you. Immediately after that wedding which was got up between us in a youthful frolic I went to a lawyer and asked him if it could be construed into a legal marriage. He replied that if we both intended it as such it was within the law of wedlock. It was intentional with me. If it was the same with you we were married ten years ago."

"In my heart it surely was intentional."

"I resolved," continued King, "that as soon as I had accumulated a sufficiency I would ask you the question that would, if answered in the affirmative, make us one. I have since been more than fortunate. I came here purposely to find you. When I saw that you did not remember me"—

"I did," interrupted Isabel. "I supposed, however, that you did not recognize me."

"I wished to win you."

"And I wished just as much to win you."

When Isabel joined her mother she gave evidence that something momentous had happened.

"You are engaged!" exclaimed Mrs. Haskins.

"No—married."

"Married!"

"Yes, we have been married ten years, but we didn't know it."

LEFT PILES OF ENEMY CORPSES

Eighteen Austrian Battalions Made Attack Which Italians Repulsed.

ROME, June 17. — "Between the Adige and Brenta the enemy made further fruitless and costly efforts to break down our resistance which has now shown itself firm along the whole front," says an official statement. "In the Lagarina Valley, Thursday night, the enemy in force attempted to surprise our positions at Serravalle and on Coni Zugna. At daybreak, after three hours of severe hand-to-hand fighting, the enemy's columns fled precipitately under the fire of our artillery. On the Posina-Astice front the enemy, after a night attack in the Campiglia area, confined himself to a heavy bombardment which was answered by our batteries.

"On the Asiago plateau the enemy in a mass, estimated at eighteen battalions, attacked our line between Monte Pari and Monte Lemerle after the usual artillery preparation. These attacks were decisive in character in the centre and demonstrative on the flanks. An artillery curtain of fire preceded and protected these fierce attacks of the enemy infantry, which invariably broke down before our lines, wher the enemy left piles of corpses.

"We made a successful counter-attack from Monte Lemerle, taking some prisoners and a machine gun. During these actions altogether 284 prisoners were taken."

Carrot Balls.

Scrape and boil several large carrots in boiling salted water until tender. Rub through a sieve or potato press and measure. For each cupful put into a saucepan over the fire, add one-half tablespoonful of butter, one heaping tablespoonful of flour and one-half cupful of milk, and stir until thick and smooth; season to taste with salt and pepper, a few drops of onion juice and one teaspoonful of chopped parsley; cook for two minutes longer and set aside until cold and firm. Form into small balls, dip each into slightly beaten egg, roll in sifted crumbs and fry until a golden brown in smoking hot fat. Serve hot.

Coningsby Dawson, Author, Relates His Experiences As An Artillery Officer In Training at Kingston

Tells of the Celebrated Captain Ringwood of the Artillery School and the Work the Young Officers Have to Perform—Celebrated Writer Went Through All Arduous Work of the School

(By Joyce Kilmer, in the New York Times.)

Once upon a time there was a novelist named Coningsby Dawson. He wrote "The aGrden without Walls," and "The Raft," and many interesting short stories. People who praised him said that he was delicate and discerning and sympathetic. His curly hair was worn rather long, and his face obviously was that of a poet.

I do not know what has become of this Coningsby Dawson, but the other day I saw a big bronzed fellow, with close-cropped hair and a red mustache, who said that he was Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson of the Fourteenth Artillery. He was in New York for a few days on his way to England, where he expected to join his regiment and sail for France. I asked him to tell me what had brought about this extraordinary transformation, and what the novelist Coningsby Dawson thought about war, and what Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson thought about literature.

He bit off the end of a very fat, black cigar and lit it. He used to smoke specially made cigarettes in an amber mouthpiece.

"Well," he said, "you see, I've been up at Kingston, at Tete du Pont, in the Royal School of Artillery. I suppose it has changed me—it's changed my attitude towards books and my attitude toward life. It's given me a lot of things I needd.

"When the war broke out I'd been staying in the Rocky Mountains, and I crossed the continent to Quebec, intending to go to England. I got to Quebec on Tuesday night, and was told that the boat would not sail on the next morning. But I went on board nevertheless because I had a private tip that she'd sail at midnight.

A FIRST PROMPTING.

"When I woke up the next morning we were at sea and the ship was painted black from bow to stern. Lord Richard Neville was on board with a number of officers of the Expeditionary Force. Count Leseps, the aviator, was on board, too and there were a number of English and French officers returning to their regiments.

"Now, for the first time, I got an idea of the psychological significance of war—of the spiritual significance of war. I found myself analyzing these men, studying their gay indifference, and wondering if I could possibly go toward probable death with the same attitude. I found myself looking at them from the novelist's standpoint—and for some reason I was ashamed to find myself regarding them and the war in this way.

"And when we got to Liverpool I saw that without a shadow of a doubt their attitude was a genuine expression of their feelings—it was by no means a military pose. We were held up for some hours outside of the harbor, and a great crowd of artillerists got on board and set to work pulling down the electric lights and generally stripping the ship. The civilian passengers were much worried; they ran around and complained and asked questions. But the soldiers sat in the smoking rooms and played poker. Civilians and soldiers I saw didn't look at life in the same way. And I liked the soldiers' way of looking at life better.

WENT TO HOLLAND.

"I went to Oxford, my old university, and tried to get a commission. But the Government Press Bureau sent for me and asked me to go back to the United States and help in the work of supplying information to the American papers. In the first place, I was sent to Holland to see Henry van Dyke and try to get him to protest against the Belgian atrocities. I did not succeed. I was interested in the way in which information was sent back from the front—there were couriers, one of them Max Pemberton's son, who travelled back and forth passing messages by word of mouth, with the assistance near the German lines of Dutchmen who passed as Germans. I suppose they would be called courier-spies. I made one or two trips with them.

"Then I came back to the United States to do volunteer work for the Government Press Bureau in supplying information to the papers. I did this for the first year and a quarter of the war, and then got tired of it and decided that after all perhaps I could serve my country better as a fighting man. I was on the Pacific Coast at the time. I decided to go East and join the Canadian Artillery."

"What brought you to that decision?" I asked.

DUTY AND SELF RESPECT.

"It was rather hard for me to analyze my state of mind," said Lieutenant Dawson. "I came to my decision partly from a sense of duty, because I thought that it was necessary for me to enlist if I were to have any self-respect when the war was over. But a very urgent reason was that I saw that here was one of the very biggest events of all time taking place! Any man, I thought, who expected to write, as I expect to write, for thirty years more, would have to get his impressions of this great event at first hand if he was to endeavour to express the spirit of his age."

I thought of another soldier-writer, one Rupert Brooke, and of what he said when he started for the front. "Well, if Armageddon's on," he said, "I suppose one should be present."

Lieutenant Coningsby Dawson looked thoughtfully at his half-burned cigar.

"There was one thing," he said, "that worried me considerably. You see, every man who is any sort of an artist must have a highly developed egotism. I knew that I would be judged by new standards, standards with which I was utterly unfamiliar. I was afraid I couldn't live up to them and I was worried because I didn't think I had enough courage. I was desperately afraid of being afraid.

CAPT. RINGWOOD.

"And after I got into Canada, when I said I was going to the Royal School of Artillery at Kingston, I heard nothing likely to cheer me up. Everybody said, 'Good Heavens! Are you going to be under Capt. Ringwood? Why, he eats two Englishmen for breakfast every morning!' A long-haired, poetical-looking cuss like you would be a perfect feast for Captain Ringwood! His motto is, 'Fe fi fo fum, I smell the blood of an Englishman.'"

"They told me all sorts of jolly stories about Captain Ringwood and the Royal School of Artillery—stories which were picturesque, although they were without exception lies. They told me that he took an awkward squad of men out one morning, made them run without stopping for eighteen miles through the snow, lined them up, half dead, against a wall, and said, 'There, you sons of guns, I hope you all get pneumonia and die.' And ran home by himself.

Lies of Slackers.

"Well, I found that all these fables were just lies told by the slackers—by men who were afraid to enlist or had been up with Captain Ringwood and couldn't stand the gaff. They told me that my literary reputation would offend Captain Ringwood and that my long hair would drive him mad. I trusted to luck about the literary reputation, but I had my hair cut close. What I took off my head I put on my face."

Lieut. Dawson stroked his bristling mustache approvingly.

"Do you know," he asked, "why artillery officers wear mustaches? It's because shaving the upper lip is supposed to affect the eyesight. I never heard this before I went to Kingston, but that's what they told us up there, anyway.

An Asset to the Empire.

"Now, Captain Ringwood is very far from being the man-eater the slackers had described to me. Captain Ringwood is a great man. He is one of the most valuable assets that the British Empire has in Canada at the present time. Captain Ringwood's task is in eight weeks to make soldiers out of—well, out of people like I was when you knew me. And he does it.

"Captain Ringwood belonged to the Royal Military College of Canada. He is as keen as mustard to get to the front, but his work as head of the Royal School of Artillery is so amazingly efficient that they won't let him go. So he says, 'Well, if I can't get to the front, I'll see that you fellows are damned fit to go before I get through with you.' In eight weeks he turns these raw recruits into artillery officers, giving them a course of training which ordinarily takes a year.

ARTILLERY IS IT

"It is difficult to get into the Royal School of Artillery. The artillery is the aristocracy of the army now, as the cavalry was before this latest war. The girls in Kingston will walk out with a common grunge from the artillery when they wouldn't think of walking out with an officer

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles, and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr Fred Rice, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from that dreadful disease."

A BLOCKADE THAT FAILS.

Germany is "blockading" England with submarines. How has it worked? In the first four months of this year England sold more cotton fabrics to South America than in the corresponding four months of peace at the beginning of 1914. The increase in British sales was about half the total business of United States did in South America in that four-month period! This record of Britain, decidedly preoccupied by the war, can well make Americans wonder whether our country has been doing all we think we have been doing to capture the markets of the world.—New York Press.

A SUFFERER FROM KIDNEY TROUBLE FOR TWO YEARS.

When the kidneys get ill the back gives out. But the back is not to blame. The ache comes from the kidneys, which lie under the small of the back.

Therefore, dull pain in the back, or sharp, quick twinges, are warnings of sick kidneys—warnings of kidney trouble.

Plasters and liniments will not cure the bad back, for they cannot reach the kidneys which cause it.

Doan's Kidney Pills reach the kidneys themselves. They are a special kidney and bladder medicine. They heal the diseased surface of the kidneys and bladder, and help them to act freely and naturally.

Miss Mary A. Northrop, Cole's Island, N.B., writes: "I have been a sufferer from kidney trouble for two years. I tried quite a number of remedies, but they did me no good. My mother got me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, and they did me so much good that I got the second one, and when I had taken that I was completely cured."

Doan's Kidney Pills, are the original kidney pills. See that our trade mark, "The Maple Leaf," is on every box. Price, 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

SIMPLEX SHOE POLISH PRESERVES THE LEATHER

"Defeat of Germany in Present War Would Mean the Crushing of Kaiserism and the Establishment of a Republic in That Country"

By F. CUNLIFFE-OWEN.

YEARS ago Napoleon III., in commenting on the extraordinary hold of Emperor Francis Joseph upon the personal regard and affection of his people, remarked that he was the only monarch in Europe who, no matter how overwhelming the disasters which he had sustained on the battlefield, could always count on being welcomed back to his capital with tokens of sympathy and of unaltered loyalty and good will. For Napoleon himself, the surrender of his army at Sedan, in 1870, spelt the loss of his crown and the downfall of his dynasty.

For the Kaiser, too, his failure to bring the present war to a successful issue means the disappearance of the Hohenzollerns from among the reigning houses of the Old World. True, Frederick the Great sustained many defeats during the Seven Years' War without forfeiting the confidence and the devotion of his subjects, and when, after the French victory at Jena, King Frederick William III. was forced to fly from his capital and to seek refuge at Memel, that is to say, in the most remote easterly portion of his dominions, he still managed to retain a warm place in the heart of his sorely harassed lieges, thanks, largely, to the enthusiastic admiration excited by the heroism of his beautiful Queen, Louise, who still is regarded to this day, in Northern Germany, in the light of a sort of national patron saint. But neither in the Seven Years' War, nor yet in the beginning of the nineteenth century, when the First Napoleon laid so heavy a hand upon Prussia, were the people confronted by such appalling ruin as that which now stares them in the face.

It is a ruin that seems in many ways utterly hopeless, because there is no prospect of recovery. For Great Britain, which still retains command of the sea, and is thus in a position to dominate all maritime commerce, is busily engaged in organising, with her numerous allies, a species of economic coalition for the purpose of restraining the trade of Prussia after the end of the war, not from any motives of revenge, nor even of economic rivalry, but solely in order to prevent Prussia from building up once more a prosperity which she would use to revive that military terrorism which was for so long the nightmare of Europe, and that has brought about the present war, with all its appalling loss of life and treasure.

Resentment Is Against Prussia.

The Allies harbor no very deep resentment against the lesser sovereign States of the German Empire, the people of which, popularly known as "Mass-Preussen" (Prussians against their will), have long groaned under the ever increasing despotism of the Imperial government at Berlin. Nor do the allied Powers feel very strongly against Austria and Turkey, whom they look upon as having been forced into the present war by the military party at Berlin. But no consideration of mercy will be shown to Prussia, save on conditions which will prevent her from becoming, for a hundred years or more to come, a factor in the military situation of Europe.

Premier Asquith and other members of the British government have repeatedly announced in Parliament that England and her allies would never sheathe the sword—which they had not lightly drawn—until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed and the rights of the small nations of Europe are established upon an unassailable foundation.

Similar declarations have been made by the leading statesmen now in office in Paris and at Petrograd, and it has been further proclaimed that Prussia would not be permitted to "subvert the arts of peace, of trade and industry, to military ends, or to develop her economic resources for purposes of military aggression."

If the Powers of the Entente are compelled to adopt this relentless attitude toward Prussia, it is because of the utter impossibility of believing that either the Kaiser or his government will ever consider themselves bound by any pledges that they may give in writing in the treaties of peace that will bring the present war to a conclusion. Berlin has furnished to the world so shameful an illustration of complete indifference to even the most sacred of treaty obligations that no one can hope to hold the government there, now or at any future time, to the fulfilment of its promises, save by force.

Without in any way condemning the German people and their soldiers as a whole, who have been fighting for their flag and for their country, according to their lights—perhaps not always in accordance with the rules of civilised warfare—it is impossible to deny that the Berlin government, by the violation of its treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, has placed Prussia, from an international point of view, "hors honneur," and that she is now regarded as an outlaw among all other nations. The memorable announcement by the Chancellor of the German Empire at the outset of the war that the Berlin government would never hesitate to disregard treaty obligations when the interests of the nation demanded it, and when he proclaimed that treaties at the best were "mere scraps of paper," he notified all the Powers of the world that it was useless to expect to hold Prussia to the observance of any written promise that she might make.

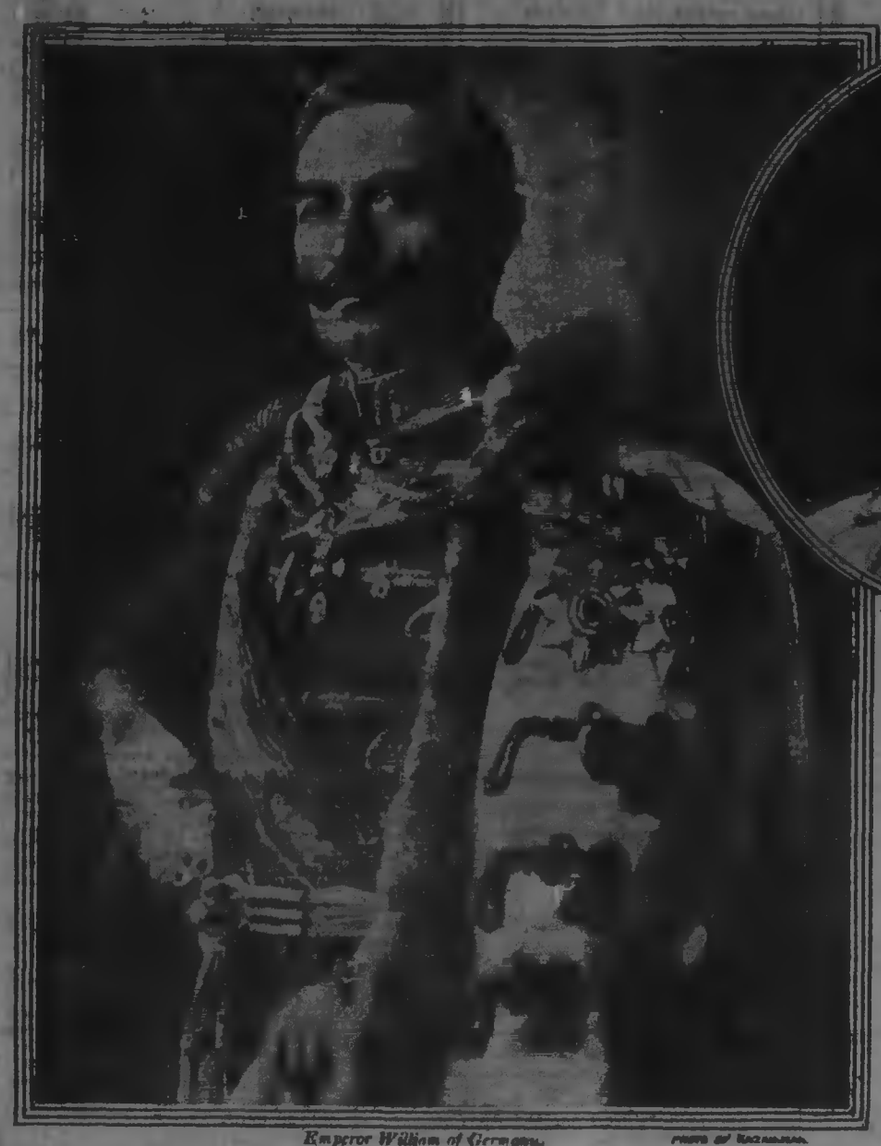
Must Destroy Military Prussia.

That is why Great Britain and her allies cannot afford to make peace without destroying for generations to come the military domination of Prussia. They have been taught by the past, and at the cost of billions of dollars and of millions of lives, that they cannot depend upon any pledges that Prussia might give, that no matter what she might promise, she would at once set to work to recruit her resources for another war, and that before many years were past the whole issue would have to be fought out all over again.

It is because the Kaiser is aware of these views on the part of the Powers of the Entente, and of the fact that he need expect no mercy from them, that they are bent on his overthrow, that he is continuing to fight, in order to stave off for a little time longer his inevitable fate and the certitude of internal revolution. The German people are keenly sick of the war. Popular sentiment is in favor of its speedy termination, no matter at what cost.

That intense aversion to any further continuance of the struggle prevails throughout the minor sovereign States of the German Empire, as well as in Austria, Hungary, Turkey, Bulgaria and even Prussia, is an acknowledged fact. Well authenticated reports have been received of disturbances in Berlin, due to the excessive cost of living and the destitution caused by the war.

In Bavaria, Wurtemberg and other German States the women, robbed of their husbands, of their brothers, of their fathers and of their sons, have actually stopped the railroad trains conveying reinforcements to the front, the troops called out to disperse these women refusing to fire on them or to charge them with their bayonets when ordered to do so by their officers. From Vienna comes the description of a solemn service that took place the other day in the ancient Cathedral of St. Stephen there, attended by all the members of the house of Hapsburg in the city at the time, and by over a thousand representatives of the greatest houses of the aristocracy, for the sole purpose of offering up prayers for the speedy restoration of peace.



Emperor William of Germany.

Germany's Confidence Gone.

All the confidence that prevailed in Germany in the ultimate victory of her cause and in the invincibility of her army has disappeared. The most cherished illusions of the people in this connection—illusions in which they have been reared from their earliest infancy—have been rudely shattered. They have reached, somewhat late in the day, the conclusion that any further struggle is hopeless, and that under the circumstances the only thing to be done is to secure an early peace, on the least onerous terms. They argue that a continuation of the struggle will merely entail still further and yet heavier sacrifices, and will have the effect of rendering more bitter the conditions imposed by the victorious Powers of the Entente—conditions not only territorial and political but also economic.

Germans never dreamt until quite recently that they would ever be called upon to pay war indemnities. On the contrary, they were convinced that they would receive fantastic sums in this connection from France, from Russia, and, above all, from Great Britain.

In fact, about twelve months ago Dr. Karl von Helfferich, the Kaiser's Minister of Finance, publicly admitted in the Reichstag at Berlin that he regarded the payment of these war indemnities to Germany as indispensable to the re-establishment of the financial balance of the national treasury. He even went so far as to intimate that without these indemnities Germany would be unable to meet her liabilities. Now, however, Germany is face to face with the prospect not only of receiving no indemnities from the hostile Powers, but even of being called upon herself to pay overwhelming indemnities.

A Crushing War Debt.

This spells national ruin. For the expenditure already incurred by the Imperial government in connection with the war is of such altogether phenomenal size that the revenues, even in the most prosperous years prior to the present conflict, would not be sufficient to meet the obligations. The war debt alone has already reached forty billions of marks, the interest on which amounts to two billion marks a year, with another billion marks per annum requisite for the sinking fund. When one considers that even in the years immediately preceding the war the financial condition of the Imperial Treasury was already a source of profound anxiety to the government, that the annual taxation had to be increased to an absolutely crushing amount, and that in 1913 the government was obliged to have recourse to the extraordinary measure of imposing a heavy and graduated special levy on all capital and property, some notion may be obtained of the economic crisis that faces the Kaiser and his government.

Moreover, since the State has mobilised all specie, all foreign, domestic, industrial and commercial securities, and even all feminine jewelry and silver plate, giving in return Treasury notes and paper money of the ship plaster order, and since most industries are at a standstill, every foreign market being closed thereto, there is nothing of any real value left among the people with which to pay the taxes.

Dr. von Helfferich had proclaimed, both in and out of the Reichstag, that he relied upon war indemnities from the Powers of the Entente to the tune of forty billions of dollars to enable him to balance his budget. Germans no longer entertain the slightest hopes of obtaining either forty billion dollars or even that amount in marks, but are confronted with the certainty of being required to pay almost equally huge indemnities in one form or another.

That means bankruptcy, repudiation of the domestic war debt of forty billion marks, if not of the entire internal national debt, economic chaos, and consequent revolution. There is no escape from this, and since the longer the war continues the worse the ultimate ruin will become, the German people and their allies are eager for an immediate cessation of hostilities.

War of Economics.

I have always held that the present international conflagration would in the last resort be determined by economic causes, rather than on the battlefield, and that since the economic resources of the Powers of the Entente were so immeasurably vaster than those of Germany she was destined to defeat. This view has appealed to some of the most eminent financiers in this country—men in a position to estimate the resources of the various belligerents. It has gradually forced itself upon the great captains of finance and of industry in Germany and Austria, and now upon the merchants and manufacturers of those countries. They are all anxious to suspend further hostilities and to obtain the best terms possible from the enemy, and if the Berlin government, in spite of all this, persists in continuing the struggle, we are likely to witness in the very near future a secession from the Central Power alliance, not only of Austria, Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria, but even of the southern States of the German Empire, each endeavoring to obtain an independent peace on the least onerous terms.

More Absolute Than Russia.

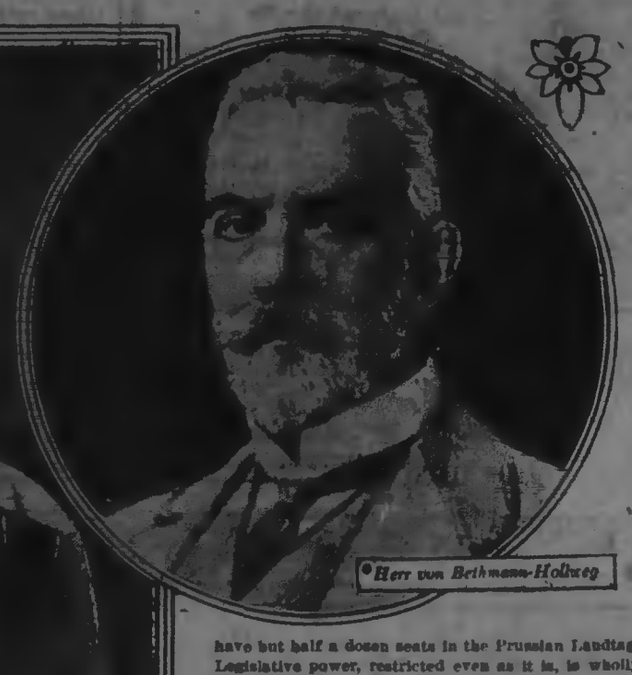
That would have the effect of leaving Prussia alone in the field, and as the Prussian people are by no means as one with their sovereign and with the Berlin government, and are thoroughly dissatisfied with the policies which have led to this war, and as the manner in which it has been conducted by the military party at Berlin, the nation would in its turn secede from its government and from its ruler, and substitute a republic for the Hohenzollern monarchy.

In no country of Europe have the people had so little voice in the government and no small and insignificant a representation in its councils as in Prussia. Even in Russia popular sentiment has exercised a greater weight and played a more important rôle; as, for instance, when in 1877 it compelled Tsar Alexander II. and his government to declare war upon Turkey for the purpose of rescuing the defeated Serbians from her clutches, at a time when neither the Muscovite War Department nor the Petrograd Treasury were in any way prepared for the conflict. In Prussia the masses of the people have no parliamentary representation whatever.

The socialists, who constitute far and away the most numerous party in the State, larger, indeed, than all the other political parties put together, have but half a dozen seats in the Prussian Landtag. Legislative power, restricted even as it is, is wholly in the hands of the old territorial aristocracy, imbued with feudal principles, of an altogether medieval brand. All the authority is lodged in the hands of the government, which prides itself on a sort of paternal despotism. As long as Prince Bismarck was Chancellor the dissatisfaction of the people with their lot was directed against the government, but in no sense against the Throne. But since the present Kaiser usurped all the powers and constitutional prerogatives of the Chancellorship, and of the Prussian Premiership, reducing the holders of these two offices to a mere passive and blindly obedient instrument of his wishes, the discontent of the people and their resentment has been aimed at the Crown, which has in this way been robbed of the hold that it formerly possessed upon the good will and loyalty of the masses.

Nowhere in Prussia—in fact, nowhere in Germany—is the Emperor the object of more profound resentment than in Berlin. The inhabitants of that city have ever since the Hohenzollerns were first promoted from mere Burgraves, first to Electors, and then to full sovereign rank, been always noted for their independence toward their rulers and for their liberalism of an advanced order.

The building of the Royal Schloss, that is to say, of the ancestral home of the Kaiser, in the metropolis was made the occasion of so many sanguinary emeutes that it has sometimes been asserted that every one of the stones of that unlovely pile is cemented to the other with Berlin blood. In 1848, after King Frederick William IV. had sought in vain to suppress a popular rising by the use of troops, he was compelled by the inhabitants of Berlin to stand bareheaded on the principal balcony of his palace while all the corpses of the insurgents who had been killed by his soldiers were borne past him on their way to the cemetery.



*Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg

The advent of the present Emperor to the throne was signalised by such bitter dissensions with the municipality and people of Berlin that he publicly threatened to transfer his official residence and the seat of his government to some other city, whereupon they caused it to be intimated to him that they would welcome any such move on his part.

Prejudiced Against Kaiser.

It is said that one of the reasons of their prejudice against the Kaiser, and, indeed, against many of his predecessors on the throne, has been that they saw their monarchs at too close range to have any illusions regarding them, and without that distance that usually lends enchantment to the view. At any rate, Emperor William has for the last twenty-five years been so convinced that sooner or later he would have to face a popular revolution at Berlin that he has reconstructed at an enormous cost the entire system of barracks in the metropolis, so as to facilitate the movement of the picked troops which, until the beginning of the war he always kept at Berlin, to deal with any rising.

He knows full well that a Berlin street mob is more formidable than the populace of any other European capital, and has organised all sorts of contrivances for his personal safety in view thereof, including subterranean passages from the opera and from the palace to the strongly defended arsenal, while a few miles out of the city, on an island of the Havel, he has built for himself a stronghold to which he and his family could retire in times of danger.

Kaiser Pushed by Military Party.

While personal acquaintance with the Kaiser since our respective early boyhoods, and continued until the eve of the present war, convinces me that the Kaiser in precipitating the present war was compelled to yield in the matter to the military party at Berlin, composed of men whom the late General Sir James Grierson, long British Military Attaché at Berlin, rightly described as "rank poison," the Germans, and especially the Prussians, even still more so the Berliners, ascribe to Emperor William the ruin by which they have been overtaken, all their economic disasters and, above all, the failure to achieve the promised victories in the present war. They have lost faith in him. All the glamour and prestige with which he had formerly managed to envelop himself have disappeared. He stands in their eyes as a failure and as the author of all their present troubles and of those still worse which they know are in store for them.

There are many old time popular prophecies, according to which he is destined to be the last ruler of his race, the last of the Hohenzollern Kings of Prussia. These predictions are now within measureable distance of their fulfilment. The autocracy of the Kaiser in Prussia has been tried and been found wanting. The despotism of the rulers of Prussia has had its day. The death knell of the feudalism of that Agrarian aristocracy from whom the military party and the governing classes in Prussia are mainly recruited has been sounded. The nationalisation of the Prussian land on a similar plan to that adopted by the French Revolution twelve decades ago is assured.

And it is scarcely probable that the Prussians, with their unhappy experience of the evils of monarchical despotism, such as that of the Hohenzollerns, will wish to replace William II. by another King or Emperor, least of all by his sorry son, the Crown Prince. They may be relied upon to inaugurate a republican form of government in which all classes of the people would have a share and a voice. They have before their eyes the example of Hamburg and of the other Free Cities of the Hanseatic League to show them that trade, industry and prosperity generally flourish much more freely and attain a far higher degree of development under a republican form of government than under a monarchical régime. Moreover, they have every reason to believe that Prussia as a republic, organised on much the same lines as that of Hamburg, would be able to obtain peace under far more favorable conditions from Great Britain and her allies than if she were to remain a Hohenzollern kingdom.

A SPIRIT'S FRIENDLY FAREWELL

Orville Pope and Jack Smith, two rolling stones on life's pathway, tumbled into a Western town, where they met and became neighbors. Friendship grew fast and firm between them.

Orville Pope had been a federal soldier in the civil war, was captured by the enemy and thrown into Andersonville prison, whence seven months later he was carried out on a stretcher to die. He eluded the grave, but had the "army cough," which the doctors unanimously declared eventually would kill him. Against the wishes of every one concerned he married. The couple had a little daughter. Orville Pope decided to get what he could out of life while it lasted for him. His pace was rapid.

Jack Smith was the unmarried son of a widowed mother, whom he supported. He was strong and robust. Occasionally he joined in Orville Pope's recreations.

A popular show came to town and admission to it was allowed only to the male population of the city.

The two friends decided to attend and started off in high feather. As the evening wore along the weather changed to a sudden blizzard that brought the whole city to a standstill. Unable to procure any conveyance, the two friends had to walk the long distance across town to their respective homes, where they arrived in the early morning, suffering from wet clothes and from the intense cold.

It was Orville Pope's last carousal. The next day the family physician was called in. He looked dubious. When Mrs. Pope blamed the previous night's exploit the doctor declared that the end, which was inevitable, had been hastened only a little.

In the meantime Jack Smith was not faring any better. As the direct result of the walk through the storm pneumonia had set in.

One morning a couple of weeks after the eventful blizzard Orville Pope, feverish and haggard, had fallen into a deep slumber. Suddenly he awoke, looked around and called to his wife:—

"Where is Jack?"

"He has not been here," she replied.

"Why, yes he has. He sat right on that chair by the bed and shook hands with me."

"He has not been in the house," she replied.

"Then Jack is dead. He came to say goodby!" exclaimed Orville Pope as he sank back exhausted.

Two minutes later a messenger came with the news that Jack Smith had expired about the time Orville Pope declared he had shaken hands with him.

Orville Pope's wife will never forget the incident.

Unlettered Hill Men.

It is only in our own generation that Albanians have begun to seek amid their tribal wars and local jealousies for a bond of union, and found it in their language. The unlettered hillman had, indeed, always preserved a fierce and contemptuous pride of race.

They despised the other races around them and bore toward the Turks a hatred tinged by arrogance. They possessed to the full the healthy chauvinism of every unsophisticated people which looks down on foreigners and prizes its own things.

But its own things were poor and few—some barbarous customs, a bloody tribal law, the legend of Scanderbeg and the more recent glories of Ali Pasha of Janniah.

There was nothing here to hold the allegiance of the superior young men who picked up letters in a Greek gymnasium or a Turkish official college and forthwith forgot their nationality in an alien uniform.

The new spirit came with the cult of the Albanian language, which has transformed the whole mental outlook of the race in the last twenty and more generally in the last ten years.

HEIGHT AND DEPTH OF INFINITE LOVE

Condescension of Our Great Creator.

God's Love for the World That of Benevolence, Compassion — Love Provided a Recovery for Man as Far-Reaching as the Curse—Ultimate Result of Christ's Sacrificial Death—Rule of the Iron Rod—Mercy Tempers All—Man's Only Hope—God's Love for the Church of Christ.

St. Louis, Mo., June 18.—Pastor Russell was here to-day, and discoursed upon the comprehensiveness of Divine Love. His subject commanded close attention and deep interest from a very appreciative audience. The text was, "God commendeth His Love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." (Romans 5:8.) He said:

It is a wonderful thought that our great Creator, infinite in power and majesty, before whom even the mightiest cherubim and seraphim bow in humble adoration, should condescend to pay any attention to creatures as small as we are, sinners by nature and encompassed with infirmities and imperfections. That He can love us and take an especial interest in us seems very wonderful indeed.

Our Lord Jesus Himself assures us that "God so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.) It is very certain that the love which God has for fallen men is not a love of congeniality, of fellowship, not a love for their character, but a love of pity, of benevolence, of compassion. In their condition of rebellion and alienation from their Maker there is little in the human race that is worthy of love. They are "children of disobedience," no longer recognized as sons.

But God has pity for mankind in their fallen condition, in which they were born; and He has provided for their recovery from the fall. As any one of noble, sympathetic heart would have a compassionate love for even a poor dog that was wounded and in need of care, so our God, in a much greater degree, sympathizes with fallen man, originally created in His own image and likeness, but now full of wounds and putrefying sores.—Isaiah 1:6.

This compassionate love of our Creator for mankind, who are unable to recover and to restore themselves, has caused Him to make a provision for their redemption, though the death of our Lord Jesus Christ. This arrangement provided not only that God's Son should die for mankind, but that He should afterward become the great King to uplift the world from their helpless, degraded condition, and bring them back to the perfection in which Adam was created.

Blessings of the "Iron Rod."

This work will all be accomplished in the Father's appointed time, when the Messianic Kingdom shall have been set up in the earth. Messiah is to take His great power and reign for a thousand years, for this very purpose. His will be a rule of the iron rod; that is, it will be an inflexible domination, one that will neither bend nor make compromise with sin. It will be a rule that all will be compelled to obey; for this kind of government will be absolutely necessary until rebellious man shall have learned the advantages and the desirableness of righteousness. Such a reign will be for the highest good of all. In their sinful, selfish condition men have had entirely too much liberty. Might and oppression have crushed the weak and helpless. Truly, "Man's inhumanity to man has made countless millions mourn." Such a hard and fast Law as Messiah will enforce will be needed.—Psalm 2:9; Revelation 2:26,27; 19:15.

But while the great King will rule with an iron rod, He will also be the world's merciful High Priest. All necessary allowance will be made for the inherited and cultivated weaknesses of all. Knowledge and enlightenment will be given to every one, and assistance up the Highway of Holiness then opened up to the world. (Isaiah 35:8.) As in the Jewish type the priests taught the people and brought blessings to them through the Atonement Day sacrifices, so the great High Priest, Christ Jesus, and the under priests, the faithful Church of Christ, will during the next Age bless and instruct the people, as the result of the sacrifices which have been offered for the world during this antitypical Atonement Day—the Gospel Age.

This great Royal Priesthood will be the future healers of the world. They will heal the diseases—mental, moral, and physical—of every one who will accept the gracious terms and provisions then offered. The death of our Lord Jesus as the Ransom-price for Adam and all who died in him was necessary in order that the death penalty, resting upon the human race might be lifted. The merit of Jesus' death, as the Purchase-price for all mankind, has thus far been available only for the Church of Christ; but the time is very near when this merit is to be paid fully into the hands of Justice for the sins of the whole world, the entire race of Adam.

Why the World's Blessing Delays.

This Purchase-price for the sins of the world has not been applied for the world as yet for two reasons: First, God purposed in His infinite Wisdom that mankind should have an object lesson through the permission of sorrow, pain, and death for six thousand years as the result of man's fall into sin, in order that they might learn thoroughly the nature and the effects of sin and see it in all its hideousness. Man's experience was also designed to be an object lesson to all the angels and to every intelligent creature of God throughout eternity.

Second, God purposed first to utilize the merit of Christ's sacrificial death for the class which are to be associated with our Lord Jesus in His great future work of the world's uplift and restoration. As soon as this class, called in Scripture the Church, the Body of Christ, the Bride of Christ, has been completed and glorified with their Lord and Head, has been exalted to reign with Him in the Messianic Kingdom, then the merit of Jesus will be applied for all of Adam's race and in the sealing of the New Covenant for Natural Israel and for all of mankind who will then become a part of Israel. Those who refuse to accept the terms of this Covenant, whether of Natural Israel by birth or of the Gentile world, shall suffer the Second Death—everlasting destruction.—Acts 3:23; 2 Peter 3:12.

Human Power Unavailing.

The six thousand years during which Sin and Death have reigned over the world are six great days of a thousand years each. During this period God has permitted sin, has not interfered with the reign of Sin and Death, save in so far as His great Plan might otherwise be hindered or thwarted. He wished mankind to have full opportunity to try every device, to use every means in their power, to extricate themselves from their fallen conditions, and thus to demonstrate what they could do.

Physicians have exhausted every means in striving to cure the world of their maladies of mind and body. Pills and plasters, remedies too countless to enumerate, have been unavailing. Every conceivable method has been resorted to in the endeavor to conquer disease and restore health. Skilful surgeons have vied with each other in their efforts to nullify, if possible, the effects of disease and accident. But all these can hardly keep pace with the new diseases that are manifesting themselves.

The moral condition of the race is deplorable. Organizations for human uplift and for the recovery of the criminal classes from vice and crime are finding themselves baffled at almost every turn. Sin is so deeply entrenched that the most earnest attempt to stem the [illegible] of a mighty river with a few cartloads of earth. Not long ago a noted preacher gave an address on the terrible plight in which the world finds itself to-day. He declared that immoral diseases are flourishing more than ever before, that the race is headed for destruction, and that unless something radical is done, the whole race will destroy itself in a short time. The array of facts which he presented seems all the more remarkable because this gentleman is an Evolutionist by profession, and Evolutionists claim that the race has always been rising toward perfection. Now this Evolutionist declares that man is fast hastening toward destruction.

As to the mentality of the race, we are informed that the average brain is weaker to-day than ever before, and that insanity is greatly on the increase. It is said that more money is being expended upon our insane asylums than upon both army and navy combined. So, despite of all the efforts of mankind to alleviate their distresses, these are the conditions prevailing after six thousand years. The lesson is obvious. Man is entirely unable to extricate himself from his fallen condition. Therefore the world must look to God for aid. Unless they do so, the entire race will be wiped out of existence in a few more centuries. Unless Divine help comes, the whole world will become insane.

During the six great days of man's great Work Week, humanity has labored hard and accomplished little. Now the great Seventh Day has come, during which man will rest from his own laborious efforts at self-uplift and salvation; for God will take all man's affairs into His own hands, in the person of His Son. Messiah, with His Bride, the Gospel Church, will then begin the great work of the restoration of the world. The Lord Jesus will set up His Millennial Kingdom. Everything will be turned over to Him, and all the world will be under His control. Mankind will have no voice in the administration of earth's affairs. The great King and His royal associates will regulate everything.

Under the Messianic Kingdom, punishment will be immediately administered for any attempt to do wrong, and reward for every good deed will be at once forthcoming. It is not so now. A person may steal now, and oftentimes not be found out. A man may be so shrewd as to get possession of the hard earnings of others by a form of legality which is none the less a fraud. People have stolen and defrauded, on a small scale or on a large scale, and have never been detected or brought to justice. But under the New Order it will be very different. All the hidden things shall be made manifest. Evil and evil-doers shall no longer prosper. But the righteous shall flourish; and the meek shall inherit the earth and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.—Psalm 37:7-11; 72:1-8.

The Bible tells us that when this Kingdom is set up, the ruling power will be on the spirit plane. This phase of the Kingdom will be composed of The Christ, Head and Body, who will all be glorified spirit beings. None but the saintly will compose that Kingdom class, that Heavenly Body of Christ. Under their Lord and Head, they will be the judges of the world. (1 Corinthians 6:2.) These are not judges while in the flesh, but are counselled to "judge nothing before the time." After their glorification they will be qualified to judge righteously, but not before.

God is now sifting this class by disciplinings, trials, testings, prunings, for their glorious future work, that they may be made ready for a share in the First Resurrection. This will bring a wonderful change to them. Sown in weakness, in dishonor, with blemished human bodies, they shall be raised in power, in glory, in honor, in glorious immortal bodies like their Saviour and King. They will then have such spiritual discernment as to be able to know the intentions of all mankind.—Revelation 20:6; 1 John 3: 1, 2.

Effect of the "Iron Rod."

Respecting that Day of Christ the Scriptures declare: "Nothing shall hurt or destroy in all My holy Mountain [Kingdom]"; "When the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." (Isaiah 11:9; 26:9.) Under such conditions people will soon learn to do right. Everybody will then wish to do a kindness to someone rather than to injure another. For a time there may

Was Troubled With BOILS

ALL OVER HIS BODY.

When the blood becomes impure the first symptoms manifesting themselves are a breaking out on some part of the body of various sorts of bad blood troubles, such as boils, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, etc.

How many times have you met a friend with a handkerchief tied around his neck, and have asked him; "What is the matter with you?" "Oh! I have a boil on the back of my neck; I guess I will have to take something for my blood."

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters, and the speediest and most thorough method of expelling all the unclean and corrupt matter from the blood is to use this old and well tried remedy that has been on the market for the past forty years.

Mr. W. R. Cockerill, Golden, B.C., writes: "I was troubled with boils all over my body, and my blood was very bad. I tried all kinds of medicines and salves, but got no relief. I had to quit work, as I could not stoop to do anything. My boss told me to use Burdock Blood Bitters, after I had told him I had tried nearly everything else. I got one bottle of B.B.B., and before I had finished it the boils were all gone. It is the best blood cleanser I have ever taken. I have told several others who were suffering with boils and they all say it is great medicine." I am forty-seven years of age, but I feel like sixteen since I got rid of the boils."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

H. L. REPORTER SEARCHES AND FINDS "TYPES"

Gets Many Opinions on the Clocks Ahead Movement

FOREMAN OF COMPOSING ROOM BITTER ADVOCATE, BUT THE MILKMAN LIFTS VOICE IN WAIL OF OBJECTION.

Rochester, June 16.—No more subtle reproof was ever devised than the one which the City Editor handed to the Habitually Late Reporter this morning:

"Go on out and find out what people think about the idea of moving the clock ahead an hour," he said innocently. "The Chamber of Commerce thinks it's a good idea. See what some of the various types of people think."

So in search of type, the H. L. Reporter went to the composing room, where he risked his life in approaching the only foreman who never forgot himself for one tiny moment, and allowed his ferocious scowl to slip.

"Set 'em ahead!" repeated the foreman. "Sure. Maybe then, I'd get some copy up here before noon. I say, set 'em ahead an hour, or two hours, or a dozen hours, if it'll help to make these petrified printers act alive before 11 o'clock in the morning."

At this point he had to stop and devour a particularly irritating linotyper, so that the H. L. Reporter decided the interview was over. Out in the street, he found the next "type."

"KING OF THE NEWSBOYS" TALKS.

"Sure, I'm in favor of it," indorsed Solly Schwartz, "The King of the Newsboys." "If people get up earlier the newspapers will respond to the demand. They will be getting out an extra every eight minutes, instead of ten, and give us more papers to sell. Put me down with the Chamber of Commerce."

Charles T. Chapin, while suspicious of the C. of C.'s motive, was inclined to favor the idea.

"I have a faint sort of suspicion that this is a hint that my ballplayers ought to be waked up before ball games, instead of after them," he said. "But maybe I'm wrong, and any way, I think it's a good idea. You see, we'd be playing at 5 o'clock when it really was only four o'clock, and two or three more people might be able to get out to the game. That would make at least seven we could depend on."

THE MILKMAN'S SONG.

The next man the H. L. Reporter encountered, however, was a milkman and the song was of a different key.

"I should say not," he exclaimed, emphatically. "What do you want me to do—get up before I go to bed? It's hard enough now when I have to be out and around about the time everybody else gets their beauty sleep. Leave the clocks alone, or else set 'em back, instead of forward. There is enough daylight, as it is."

Captain Thomas Martell, beyond doubt, would be considered a typical example of the clubman, man-about town type, and to him went the H. L. Reporter.

"Why, I don't know," demurred the redoubtable captain. "As I understand it the proposal would add another hour of daylight to the evening. That might be of some value in providing additional time for the more common or vulgar sort of amusement but of course we of the cabarets and restaurants have no need of it. The matter of an earlier or later rising hour is not important because no gentleman in an event would be seen on the street before the sun is directly overhead."

Joseph M. Quigley, Chief of Police, was entertaining a caller when the H. L. Reporter searched his office, on the rounds.

"I would not want to say, without consulting the mayor, just what I think," said the chief. "But my visitor here might have a word to say."

THE VISITOR'S OPINION.

The visitor—a well dressed, smooth-looking individual, who might have been a physician or a parson—broke into such a tirade against the plan that the mild mannered H. L. Reporter was amazed.

"I'll tell you what I think of the infernal idea!" he shouted. "It's an outrage! The Chamber of Commerce ought to be ashamed of itself! Why, it would practically take my livelihood away from me! Its confederates and unconstitutional! Shorten the hours of darkness, indeed! It's outrageous!"

He stormed out of the door and the H. L. Reporter turned to Chief Quigley, astonished.

"What's the matter with that guy?" he asked forcefully, if ungrammatically. "What does he do, that turning the clock back would deprive him of his livelihood?"

"Him?" replied the chief. "Why, he's a burglar—head of the burglar's union, in fact!"

Add a little boiling water to an omelet if you wish to keep it from being tough.

Cover the cook book with white table oil cloth, sewing it in place. It can be washed clean as often as it becomes smugy from handling with sticky fingers. The oil cloth also makes an excellent covering for school books.

Have a Good Complexion!

The Flower of Good Health

The true secret of complexion lies in the blood. Keep it rich, pure, nutritious, and, above all, keep the system regular. No aid to complexion compares with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They tone and enrich the blood, clear the system of waste products, promote good digestion, and, in short, establish sound health, which, after all, is the keynote to all happiness and well-being. For Your House, the Best Heating!

Canadian Winters make house heating an important problem. Seven months of cold weather and during five of them the thermometer does a jig around "zero." Nothing creates more misery than not being able to keep the house warm. There is only one satisfactory Heating System and that is Hot Water. A Hot Water Boiler works with the least consumption of fuel and gives the utmost general diffusion of heat. The steady inflow of hot water direct from the boiler keeps the heat constant. Hot Water Heating is not affected by drafts, winds or any of the erratic eccentricities of Hot Air Systems. You can keep every room in your house at 70 degrees with a King Hot Water Boiler and Radiators. Note the advantages which the King Boiler and King Radiators offer you—(1) Fuel Economy. (2) Quick Heating. (3) Easy Operating. If you want to know what it would cost you to install a complete Hot Water Heating System, ask your architect or your heating engineer, or write us and we will gladly give you the information you desire, without any obligation to you.

Free Book We have printed a handsomely illustrated booklet on the subject of Hot Water Heating, entitled "COMFORTABLE HOMES," which very simply explains the important features of this method of house heating and gives much valuable information. British Grumblings Please the Germans

"I CAN CONCEIVE OF NO BETTER ALLY FOR GERMANS," SAYS A FAMOUS AUTHOR.

(By Jerome K. Jerome, in Lloyd's Weekly News.)

Suppose the news reached us day by day and week by week that the Germans were chiefly occupied in quarrelling among themselves; that half the German press were busy proclaiming aloud that everything in Germany was rotten; that her rulers were traitors, and all her officials incompetent asses. Suppose we gathered from the German papers that the general staff was being held up to ridicule throughout Germany as an effete and useless collection of nincompoops. It started out to conquer France in three months, and then, turning east, defeat Russia before she had time to bring up her resources. The whole plan had miscarried. There would be no hope of victory till every unit of the general staff had been scrapped, and certain popular journalists and notoriety-mongers appointed in their stead. Suppose we heard that Hindenburg's statue in Berlin instead of being decorated with golden nails was being covered chiefly with mud. Why was he not already at Riga and Petrograd?

WHY HAD HE FAILED?

Suppose the German papers were filled with virulent attacks on Mackensen. Why had he failed to settle the Turkish business? Why was Russia at Erzerum and Ispahan? Was this the way to make "Germany supreme from Berlin to Bagdad?" The Serbian army reforming, Greece wavering, Rumania making ready to join the Allies. All this the consequence of Mackensen's miserable miscalculations. Down with Field Marshal Mackensen! Suppose we heard in the German papers furious attacks upon the German Foreign Office. Its contemptible diplomacy—Italy driven into the enemy's arms, America antagonised. Suppose we heard of German politicians denouncing each day the German Board of Admiralty. Where was that much-talked-of blockade of Britain? Why were German submarines allowed to be caught by British nets? Why had not the German navy dug out the British fleet and sunk it? Suppose we read of public meetings called to express the anger and contempt of the German people at the shameful inadequacy of the German air fleet service. Why had not London been destroyed? Why this absurd sentimentalism that refrained from wiping Britain out of the sea?

THE ARMY MUST WAIT.

It could be done so easily. All that was wanted was a hundred thousand Zeppelins with suitable equipment. Why had they not been provided? Why were enemy aeroplanes allowed to drop bombs in Freiburg? Kill good German citizens in Karlsruhe? Suppose we read of public men in Germany maintaining that nothing else should be considered of importance but the safety of the citizens of Freiburg and Karlsruhe. The men in the trenches must wait. A million of them have died. What does that matter? That is what they are there for. These bombs are killing the comfortable stay-at-homes. Why, even a journalist may be injured! The army! The army is not writing letters to the papers. The needs of the army are of secondary importance. Krupp must devote himself to providing protection for the citizens of Freiburg and Karlsruhe.

Suppose that half the German papers were filled with bitter articles sneering at their own statesmen, insinuating that they were only clinging to their places for the sake of their salaries. Suppose in popular German papers we read veiled hints that the true reason for the German failure at Verdun might be looked for in the fact that the German Crown Prince's grandmother was an Englishwoman. Suppose, in short, it was evident to all the world that Germany was a seething mass of discontent, of angry recrimination and divided councils.

WOULD CHEER US UP.

Wouldn't it buck us up? Should we not say to ourselves—whatever might be happening at the fighting front—"Never mind. We have only to hold on, and our enemy will go to pieces by the mere process of internal disruption. He has not the will to conquer. He is not man enough to shut his mouth and grit his teeth when things are going wrong. He does not understand war. He has no patience. He has no power of science. The Germans are no longer a united people. Listen to them, screaming, cursing, quarrelling among themselves. We have only to stand firm and they will destroy themselves by their own disunity."

Cannot we imagine how it would strengthen the determination of everyone of Germany's enemies: how it would dishearten Germany's allies?

We are doing precisely this very thing. Our Times, and our Daily Mail, and our Evening News, our Morning Post and all the rest of them, are read with delight in every cafe of Vienna and Berlin. Reports of our public meetings, of our elections, are devoured by our grinning enemies in every city in Central Europe. The German government are using a section of our press to silence any doubts the German people may be harbouring concerning the final result of the war. And I conceive of no better ally that they could have secured.

Rids Poisons From the Blood Clears Up the Complexion

Sallow Skin, Pimples, Pains and Aches Are Soon Gone When Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Are Used

The doctor feels your pulse and looks at your tongue, but at the same time he is reading your condition in your face. The sallow complexion tells him that your liver is not doing its work, the pimples tell him that the kidneys are not properly purifying the blood, he realizes that the bowels are constipated and the system overloaded with poisons.

You can apply this test in your own case and may be able to add other symptoms, such as headaches, pains and aches through back and limbs, spells of biliousness and indigestion.

If you have not used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you will be surprised to find how quickly they will rid your system of poisonous impurities and thereby remove the cause of pains, aches and skin troubles.

Mrs. F. N. Hall, 103 Queen street, St. John, N.B., writes: "I am glad to say I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with splendid results. I was greatly troubled with constipation and pimples on the face. I tried other remedies and used liquid arsenic three times a day for a year to get rid of the pimples but received no benefit. I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and it was not very long before I was completely cured. The pills acted on the bowels, kidneys and liver and cleansed them of all impure matter. I think they cannot be beaten as a means of ridding a person of that tired aching due to weak kidneys, and I would not be without them in the house for any money."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

CHILDREN'S SAILOR BLOUSE DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This will be the sweetest kind of a dress for summer, Git for wear on any occasion, serge or Bedford cord, if made up in deep white linen or pique and with collar and sleeve cuffs, that may have braid for trimming if you like. To distinguish it from the ordinary sailor blouse this one has a deep and fancy drop yoke from which the sleeves take their part. The box plaited skirt is joined to an underwaist that fastens at back with buttons and which at front is faced with contrasting goods that forms the collar so that it may better serve as a shield. The blouse is cut extremely low; how cool and graceful is it that where it joins the skirt it almost drops. Of course there are eyelets for lacing and a ribbon or of silk to complete the model.

The pattern is cut in sizes 6, 8 and 8 years. To make in size 6 will require 2¾ yards of 36 inch material for the dress, with ¼ yard contrasting goods 27 inches wide and ¼ yard material for the collar-vest in 36 inch width.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough. Price 10 cents, or 3 for 25 cents.

CONINGSBY DAWSON, AUTHOR, RELATES HIS EXPERIENCES

from the infantry. And to get into the Royal School of Artillery you are supposed to need a tremendous pull.

"Now; all the introduction that I had was that the Wheeler Syndicate wanted to send me to the front as a war correspondent—as the Canadian war correspondent. And I thought that the best way of getting there was as an artillery officer. But I found that the different people I went to see were not in the least impressed by my literary reputation and my position as war correspondent. They saw that I was a civilian, and saw nothing to make them believe that I would be desirable as an artillery officer.

APPLIED TO SIR SAM.

"Finally, after learning the important lesson of my own unimportance which was the result of going through department after department and getting snubbed every time, I decided to make a final attempt, and to go to the very top to do it. So I went to the Kitchener of Canada — General Sir Sam Hughes. Now, Sir Sam is a man who either likes you or dislikes you at once. He seemed to like me. He shook hands with me and told me to sit down as soon as I came into his office. The other men had kept me standing while they went on writing.

"I told Sir Sam about the Wheeler Syndicate affair, and he said that that wouldn't count for much. 'But,' he said, 'I'll give you your chance. I'll send you to the Royal School of Artillery.'

I soon found what the Royal School of Artillery meant. It meant not only a mental test, but the severest of physical and moral tests. In fact, for me the horrors of war had started the moment I landed in Kingston It meant getting up at 5 o'clock on a dark, cold Winter morning and being on parade in the snow at 6. The penalty for failing to be on parade was a fourteen miles' stiff trip bareback, from which a man usually returned with the feeling that every bone in his body was broken. With the fear of God and Ringwood upon me that morning, I bought an alarm clock.

WORK IS ARDUOUS.

"As I said, the students at the Royal School of Artillery must do a year's work in eight weeks. I took my honrs degree at Oxford, but I never really knew what hard work meant till I went to the school. You see, artillery officers must know all about gunnery, the laying of guns obtaining the lines of fire, and all that sort of thing. They must know how to hit things that they can't see—so gunnery is trigonometry straight through. Then there is a great deal of mechanics to learn. I had never heard of range gears and jamming pates, but I had to learn all about them and to know how to take a gun apart and put it together again. I had to know all about ammunition propellants, detonators, the weights and the effects of different charges: and all this is chemistry. And there was a great deal of practical surveying; we had to learn how to use the director, which is like a surveyor's transit, but much more delicate—used in sending down angles from the observation station to the battery to lay the guns on unseen targets.

"Then there is map-reading—one of the most essential things at the front. They set all the ranges by means of maps. They give you a map and say, 'Take up your position here and aim at target so-and-so'—and you must recognize your position by the map.

"Then there is map-reading—one of veterinary surgery, and all the things that are understood by the term horse management. There were foot drill, riding drill, and, of course battery drill—for some of these men go out from the school to become battery commanders, the leaders of 150 men.

"Imagine this situation!" said Lt. Dawson. "Naturally, the instructors have to use a certain amount of violence in cramming all this information into the heads of a lot of dubs! And we were such terrible dubs! When we first were lined up we had to number off twenty-eight times before we got it right!!

THE MILITARY SPIRIT.

"Before I'd been at the school very long I got an entirely new impression of the spirit of military life. I found that all my wordly cares had suddenly ceased to matter to anybody, least of all to myself—I was not important as an individual, but as a part of a group. This losing of the exaggerated sense of individuality which is characteristic of modern society makes military life very much like what I suppose monastic life to be.

"There is a story which seems to me to illustrate vividly the spirit of war. An officer of my acquaintance was leading his guns around Dead Man's Corner at Ypres when he saw a young soldier riding ahead of him topple from his horse, with his chest ripped open by shrapnel. The rule of warfare is to ride ahead and not delay the advance by caring for the hopelessly wounded. But my friend dismounted and lifted the wounded boy. Before the boy died he gasped, 'Well, thank God, at last I've done something for somebody besides myself!'

"That story has in it the whole military spirit. The soldier is doing something for somebody besides himself—he has lost his selfishness.

FEARLESS UNDER FIRE.

"As I said, the stories about the ferocity of Captain Ringwood and the other instructors were absurdly exaggerated. The slackers and weaklings hate Captain Ringwood. But the men whom he has trained worship him. The training school for officers can't be conducted by drawing-room methods, you know. The purpose of training is to teach a soldier to be fearless under fire, to bear fatigue cheerfully, and to know that to surrender while any force to resist remains in him is disgraceful. That's where Captain Ringwood comes in—that's what he drives into the minds and hearts and souls of his men. The Germans define discipline as the art of making troops fear their officers more than they fear the enemy. I rather think that this is Captain Ringwood's idea, too.

"At the Royal School of Artillery the men are taken out for fourteen-mile rides. For the first few miles their legs ache, then they smart, then they feel as if they had cramps. They come back with the blood running down the inside of their legs and into their shoes. A man will fall off his horse and lie on his back in the road, looking up at his horse's belly and hoping he won't get a hoof in his face. Captain Ringwood will call out to him as he gallops by, 'Who the devil told you to dismount?' And the man will have to clamber back on his horse and ride on."

MAJOR LEWIS, M.P.

"There were some Boer war veterans in the class," said Lieutenant Dawson, "and some veterans of the Indian service. There were a number of architects—one of them, a man of 40, whose work had brought him fame and fortune. There were several Americans in the class. One of them, Lieutenant Friar, was a caricaturist, who used to lighten our labours by drawing pictures of the instructors and students. The oldest man in the class was Major Lewis, the Conservative M. P. for Guelph. He is the man who introduced the Daylight bill. He enlisted as 58 years old, but he was really 61. He recruited four batteries and then enlisted, thus shaming young Canada. He got up at 5 every morning, never missed parade, never shirked. He had never seen military life before."

Lieutenant Dawson had told me of the effect which military training and a realization of the actuality of war had had upon him. I asked him what effect he thought it would have upon all the writers and readers of fiction

NEW WOMEN WILL MAKE US PRACTICE CHIVALRY.

"We are going back," he said, "to the 'age of chivalry'—or forward to it. In the old days of chivalry, I think that chivalry usually was something that men talked about but did not practice. Now we are going to practice it. The women are going to make us practice chivalry, and they are going to demand chivalry in literature.

"Women are the great readers. By this war they have been taught to appreciate the soldier—in the countries at war women will not be seen in public with a man who is not in uniform. They have learned to appreciate heroism in real life; after the war they will demand heroism in the imaginative world which they enter by means of books.

"It is quite fair to say that if one looks over such books as Somerset Maugham's 'Of Human Bondage' and H. G. Wells' 'Research Magnificent' he cannot escape the impression that the whole tendency of modern fiction has been to express fear—the fear of life and the fear of love. 'The Research Magnificent' expresses the fear of fear, which to my mind is the most terrible of all. This war teaches all who take part in it that fear is a despicable thing—that it is a morbid thing, no more a part of a sane man's normal equipment than is paralysis. After this war we shall find in literature a sane moral and physical courage never expressed before.

WHAT THE WAR'S EFFECTS WILL BE.

"In Gothic literature there is courage, but it is always the courage of physical strength. The French people have taught us that courage of physical strength is inferior to the courage of moral purpose. Before the war we were lacking in convictions, we had no landmarks to guide us. We had good impulses, but no standards; we had thrown them over as we gained our new breadth of thought. Military training inevitably teaches us the value of standards, the value of discipline, the value of tradition. This war is teaching us that it is not the petty affairs of the individual that matter, but the great religious welfare of the race.

"I might express my meaning by saying that to be taken seriously after the war every book must express a strong moral conviction. Captain Ringwood says that he is trying to put guts in his men. I think that the war is putting guts into literature."

The Lassitude of Spring is another name for a lazy liver—a liver that is weary of the work of eliminating all the accumulated poisons of a heavy Winter diet. Health and strength in the Spring come from a return to simple, nutritious, easily digested foods. The food that puts you on your feet and brings bounding buoyancy to the jaded muscles and worn-out nerves is Shredded Wheat Biscuit—a whole wheat food that builds new tissue and keeps the bowels healthy and active. Eat it with berries, or other fresh fruits for a few days and see how much better you feel.

THE RUSSIAN TROOPS ARE PUSHING AHEAD

THE GERMAN ATTACKS AT VERDUN FAIL

A GENERAL RETREAT OF TEUTONS ANTICIPATED ON EAST FRONT

Russians Pressing Forward on Kovel and Lemberg---Russian Cavalry Already far Past Czernowitz Engaged in Flanking Attacks on Retreating Austrians---German Attacks on Verdun Front are Repulsed.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, June 19.—With Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, in their hands, and some of the cavalry units already far past it to the north in flanking attacks on the retreating Austrians, the fury of the Russian attacks is in the region of Brody, opposite Lemberg, according to despatches from Petrograd. If the drive in this region is successful the Russian line from the Lutsk region to Roumanian border will be straightened out. A heavier resistance than that of Czernowitz is expected here, as the line can be readily reinforced by means of the railroad from Lemberg. Furious fighting continues in the Kovel region with the Russians slowly, but steadily advancing, despite the most stubborn resistance of the combined German and Austrian troops. With Kovel and Lemberg taken, the military critics predict a general retreat of the east front forces of the Central Powers.

German Attacks Gained No Ground

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official), June 19.—Violent German infantry attacks against the French positions north of Hill 321 on the Verdun front were repulsed, according to the official statement of the War Office to-day. On the west bank of the Meuse the Germans shelled the southern slopes of Dead Man's Hill heavily. A German attack in the region of Chattancourt was repulsed by French curtain fire, and efficacious counter preparations with infantry.

Two squadrons of French airmen bombarded Vouziers Barracks Station, dropping sixty-one big calibre shells with good effect.

Berlin Admits The Success of Russians

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 19.—Official Berlin statement to-day admits that Russians in their offensive opposite German lines on the eastern front are making progress. The statement to-day declared that the German General Linsingen's forces defending the line near Kovel have only "partly repulsed" Russian attacks.

Big Events Expected in Theatres of War

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 18.—Partly as a result of the activities on the various war fronts this week a widespread belief exists that the next fortnight may prove the most important thus far in the war.

The continued strictness of the Entente Allies' blockade against Greek ports is engendering a growing feeling of uneasiness in Government circles. Rumours are rife that the Entente's ultimatum, which is expected to be delivered Monday, may present as an alternative to compliance with its demands, the rupture of diplomatic relations between the entente allies and Greece. It is not thought that the Greek Cabinet can long stand the pressure. The lack of breadstuffs on the outer islands of Greece and in the not readily accessible parts of the kingdom is already causing disturbances, although the Government insists that the available wheat supply at Piraeus is sufficient for more than a month.

German Losses In Ypres Fight Heavy

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 18.—Soldiers returning to Courtrai from the front on Wednesday said the Canadians fought like demons until they recovered the trenches lost the previous week, writes a correspondent of the Amsterdam Telegraaf, who adds: "German losses were heavy during the British bombardment preliminary to the recovery of the ground. The correspondent saw people from Courtrai, who described scenes there after the German defeat. Train after train and a long succession of motor ambulances brought the wounded back in Rue de Lille, and on the market places cars stood dripping with blood. Inhabitants of Courtrai rejoiced at the German setback, as on the previous Saturday they were angrily forbidden to cheer when 200 Canadian prisoners were marched in through the Porte de Menin.

"After being given food in the big schoolroom the prisoners were taken to Ghent. Cheered occasionally when Belgian women caught sight of the men, not even the brutal punishment of the Huns could prevent them from cheering. On Monday 57 more Canadians came through, but neither party had any officers and no general was seen."

Troops To Gather At Borden Camp

Special to The Examiner:

NIAGARA CAMP, June 19.—General Logie announced to-day that the instructions have been received from the Militia Department for troops to proceed to Camp Borden. Only three battalions will be left at Niagara. The 123rd and 169th, Toronto units, and the 120th, Hamilton, in all 3,500, but more will be sent here from mobilization centres later.

The Engineers, Army Service Corps, and the Ordnance Details will leave Niagara for Camp Borden on Friday of this week, and advance parties of the battalions will leave for Camp Borden two or three days later. The troops will all follow by the end of the month. By the first of July it is expected that all the forty thousand troops will be at Camp Borden under canvas. General Logie and staff will be at Camp Borden headquarters by the first of July.

MEXICO IS CALM

Examiner Special:

JUAREZ, Mexico, June 19.— Gen. Fracisco Serano, arrived here to-day to take command of all Carranza troops in Northern Mexico in event of awr with the United States.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—Reports from all States indicate a rapid mobilization of the National Guard Militia, in response to President Wilson's call for full United States' military force for Mexican border service.

Railroads also report being able to move troops to the border as soon as ready.

Secretary of War Baker is preparing to rush through Congress a measure to give the President power to use National Guards for service outside the United States.

Mexico is taking the situation calmly. The South American republics, however, show signs of nervousness at the President's action.

The County Council Assembles To-morrow

The regular June session of the County Council will be held this week opening to-morrow afternoon. For the most part, the business on the slate is of a routine nature. The County Roads system will be discussed, and Ald. Dobbin proposed to present a statement of the number of women from the city and county who are on the Patriotic Fund, probably as an introduction to a request for an increased grant. He stated today that all the money promised would be needed this year, and probably that might not be entirely sufficient.

T.A.S. Received Holy Communion in a Body

The members of St. Peter's T.A.S. received holy communion in a body on Sunday morning, it being one of the four regular occasions during the year for this event. Bishop O'Brien celebrated the mass and afterwards made a brief address to the men, encouraging them to remain faithful to their pledges of total abstinence. A meeting of the society is being held on Wednesday night to push forward the arrangement for the annual picnic which it is expected will be as successful as ever.

93rd BATTALION WILL GO OVERSEAS WITHIN A MONTH

Peterboro Battalion and the 109th of Lindsay Are Considered Most Fit in Camp and Will Go Across in Short Time---Six Battalions Stated to Leave for Valcartier at Once But 93rd May Remain at Barriefield Until They Go Overseas.

Special to The Examiner:

BARRIEFIELD WAR CAMP, June 19.—Orders have been received at camp headquarters to move the 93rd Peterborough, 109th Lindsay, 130th Perth, 136th Port Hope, 139th Cobourg, and 146th Kingston, to Valcartier Camp. The moving of troops will begin about the 20th of June, one battalion being moved per diem until the six battalions have left Barriefield. Within one month it has been decided to send the 93rd Peterborough and the 109th Lindsay direct overseas. These battalions are considered the most fit in camp, and among the best troops in Canada, and are ready for overseas service. In view of the early embarkation of the 93rd and 109th it is being urged that these battalions be kept at Barriefield Camp until they leave for overseas. To send these battalions to Valcartier now, and in thirty days move them again overseas, would mean three moves for these battalions in one month. It looks here as though the 93rd and 109th will remain until the middle of July, and then go direct to England.

Among the 93rd non-coms. home from Barriefield over the week-end were Q. M. S. Matchett, Sergt. Rose, Corp. Norman Hartshorn, Lance-Corp. J. Simmons, machine gun section, and Sergt. J. H. Watson.

About ten days ago a young man joined the 93rd Battalion here, was sworn in and attested and notified to be ready to go Barriefield with a draft of recruits, last Tuesday. When Tuesday arrived he and his pal were both missing. This morning, however, the young man first mentioned, was seen on the street in uniform and promptly arrested as a deserter from the 93rd. This afternoon he was sent down to Barriefield, where his case will be dealt with. Since leaving here last week he had sworn in as a member of the 235th Battalion, Bowmanville. The recruiting methods adopted by this unit locally are very dubious and have been reported to headquarters. The young man arrested to-day informed the military police that representatives of the 235th had got him under the influence of liquor, and then took him to Bowmanville, although they must have been aware of the fact that he had already been sworn as a member of the 93rd. It is stated that a number of men under the influence of liquor have been persuaded to join the new unit.

Mr. A. H. Stratton has to-day received letters from his two sons overseas, Lieut. J. Rex Stratton, with the Royal Engineers, and Lieut. W. W. Stratton, with the Canadian forces. Both came through the hard fighting at the first of the month safely and expect to get a furlough in London before long.

A card has been received from Sergt. C. H. Hastings, formerly of The Examiner reportorial staff. Sergt. Hastings is enjoying a few days' leave, after several months spent in France, as a member of the staff of Sir Max Aiken, official "eye-witness," with the Canadian forces.

Half a battalion was recruited through the district in the last two weeks, 535 men being taken out of civil life and put into khaki. This is a splendid showing, considering the fact that the home influence of a battalion training in the country has been lost by bringing the soldiers to Barriefield. The Engineers Training Depot has proved the greatest drawing card in the period just closed. In that half a month 123 men were taken on the strength. The battalions which are at Barriefield and their strengths are as follows:

93rd—11 recruits; 982 strength.
109th—4 recruits; 999 strength.
130th—2 recruits; 990 strength.
136th—3 recruits; 791 strength.
139th—2 recruits; 948 strength.
146th—6 recruits; 991 strength.
154th—8 recruits; 1,113 strength.
165th—6 recruits; 1,166 strength.
156th—20 recruits; 1,077 strength.

A member of the Examiner staff has received the following note from Pte. J. Landry a Peterborough boy with the 92nd Highlanders.

Liverpool, June 2

I arrived here Tuesday morning, May 30th and was sick on my way over with a severe cold and am now resting in hospital for a while and then I will join my company in France somewhere I expect. Everything over here is in the best of condition and more of the Canadian boys should brave up and get over.—Pte. J. Landry.

Pte. Palmer L. Wiley, signal section 93rd Battalion, returned to Barriefield camp this morning after a three days' leave with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Wiley, 196 London street.

Lieut. J. A. New of the 139th Battalion, will arrive in the city to-night for a few days' leave.

Kingston Whig—It has long been known that the Canadian soldiers are most consistent letter writers, and spend most of their spare time telling the news of the day to their friends at home. This peculiar trait is felt in the immense work that the branch of the Canadian Postal Corps at Barriefield Camp is called upon to do. Under the able direction of Lieut. Crechitere, who is assisted by four clerks, the system is working splendidly in spite of the fact that over

AUSTRIAN ARMY IS CUT IN THREE

Russian Supply of Ammunition Appears to be Inexhaustible While Huge Reinforcements are Appearing at the Front.

TO DESTROY AUSTRIANS

LONDON, June 18.—The Russian offensive has been renewed after a temporary pause, with increased fury. An incessant rain of shells is falling even thicker than in the earlier days of the offensive, on the Austrian trenches, and the Russian ammunition supply appears to be inexhaustible. Heavy guns have been brought up, the despatches from the front say, and huge Russian reinforcements have appeared near Torchin, west of Lutsk, in the Stokhod-Styr district, and near Horodenka, between the Dneister and the Pruth.

TO DESTROY THE ARMIES.

The breaches made by the Russians on the south-western front, spreading fan-shape from 30 to 40 miles in the rear of the Austrian line, have now effectively separated the three main Austrian army groups operating between the Pripet and Bukowina. The continued retreat of the more advanced portions of the Austrian troops is occasioned, therefore, more from strategic reasons than because of actual pressure applied by the Russians.

The primary object of General Brussiloff's campaign is not the territory of lost territory, and, although it is quite conceivable that Lemberg may be caught in the encircling movement developing from the flank attacks at Lutsk and Czernowitz, the chief aim of the Russian advance is obviously to destroy—or, at least, cripple—the Austrian army.

The tremendous number of prisoners taken by the Russians up to yesterday roughly estimated at 150,000, with additional losses in killed and wounded of 150,000 attests to the success of the Russians in accomplishing this aim.

Military commentators contrast the effect of the present Russian advance with that of the German advance last Summer, which yielded much larger gains in territory, without, however, in any sense destroying the integrity of the Russian armies.

Russian troops have occupied the town of Radziviloff, on the railway 60 miles north-east of Lemberg, according to the official statement issued to-day by the Russian army headquarters.

THE NET RESULT.

The net strategical result of the fortnight's fighting is that the Russians hold practically a straight line between Lutsk, Buczacz and Czernowitz. The military critics point out that the capture of Radziviloff, and the driving of the enemy forces on Brody, and in all likelihood, further in the direction of Lemberg, will almost inevitably compel the withdrawal of the Austrian centre from the Tarnopol region.

"The Russians advancing across the Volhynian-Galician frontier are, according to the latest despatches, less than sixty miles from Lemberg. The fact that Russian cavalry has been able to occupy Radziviloff shows Austrian recognition of the futility of endeavoring seriously to oppose the Russian passage of the frontier.

"The recapture of the Pochaiev Monastery causes much rejoicing among orthodox Russians.

PTE. THOS. V. DYER, a Peterborough member of the 39th Battalion, who is officially reported wounded.

PETERBORO'S ROLL OF HONOUR IS GROWING STEADILY

Two More Names on the List To-day—Pte. Thomas V. Dyer of the 39th and Pte. Fred A. Dainton Mounted Rifles Both Wounded.

THIRTY EIGHT THIS MONTH

The names of two more Peterborough boys appear on to-day's official casualty list, making a total of thirty-eight reported this month. Since June 1st there have been three Peterborough soldiers reported killed in action, five missing, one died of wounds, twenty-eight wounded and one dangerously ill. The Mounted Rifles were the biggest sufferers in this list, with sixteen local casualties.

On to-day's list is the name of No. 412191 Pte. Thos. V. Dyer, who left Peterborough over a year ago with the 39th Battalion. Pte. Dyer was born in England, but had lived for a number of years in and around Peterborough, being employed for some time around Indian River. While in Peterborough he resided at 343 McDonnel street. He enlisted with the 57th Regiment's quota in the 39th Battalion and after training in England was transferred with eleven other Peterborough boys to the 25th Nova Scotia Battalion. He has been at the front for a long period. Of the twelve local boys with the battalion, one has been killed and four others wounded.

The honour roll of "B" squadron, 5th C.M.R. is growing steadily. The latest addition to the list is No. 113116 Pte. Frederick A. Dainton, Pte. Dainton enlisted here last summer with B squadron and joined the Mounted Rifles at Barriefield camp just before the 8th went overseas. He had resided in Peterborough for a number of years and is well known here.

The many friends of Lt.-Col. E. B. Edwards, K.C., former city solicitor of Peterborough, and also former commanding officer of the 57th Regiment will regret to learn that his son, Ronald has been seriously wounded in the fighting on the western front.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

In police court this morning a charge against the Grand Trunk Railway of creating a disturbance through the excessive use of the whistle, was dismissed by Acting Magistrate Robb. The defence contended that one of their engines broke down and it was necessary to bring another engine on the scene to facilitate repairs. This was given as the cause of more than the usual amount of whistling. The alleged disturbance occurred on Sunday, June 11th.

NO CARS AFTER ALL.

London, Ont., June 19 — London citizens were denied Sunday cars again yesterday. An arrangement between the company and the Board of Control was made Friday, but the Council on Saturday failed to put the agreement into effect.

WHERE IS THE "VICTORY?"

Has anybody noticed any external evidence of the German victory, which the Kaiser placarded the German Empire with, a victory that was claimed to have won supremacy of the seas for Germany. The German battle fleet is still in the marine hospital at Wilhelmshire, undergoing repairs. Not a German ship war or merchant, is on the sea. German ships are still rotting—interned in neutral ports. Even the submarines have not been doing much business of late. The German "victory" must have been recorded upon some "scrap of paper" and got lost. German lying is beginning to get monotonous and if it is still swallowed by Germans at home it makes neutrals laugh. Kaiser "Bill" will find it difficult to explain to his much-fooled people why British consols have risen from 67½ to 61¼ since the great naval "victory" that made him "Admiral of the Atlantic." The "day" is fast coming when even the German people will see the truth through the mist of lies the Kaiser and his aides have spread over his unhappy empire.

CANADA AND SHIPPING.

The keynote of the address of Mr. E. F. Hebden, general manager, at the annual meeting of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, was preparation for the future in Canada—after the war. He said: "It is surely the part of sanity to visualize our problems in advance." We had at one time as an excuse for doing nothing in Canada, some time ago, a great deal of talk about "emergency." If the Government believed in an emergency then, they will not need much credulity to believe in an emergency now in our national development. The problem of providing for the profitable employment of the labour that will be released when our soldiers return from the war, is a bigger and more difficult problem than was the problem of providing a Canadian army for the field. We shall, of course, have to find employment for the capital and machinery for making munitions that the close of the war will release, either for active employment or idleness, and loss and waste. Mr. Hebden suggested that the establishment of a shipbuilding industry would afford a solution, of part of the problem of what to do with our munitions capital plant machinery and labour. In this, the Monetary Times, a competent authority, agrees with him, and not only the Times, but influential and informed high authorities such as Boards of Trade, etc., all over the Dominion. Shipping is the "emergency" now. Canada must, if she is to give herself fair play, be qualified to help capture the trade, import and export, that will invite commercial enterprise when the war ends. We have abundance of internal transportation facilities, but they end at the sea, and we need something to reach beyond the seas. That is shipping, and it will be a scarcity the world over. If Canada should show as much energy and enterprise, and achieve as much success in waging the commercial war that confronts her, as she has done in waging and helping win destructive war, she could with proper and aggressive trading, accomplish it. gressive leading, accomplish it.

THE BOY.

The terrible war through which we are passing brings great struggle and sacrifice; but with all this, it is certainly attended with compensation, especially if it arouses a new spirit of enterprise and stimulates to thoughtful action in the direction of teaching new lessons of endeavour to reacde as much as possible from the wreckage of manhood and means the war involves. The war sets for us new national problems to which the individuals of the nation must join to provide solutions. By doing this we shall develop a new spirit of effort, and ingenuity of enterprise.

One element of our national assets of accomplishment and strengthening of citizenship quality, is suggested in an article in the Monetary Times, on "The Boy"; as follows:

In the discussions of the indust'rial and commercial war to come after the Great War, we hear little of the value of the boys. The spoils of the economic war will go to those countries best equipped with health and physique, common sense, good morals, energy, ability, and education. "Our energies," says Baden Powell, "should be concentrated on training the rising generation to the fullest possible extent in individual character, technical efficiency, physical health. With this foundation they will make efficient citizens and equally, of need be, the most efficient soldiers."

The Boy Scout movement is performing that service in a remarkably efficient way. The boy scout is taught to be a healthy man, a gentlemen, and when right needs the assistance of might, the muscle is available, too. here is a need for all those young men, middle-aged, elderly and old men who are unable, for one good reason or another, to don his Majesty's uniform, to come forward with funds to help finance the movement, or by their mental, moral and personal support to prepare the boy today for the financial and commercial war to come. The Boy Scout movement, at whose head in this country is the governor-general, needs funds, it needs scoutmasters and it needs other active, willing supporters.

We need, to do the best with, and for, the boy, and resultantly, for the nation, to begin with moulding the character of the boy—by effectively instilling the practice of the virtues of politeness, courtesy, reverence for sacred things, and respect for elders and superiors. A boy to possess all these must have a foundation character of the right moral quality; must have an educated sense of his responsibilities and of his relations to his fellow men, which can alone form a basis for good citizenship, which will, in turn, imply possession of a high sense of his proper relations to society and to the state; and behind all this will necessarily be a sense of the true relations which should exist between the true and real man, the good citizen, and his Creator.

We, and the best part of the world, are fighting for honourable methods among nations; and our victory over the enemies of this ideal will be deprived of much of its value to us if we do not at the same time achieve a victory over ourselves; by fighting with all our strength at home, while our "boys" are fighting abroad, to develop a high sense and standard of honour and honourable action in all the varied relations of our national being; in individual intercourse and association; in all our social relations; in all our commercial and industrial activities; in a word, in every relation of our individuality and citizenship. Real and true national greatness can only consist with national honour, and this involves national honesty in principle.

This is all the more necessary because by this war we are being deprived of the home services of the best of our young manhood—the flower of our young men. Unfortunately, the young men we can best spare, the young men of weak hearts and perhaps, doubtful courage, are left with us. To repair the wastage of vigorous young manhood, we need to give attention to the boys. The coming young men almost before we realise it, will have attained the status of manhood, and be faced with the responsibility of citizenship.

The Monetary Times specifically urges, in the above article, the preparation to-day of the boy "for the financial and commercial war to come." This is a good ambition to aim at realizing, but it represents the lowest motive—achievement of mterial success. With this ambition should be combined the ambition for all-round improvement of the coming boy—mental and moral improvement and high ideals of morality which can alone constitute a sound basis for the highest manhood and the best citizenship. Baden Powell, as quoted above, gives first importance, in the exercise of energies to the "training of the rising generation to the full possible extent" to "individual character." If we are to succeed in this ambitious purpose the indispensable condition is the permeation and saturation of the boy, and through the boy, the man of the country, with the principles of honour and honesty.

A MOHAMMEDAN TRIBUTE TO KITCHENER.

One of the best tributes to Lord Kitchener which has yet been published comes from a Mohammedan named Achmed Abdullah, who has written to the New York Times as follows:

The news of Lord Kitchener's death will come to the vast majority of Great Britain's Mohammedan subjects, whatever their race, with a shock of sharp personal grief. In fair play, straight, strict justice, impersonal ambition, physical vigor and moral cleanliness, broad humanity and broadest tolerance, he embodied in himself the true reasons why the English have accomplished that which no other nation—not even Rome—has ever accomplished; to live together, with many peoples of other races and creeds and civilizations and social and political prejudices, within the limits of the same empire, without too much friction, with liberty of action and thought to everybody, with the same basic laws applying to all, and with always a united, close-knit front against the enemy.

I saw him the last time, a good many years ago, at the occasion of an informal visit which my kinsman, the Ameer of Afghanistan, paid to India, and I shall always remember one of the things he said to me in the course of a conversation dealing with military and political preferment. He spoke in Urdu, and I am translating nearly word for word: "Do your own duty, large or small, in whatever capacity your country demands from you. Never mind what your neighbour is doing. Let everybody attend to his own job, single-minded, regardless of the others' criticisms. And then the country as a whole will take care of itself."

Here is presented, we believe, the secret of Kitchener's power with the races of the East—the fact that he was the personification of the best traditions of the British race.—Montreal Herald.

GERMAN FINANCING.

New York bankers are arranging a new loan of $10,000,000 6 per cent. serial notes of the German Imperial treasury. The price of the new issue is to be on a basis to yield a net return of 6.20 per cent. per annum. Notes will be dated June 1 and the series so arranged that all obligation will have matured by April 1, 1917. A syndicate composed of New York and Philadelphia bankers will underwrite the notes which are to be drawn by the German ambassador in Washington.

Germany last year floated a loan of $10,000,000 in the United States; its reception was far from encouraging. It takes a good deal of patriotism of the German American type to patronize securities of a nation which will have to do the listening during the peace negotiations. The fifth German war loan of about $2,5000,000,000 will be introduced in the Reichstag this month. That will bring the total of German war loans to $12,500,000,000. Drastic measures were used to raise the fourth loan issued in March. The issue of paper against paper and the various measures to compel subscriptions to loans, part subscription for the succeeding issues could be made in the bonds of preceding loans. Thus for the fourth series the bonds of the first second and third issues could be presented for payment. This is building a dangerous paper fabric. The position is aptly expressed in one of the famous pictures of Louis Raemakers, the Dutch cartoonist. He portrays German Michael holding, with an unmistakable air of suspicion, a receipt for his war loan subscription. Michael says: "I got a receipt for 100 marks. I gave this for a second 100 marks and I received a second receipt. For the third loan I gave the second receipt. Have I invested 300 marks and have the government got 300 marks, or have both of us got nothing?"—Monetary Times.

GREAT POETS.

There have, of course, been many fine poets, writers of beautiful sentiments in beautiful numbers; but the supremely great poets may be counted on the fingers of the two hands. England and Scotland lead the world in great poets, having, perhaps, a half dozen, while the other countries can show hardly more than one each, and some of them not even one.

THE VALUE OF YPRES SALIENT APPRECIATED BY CANADIANS

An article by John Balderson in the Pittsburg despatch, describing a recent visit to the Ypres salient, is of more than usual interest, in view of the terrific fight there this past week between the Canadians and the German, and of the discussion over Sir Sam Hughes' interview regarding the holding of this position. Much of the despatch has been deleted by the censor. Among what has not been deleted, however, is a description of Loos and Ypres being vital points on the British line. According to Mr. Balderson, officers at the front say that the first Battle of Ypres, fought on October 14, when the immortal Seventh Division met the full shock of the German assault, was "the most brilliant in the history of the British Army." The Seventh Division went into the action with 400 officers and 12,000 men; it remained there for three weeks, at a time when Kitchener had no reserves to send forward, and when it was given a resting spell there remained 44 officers and 2,346 men. The Germans did not break through, but if they had they would likely have been in Calais shortly after.

Mr. Balderson regards the Ypres and Loos sections as the most interesting in the British line not only on account of past memories, but because of future prospects. The two salients are thirty miles apart, but the character of the terrain is different, and therefore warfare is conducted on different lines. The soil of Ypres makes it impossible to construct the earth fortifications and the massive trenches that are to be seen at Loos. The soil is so waterlogged that trenches cannot be dug deep enough to afford shelter to the troops. Earth fortifications melt away like snow before the sun when there is any rain, and so the trenches are protected by sandbags, behind which the men must stand in the water. The City of Ypres itself is a mere rubbish heap.

That the holding of the salient is a particularly rough job is vouched for by Mr. Balderson. In fact, he says that "the conditions of fighting, the impossibility of constructing proper shelter trenches because of the soil, the lack of shelter for batteries, and the fact that many parts of the British line are partly enfiladed by the German guns make the holding of the Ypres region about the toughest job along the British front."

Such is the character of the place which is regarded as the key to Calais. The section of the front of which it forms the most famous feature was the scene of fighting in October and November, 1914, and April, 1915, and cost England, France and Germany more men than the North paid in the four years of the American Civil War. Germany alone, in her first great effort for Calais, lost 200,000 men, and every day since then fighting has taken place in the salient. Now we have had another great German effort to blast a road to Calais through it. If that effort had been successful it would have been one of the biggest blows yet dealt the Allies by the Germans. Thanks to the Canadians the line still holds. — Montreal Herald.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Rariden Now Regarded As Best Backstop In National League Ranks

NEW YORK, June 17.—They are calling Bill Rariden of the Giants the best catcher in the National League now. No man on McGraw's miracle club did more to make the historic western sweep possible than Rariden, save possibly Dave Robertson. Not only did Bill catch sensationally, but his hitting was hard and timely. He is going now at a .320 clip.

Rariden just had to prove a great catcher for the Giants. Didn't Ole Hughey Fullerton rate McGraw's catching staff as the worst in the National League after the little Nap had purchased Bill? Didn't Hughey say there would be loud wails of anguish at the Polo Grounds within a month over the catching problem? Surely he did.

There was no way ouet of it. Bill Rariden was destined to be a star with the Giants. And he has fulfilled that destiny.

Bill is from the Hoosier State of Indiana. He is a little black-haired, brown-faced man of Irish extraction. He is twenty-seven years old.

Rariden is the ideal type of modern catcher. He is fast and light on his feet, and can do his own running. He is in the class of Ray Schalk and Wally Schang.

He has as good an arm as Jimmy Archo never owned. He is just as smart a backstop as the famous Chib ever was, too.

Bill works so fast behind the plate that the Giant infielders, used to the slow and deliberate Chief Meyers, were all at sea in the first few weeks of the season. Several times they made Rariden look bad by not covering a base for his throw to catch a man napping.

They are working with him now. There are, indeed, wails of anguish arising from the Polo grounds. Wails of anguish from the base runners Rariden throws out stealing

"Rariden looks like the best catcher in the National League," I suggested to John J. McGraw the other afternoon at the Polo Grounds. "Yes," said the Giant leader, "and you'll see that he has improved a lot since the season opened. He is getting better every day."

"He is the greatest catcher in baseball," is Charley Doonin's tribute. The best thing about it is that he is as strong as a horse and can be in there catching every day. He is a glutton for work."

It cost the Giants something like $7,500 to secure Rariden from Harry F. Sinclair, when the Federal League blew up. It was money well spent.

During the two years of its existence Bill was the best catcher of the Federal League. There was no disputing this fact. Everyone in the league admitted it. He was the best throwing backstop in the circuit, the best at fielding bunts and a dangerous and timely hitter.

Rariden jumped to the Indianapolis Feds, from the Boston Braves in 1914. He caught for the first Federal League championship club, upon which Bennie Kauff, Bill McKechnie and Eddie Rouse also played. Last year he was in Newark, to which city the Indianapolis club minus Bennie Kauff had been transferred.

Rariden is not normally a .300 hitter. However, he has maintained that pace all spring. National League pitchers fear him in the pinch more than any man on the Giant roster. And with good cause. He has been walked purposely more times than any of the Giants. He gets a number of unintentional passes, too, having a good eye for a pitched ball.

Bill Rariden just had to prove a great catcher for the Giants. Didn't old Hughey Fullerton rate McGraw's backstoping department, with Bill as the mainstay, as the weakest in the National League?

Cubs Are Leading League With Stick

CHICAGO, June 17.—Terrific hitting by the Cubs in the past week put them in the lead in club batting in the National League with .265 and gave them three places among the ten batters doing .300 or better. Averages published here to-day, which take in games played last Wednesday, show Jake Daubert of Brooklyn still heads the list with .345. Max Carey of Pittsburg has resumed the lead in stolen bases with 18, but in most other departments the Cubs are ahead. Williams in home runs with seven and in total bases with 99; Zimmerman in runs scored with 33, and Flack in sacrifice hits with 19. The league's .300 batters are:

Daubert, Brooklyn .345; Schulte, Chicago, .338; Doyle, New York .329; Wheat, Brooklyn .316; Hinchman, Pittsburg, .313; Williams, Chicago .300; Wagner, Pittsburg, .303; Chase, Cincinnati, .301.

Only seven regulars are hitting better than .300 in the American League. Speaker still leads with .386, and is ahead in total bases with 108, and in runs scored with 43. The unusual sight of a catcher leading the league in stolen bases is shown with Schalk of Chicago setting the pace with 14, one ahead of such speedy men as Cobb and Sisler. Grasey, Cleveland, leads in home runs with four and Gandil, Cleveland in sacrifice hits with 16. Detroit is head in team hitting with .256. The .300 hitters, including only those who have played in at least half the games of their clubs, are:

Speaker, Cleveland, .386; Burns, Detroit, .346; Jackson, Chicago, .337; Cobb, Detroit, .331; Heilman, Detroit, .310; Nunamaker, New York, .308; Smith Cleveland, .308.

BASEBALL CATCHING ON IN ENGLAND

LONDON, June 17.—Baseball has at last obtained a firm foothold in England and is being played to such an extent in and around London by Canadians whom the war has brought over. A league has been formed amongst teams driven from the Army Pay Office and other colonial units, the staff of the various Canadian military hospitals and munition workers.

The Canadians having intimated that they would welcome the entry of an American team into the league, one is being formed by J. G. Lee of Central Building, Westminester. In addition to the London district four teams have been organised in Taplow, while at Epsom, Hampton, Bramshot, and many other centres further afield, the game is being played considerably.

With the football season extending from September 1 to April 30, and cricket occupying the summer months, baseball has never been seriously considered, but since the outbreak of the war, when county cricket was abandoned, the Canadians have succeeded in arousing such enthusiasm in the game that its future seems assured. Several of the professional soccer clubs in the south of England—Fulham, Arsenal, Clapton Orient, Tottenham, Hotspur, Milwall and West Ham United—have played the game for several years, which enabled the players to keep in training between the football seasons.

This Manufacturer Helps Save Daylight

The Guelph Carpet Company has a daylight saving system it might be justly proud of. For two weeks past they have been running nine hours a day, beginning at 7 a.m. and quitting at 5 p.m. standard time. But the hands are paid for regular ten hours day. On Saturday afternoon the hands are given a half holiday. Mr. Robert Dodds, the manager, states that he finds the plan very satisfactory. The employees now accomplish as much work in nine hours as they formerly did in ten.

FIRE CAPTAIN KILLED, AUTO TRUCK SMASHED

LONDON, Ont., June 19.—A false alarm and a level crossing caused the death yesterday of John H. Case Captain of the Central Fire Station, the injury of several other firemen, and the demolition of London's newest combination motor truck.

A collision occurred at the Talbot street crossing of the Grand Trunk Railway at 10.45 o'clock yesterday morning, when an east-bound freight struck the fire truck full force. Fireman Samuel Sweet, who was driving the truck, was sitting on the side nearest to the on-coming train, and Capt. Case beside him. Though the latter was injured terribly, Sweet escaped with minor injuries which were dressed at Dr. Drake's. Albert Dean of 234 1-2 Dundas street, was on top of the hose, and Charles Shibley of Richmond and Maple streets, was on the west side, and neither was able to escape. When rescued from the wreckage they were found to be suffering from bruises and cuts all over their bodies. They were taken to Victoria Hospital where it is believed both will recover.

A DANGEROUS CROSSING

The crossing is one which offers but little chance to see far down the track and to-day the view was obstructed by a box car on the north track near to the west side of the Talbot Street line. As the firemen approached they found the gates down, and they came to a full stop while a long westbound freight passed. As the last car went by the watchman raised the gates. Apparently the noise of the westbound had drowned the signal of the other train, and the train itself obscured the view of the eastbound freight. Immediately the gates went up Chief Aitkens' runabout shot forward, but the motor truck was about fifty feet behind, and slower to get into motion. The watchman saw the engine too late, and as his hand went up the truck jumped in front of the train.

Capt. Case, whose death has caused sorrow on every hand, was one of the most popular members of the department, was forty-eight years of age, and resided at 167 John street. He had been in the service twenty-six years. He leaves a wife and one son. The tragedy for the widow is intensified by the fact that their only child is in France, having enlisted here with the 39th Battery.

Firemen Dean and Shibley are both married the former a member of the department for many years. Shibley was a new man, this being his thirteenth day with the department. In the collision his foot was pinned to the truck, and he was carried forward till the train came to a stop in several car lengths.

THE WATCHMAN'S ALLEGED MISTAKE

The watchman, who is blamed by the Fire Department for having raised the gates without having gone out to the eastbound tracks, is an old employee of the Grand Trunk, J. Primeau, fifty-nine years of age. He has been on duty there every day for a long time.

The freight, coming down the grade from the west, was in charge of Conductor Boucher and Engineer Woodcock of Sarnia. The regulations call for a maximum speed of six miles an hour.

The fire truck was a La France, purchased about six months ago, at a cost of about $7,000, and is the second to be destroyed on a G.T.R. level crossing, the city having lost its first one a few years ago. At that time several men were injured. The car smashed to-day, beyond all repair, was insured in the Liverpool and London and Globe.

Coroner McLaren empaneled a jury and an adjournment was made until next Friday evening.

On a warrant issued by Magistrate Judd, J. Primeau, the Grand Trunk watchman, was arrested and taken to the County Jail.

THREE YEAR SENTENCE FOR 'COBOURG' SOLDIER

Private of the 139th Battalion Sentenced to Penitentiary for Shooting Fellow Soldier At Barrie-field Camp—Had Already Served a Similar Term at Kingston

KINGSTON, June 17.—Pte. Richard Gallagher, the American who enlisted at Cobourg with the 139th Battalion, was convicted this morning under the following section of the Criminal Code: 'Every person guilty of an indictable offence, who unlawfully wounds or inflicts any grievous bodily harm upon any other person either with or without any weapon or instrument, is liable to three years imprisonment." Judge Lavell, after hearing all the evidence, sentenced the prisoner to three years in the Penitentiary. D. A. Givens defended the prisoner and J. L. Whiting, K. C., prosecuted.

Acting Quartermaster Sergeant Harper was the principal witness, and he stated that on Friday, June 9th, Gallagher went to him and asked him if he (Gallagher) was wanted. He was told that he was not and then Gallagher wanted to see Major Wallace. He became very abusive and was ordered to be put under arrest by Acting Sergeant-Major Paterson. Two M. P.'s were sent to Gallagher's tent to arrest him. Gallagher came out of the tent with a rifle in his hand and threatened to shoot anyone who came near him. Witness was at the rear of the tent at the time and he called for Provost Sergt. Calder. Gallagher finally did shoot and the bullet struck a piece of iron sheet outside of Chenier's tent and richotted through the tent, striking Chenier in the right leg about two inches above the knee. Gallagher was placed under arrest at once by a number of M.P.'s and was taken to the police station. Witness saw Gallagher shoot and he did not think he meant to shoot any person in particular.

Acting Sergt.-Maj. Patterson was then called and he gave his evidence which was practically the same as that of Harper. Witness did not see Gallagher shoot, and did not see Chenier being hit.

Major Wallace, Capt. Campbell, Medical Officer of the 139th, and Lieut. Dixon were placed upon the stand and their evidence was corroborative.

Gallagher was then called and he stated that on the morning of June 9th, he and another soldier left the camp at 9 o'clock and came to the city. They got a man here to get a quart bottle of gin for them and after that had been consumed they got two bottles of whiskey. Before going back to camp about 12.30, they had consumed almost five bottles of liquor. The prisoner stated that he did not remember going back to camp, and he stated that the first he knew of the shooting was in the afternoon at about 3 o'clock when he was in the guard room under arrest. One of the soldiers told him then that he had shot Pte. Chenier.

Questioned by Mr. Whiting, the prisoner said he had never been in Kingston before. Mr. Whiting, however, produced records sent from Toronto which showed that the prisoner had spent three years in the Portsmouth Penitentiary in 1903, and was released in 1906. When confronted with the facts, Gallagher admitted that he had served a term.

Mr. Givens then addressed the Judge and claimed that the prisoner had been greatly under the influence of liquor on the afternoon of the accident. The mere fact that two men drank five bottles of liquor in one morning and without having any breakfast would indicate that they were certainly very drunk.

In summing up the case it was shown that the prisoner had no intention of shooting any person, but was simply trying to frighten the military police. His bad record, however, went against him and Judge Lavell gave him the full extent of the sentence liable under the charge.

"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE"

Is more than a motion picture. It is the most note-worthy achievement in the history of motion pictures.

If you have a drop of red blood in your veins, you will experience in witnessing this production a thrill such as you have never known before.

You will see the enemy approaching, the powerlessness of New York, the weakness of its forts and defences. You will see the havoc wrought by the enemy's howitzers, sub-marines, airships; by its shells, shrapnels and bombs.

You will see the most beautiful sky line in the world in flames, the metropolis of the western hemisphere devastated.

You will see New York fall, the desecration that follows.

"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE"

It was written by J. Stuart Blackton and vitagraphed under his personal supervision.

Scores of prominent Americans in the army and navy and administrative circles have contributed to its preparation.

MR. CHARLES RICHMAN, the distinguished actor, heads a cast of eminent Vitagraph stars—a cast containing twenty-five thousand National Guardsmen, five thousand horses, eight thousand supernumeraries.

Prof. E. M. Best Off to the Front

Former Peterboro Boy to Enter Y. M. C. A. Work Among The Canadian Troops

The following from the Springfield, Mass., Republic will be read with great interest as Prof. Best who is a brother of Mr. R. P. Best of the Best Stove Company was formerly associated with that company here. He was a Lieut. in the 57th Regiment and prominent in sports ,especially in lacrosse. For some years, Prof. Best has been engaged in the United States. The Republican says.

Prof. E. M. Best of the Young Men's Christian Association college leaves to-day with his family for Winnipeg, Man., from where he will start for London, Eng., to enter the Canadian army in Young Men's Christian association work among the "huts". Prof. Best will have the rank of captain in the Canadian army, but expects to confine himself to association work among the soldiers. On all fronts the association has "huts", where the social, spiritual and physical needs of the fighting men in this work have been killed, but Prof. Best hopes to return to Springfield to resume his work as professor of religious education at the college. His place will be filled by Earl F. Zinn, a member of the 1916 class at the college, who will carry on the class and extension work, and by Dr. John H. Randall of the Mount Morris Baptist church of New York city, who will deliver lectures.

Prof. Best has been engaged in just the kind of work to fit him for his new position. In his classes and in athletics he has mixed with the 'boys' and is one of the most popular professors at the college. Although also one of the best-natured professors, one of his friends said last night he thought it would be 'hard to keep him from the firing line after the professor got there.' At first he will be stationed in the headquarters of the Canadian Young Men's Christian association at London. His address will be 8 Westminster palace hotel. After a short time he will probably be sent to some one of the larger recruiting stations where the men must be provided to a certain extent with the social life which they have left behind them. What will turn up before the war is ended Prof. Best doesn't know.

Prof. Best has just finished his third year in his work of religious education. He was graduated from the local college in 1911 and then spent two years at New York university, where he received the degree of master of pedagogy. He has entered into the life of the city to a great extent. He has been a member of the official board of the First Presbyterian church for a year. The church congregation gave Prof. and Mrs. Best a farewell reception last night at which Prof. Best was presented with a copy of Moulton's reader's Bible, and Mrs. Best with a gold thimble.

Mrs. Best and the two children will remain at her home in Winnipeg while Prof. Best is in foreign lands. After two or three weeks in Canada he will sail on a Canadian transport for London, and will take up his first duties at the Canadian Young Men's Christian association headquarters there.

Meeting of The City Council

A special meeting of the City Council will be held this evening when a number of matters of pressing importance will be dealt with.

THE ANNUAL DECORATION DAY MEMORIAL OF I. O. O. F. LODGES

Little Lake Cemetery Was Sunlit While The Graves Were Decorated—Profusion of Flowers on Every Hand Made the Cemetery a Glade of Beauty.

117 I. O. O. F. DEPARTED MEMBERS

The loosely-knit clouds that have swung hither and thither across the sky for many weeks past, parted significantly and opportunely for a few radiant moments on Sunday afternoon during the annual memorial ceremony of Decoration Day, in which Oddfellowship perpetuates its fraternity abiding beyond the graaves. Like great noble curtains they seemed to have been thrust open when, following the general service, the members of Peterborough and Otonabee Lodges, No. 111 and No. 13, respectively, dispersed in small groups to pay remembrance to individual departed brethren. This memorial rite completed, the clouds closed in again as if the incident had been a brief respite in recognition of the tributary symbolism of the proceedings. In a sense the threatening weather marred this year's Decoration Day, but on the other hand the presence of over one hundred and fifty members under yesterday's conditions served to emphasize the fraternal spirit that animates the members of the I. O. O. F. Apparently the usual crowd of citizens that attends this event was smaller than in recent years, yet it was much larger than might have been expected under the unfavourable circumstances.

The Little Lake Cemetery was a-bloom with flowers and there seemed scarcely a grave that had been neglected. For the custom of the Oddfellows, emulated by citizens in general, doubtless serves to remind them of their own departed. And what an underestimated service is this of the flowers—the daisies, glorious peonies and roses, fragrant carnations, stately flags, the sloe-eyed, peering pansies and the other riches of field and garden. They are an universal expression of love and hope, a tender link between memories of the past and the silent beyond, a comfort to the heart bowed down. These were thoughts and sentiments of Decoration Day, and conspicuous, too, were the little Union Jacks that designated the graves of soldiers remembered on Empire Day by the Daughters of the Empire. Surely the dead are not forgotten.

Adjutant McElheney of the Salvation Army touched upon this latter custom in his address to the I. O. O. F. He spoke of the significance which the Oddfellows attached to Decoration Day, and stated that it was a privilege to be able to pay such respect to the departed. Many relatives of boys who had given their lives on the battle fields of Flanders and France would find a certain happiness if they, too, could pay a similar tribute to their dead. And he asked that in this memorial service at home a thought be given to the marked and unmarked graves not only of those soldiers who had been Oddfellows, but of all the Peterborough boys who had died in war.

THE SOCIETY'S REMEMBRANCE.

After the singing of "Abide With Me" and "Nearer My God to Thee," to the accompaniment of the Salvation Army Temple Band, which played the combined lodges to the cemetery, Mr. Geo. A. Macdonald opened the general service with the following memorial address:

Brethren, — Another year has passed away and we are assembled once again, to pay respect to the memory of our departed brethren, on this peaceful Sabbath day, amid these surroundings which nature and the care of man have made beautiful and yet "where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap" and where on all sides, we behold, as emblems of mortality, these monuments which tell us of those who once lived, but who have passed away. I am sure it needs no words of mine to make this scene impressive. Looking back over a number of years of Oddfellowship calling to mind many of the brethren with whom I once associated but who have passed into "the silent halls of death." I find myself to-day burdened with memory, rather than gifted with speech, and in the words of Tennyson, I say, "Would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me." But even were the gift of eloquence mine I would not speak of the chilling hand of death, nor in my words make mournful measure for those who have gone, preferring rather to take the view of Longfellow: "This life of mortal breath is but the suburb of the life Elysian, whose portal we call death."

In the work of our Order we have many beautiful ceremonies all serving to teach us how priceless is friendship, how deep is love; how lasting is truth. These are the links which unite us heart to heart in our great fraternity, and to-day, my brothers, we join with these, the golden link of remembrance. Remembrance! Something akin to talismanic power as in the word, but more than that, I take up the Sacred Book that is one of our many symbols, and turning its pages over, I find these words, "everlasting remembrance." What majesty of expression is in the phrase; and so inwrought is it in passages of Holy Writ, that to breathe the word 'remembrance' brings peace to our souls, like the breathing of a prayer. In this Book we find the hope of life beyond the grave that makes bright our vision as we unitedly engage in this service to-day, for how vain it all would be, and how dread the prospect, had we not the assurance that after the night time of sorrow and regret and tears, there would come a glad-morning of rejoicing:

"And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which we have loved long since and lost awhile."

The sweetest songs of our tongue are songs of remembrance, and of all the gifts we possess this is one of the most precious: the power to write 'remembrance' on the heart of a friend.

It is an evidence of the existence of this power, my brothers, that we are here to-day, bearing these flowers in our hands. One by one the links that bind us may be severed, but though time may dim its lustre, all unbroken still remains the link that was forged in the flame on the altar of love, the golden link of 'remembrance.'

We shall not speak to-day of our departed ones; we bring these bright flowers as garlands for their graves, and by all the significance that has been given them in their fragrance and beauty, they shall speak for us all that our words have failed to say. So some among us this day will bring many tender recollections; may sorrow touch these hearts; "Gently as falls the dew drop on the rose." May this ceremony give us renewed strength and zeal in the work we, as Oddfellows, are privileged to do, bearing one another's burdens, giving help and encouragement and cheer, caring for those who may need our care that after death's ministry has been fulfilled, there may be no regrets:

Now is the time, Brothers, no longer wait,
To scatter deeds of sunshine and good cheer;
Wait not till loved ones pass beyond Death's gate,
They may not need us in another year.
Now is the time.

Mr. G. A. McDonald, presided while Mr. G. A. Gillespie very ably performed the duties of chaplain. A short address was given by Adjutant McElheney after which the members dispersed and decorated the graves.

Voice of The People

Communications under this heading containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir.—Allow me a few lines in your columns in reference to "is it damnable?" in your Saturday's issue. I do not know where the design comes from, in regard to the fountain in Victoria Park, but certainly not from any person who knows very much about an ornamental park. Is there any beauty in gazing on a heap of those unsightly boulders? Then why spend the Society's money to draw them there? Why not leave them in the farm fields so we could have a pilgrimage to go and view them? Since the concrete ring has been added to the fountain, the iron basin becomes an overflow basin; and the water should have an unbroken fall to the outer ring that has been added. The whole thing is an eyesore to a beautiful park like this right in the heart of the city; it cuts off the approach of the steps behind it, because it is pitched too high; and it will not hold water because it is not level. If the concrete outer circle had been made level it could have been filled with a beautiful lot of gold fish for half the cost of dragging those stones there which we can see anywhere on any old farm. It does not matter how the thing is altered it cannot be righted till the stones are removed and a fountain, proper, made of it, instead of a stone-heap in the park.

Yours truly,
UNSIGHTLY.

Space is given to the communication of "Unsightly" because it deals with a matter of public interest; a matter that excites differences of opinion. The beauty of our parks and public places is so important a thing that it seems good policy to encourage correspondence that shows the existence of public interest, for lack of public interest in such things is one cause of many conditions that grieve the aesthetic sense, antagonize the ideals of public beauty, and make its preservation difficult. Space will gladly be given any one who can justify, on any grounds, the feature of Victoria Park, which "Unsightly" holds in small esteem. If any satisfactory explanation can be made, it is certainly due the public.

Peterborough, June 19, 1916.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Recruits for the Canadian Overseas forces are such priceless acquisitions just now that I presume any suggestion as to recruiting methods that will help to swell the ranks is welcome. It is for that reason I desire to take a little of the valuable space of your columns to have the advisability of the following plan considered.

In the windows of several of the local banks appear, splendid recruiting posters which appeal, or should appeal, very directly to young men. These posters, however, are hung in such a way as to be seen only by men passing outside of the banks. My suggestion is that they be taken down and reversed so that whatever patriotic stimulus they may give may be received by those on the inside rather than those outside. Similar posters might be secured for those of the banks who have not already displayed them, these too to be hung facing the interior.

I think that in this way these artistically patriotic sketches would serve to a greater extent than at present, and would be seen by a greater number of physically fit young men than they are at present—men too whose tasks might rationally be undertaken by young ladies should they enlist.

Yours truly,
"A. R."

12,000 letters a day is a fair average of the amount handled.

This is the work that the staff is called upon to do besides the numerous applications for postage stamps and money orders. The sale of stamps every day amounts to well over $150, and $3,000 or $4,000 in money orders after a pay day is considered a very usual occurrence. The post office is situated in a separate building back of headquarters, and two collections of mail are made every day.

BARRIEFIELD, June 17.—Telephones will be installed throughout Barriefield camp immediately and the equipment is now here. Twenty-six jacks on th switch-board at the camp are in the equipment which will provide telephones for all of the battalions and the administration officers. As a great part of the phoning will be within the camp grounds, only two trunk lines to the Kingston Central are considered necessary. The central at the camp will be in a building back of the Headquarters Administration building, which is now partly occupied by the telegraph offices.

Lieut. Jesse Ketchum of the 93rd Battalion, and Lieut. Thompson of the 74th Battery, C.F.A., left for Barriefield Camp yesterday morning in the 93rd motor truck, which will be placed in commission at the camp.

The 93rd boys are appreciating the fund subscribed by the citizens of Peterborough city and county. The big mess and recreation tent erected last week is proving decidedly useful.

Trunk Sewer Made Progress Yesterday

The iron piling or casing for the trunk sewer was brought safely north of the G.T.R. on Park street yesterday, the work being sufficiently advanced at four o'clock to allow the replacing of the railway a small stretch of which has been torn up. Mr. John Thirsbeck, foreman and his men rushed the work and were able to do so for the day when they had driven the piling more than twenty feet beyond the G.T.R.

Rainfall This Year Heaviest on Record

Precipitation in April, May and June 1916, Eclipses All Figures for These Months—12½ Inches of Rain—A Serious Crop Situation

The rainfall for April, May and June, according to information obtained from the Toronto Meteorological Office, eclipses anything on record for that period. The highest previously registered was in 1840, when the figure was 12.43 inches, but yesterday's fall, added to the other wet times, washed this record out of the way. Up till Saturday the registry for the three months was 12.31 inches, but at 9 o'clock last night an additional .20 inches had to be taken into account, which placed this year's period, with a fortnight still to go, ahead of corresponding times. At other seasons of the year there have, however, been wetter three-month periods. For April to June, the years anything like approaching 1840 and 1916 were: 1857, 10.96 inches; 1893, 11.43 inches; 1894, 11.06 inches.

As already reported the abnormal rainfall has created quite a serious crop situation. Farmers are anything but enamored of the prospects, and it is a pretty general tale of failure to make progress with seeding. There is comfort, however, in one line at least, for a large hay crop seems assured.

YOUTHFUL BURGLER LEADS A CONSTABLE ON A MERRY CHASE

THROUGH CITY, INTO COUNTY BACK TO CITY, PLUNGES IN-TO RIVER.

CHATHAM, June 19.—A series of daring robberies were committed in the small hours of the morning by an exciting chase.

The culprits are a local boy under the age of 14 years, and his friend Melvin Dale, aged 19, of Montreal who commenced working in Chatham.

Among the many places which the thieves entered were the office of Charles Kellar, insurance agent; McGeachy's Dairy, and E. R. Snooks' grocery. Money and large quantities of postage stamps and cigarettes were stolen.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the police were informed that the boys were carrying a basket full of cigarettes near the Pere Marquette station. P. C. McKinley arrested the younger boy but Dale managed to make a get-away. Leaving his prisoner in the care of two citizens, the officer gave chase to Dale, who led him through the country for several miles, down concessions, over farms, eventually returning to the city after an hour's run.

To elude his pursuer, Dale plunged into the river Thames. It was only after the officer had fired his revolver in the air that he could persuade him that he was trapped, when he returned to the shore and gave himself up to the police officer.

To Avoid Large Pores.

Large pores on the face skin will surely result if you wash your face in hot water and do not afterward dash it with cold water. If you do not take this precaution you are almost sure to have large pores, as the hot water opens them up and if left open they will spread and fill up and become permanently large. Cold water will help to close them and so will an astringent. Benzoin is an astringent and I would advise you to get ten cents' worth of tincture of benzoin and every time you wash your face with hot water, finish up with cold water into which you have poured a

MAJORITY IS REDUCED TO SIX

The vacancies now number five in Ontario, two in Nova Scotia, two in British Columbia and one in Manitoba. These vacancies can be filled at any time.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

Fred McNeely, who has assisted at the building in connection with the office and game rooms, has just refused a flattering offer to assist in the Association tent work at Petawawa, that he may don the khaki as a member of the Queen's Medical Unit. Fred expects to report for duty at Barriefield in a few days and we know that he can be depended upon to do his full duty.

The question was asked of a member of the staff yesterday: "Does the religious work of the Association keep pace with the other activities? It may be news to some to learn that the most marked increase in the Association movement during the past three years has been in the religious department. In 1915 the Associations of North America had enrolled in Bible study 163,833 young men. The Associations report 22,000 conversions last year, and $1,337,294 raised and expended in foreign missionary work. $1,000,000 has just been secured for work of the Association among soldiers, which is the most practical religious work of the times. Last season the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. reported 139 boys enrolled in Bible study with a total attendance of 764. The young men's meetings Sunday afternoons had an average attendance of 25, which was a better average than that sustained by most of our gymnasium classes.

The free privileges extended to soldiers made many personal interviews possible which will never appear in a statistical report. In fact, the best results obtained by our workers can not be reported, as they are of such an intimate and personal nature.

The spirit of the Association movement may be noted by the fact that during the International Convention recently held at Cleveland every delegate was assigned a man in the city to interview with the object of persuading him to unite with one of the churches of the city. One church in Cleveland reported 125 men who joined as a result of these interviews.

A few extra copies of Association Men giving addresses have been obtained and will be handed those who wish them, as long as they last.

STEAMER CHAS. S. PRICE RAISED BY WRECKERS

Could Be Brought Three Miles Nearer Mouth of River St. Clair.

SARNIA, June 19.—It is reported here that the wrecker Favorite of the Great Lakes Wrecking Co., along with the tug Michigan, has succeeded in raising the overturned steamer Chas. S. Price, which foundered in the great storm of November 9, 1913, sufficiently to enable them to bring her three miles closer to the mouth of the St. Clair River. The wrecker and ill-fated boat are now visible from the top of the Northern Navigation coal chutes at Point Edward, being out eight miles distance. A party of officials left Port Huron yesterday to look over the wreck.

Children Used As Targets By Turkish Troops

Horrible Stories of Massacre of Armenians

A despatch from Moscow announces that Prince Arsutinski has sent a report on the state of affairs at Trebisond after the evacuation by the Turkish troops. On taking possession of the town the Russians found there 15,000 inhabitants, all of whom were Greeks, since all the Turks had fled. The Armenians in the town and its environs had all been massacred or drowned by the Turks.

It is declared that the atrocities committed on the Armenians at Trebisond surpasses all the Turkish cruelties towards the Armenians in other places. The expulsion of the Armenians in Trebisond began in July, 1915, and to begin with several hundreds of young and influential Armenians were arrested on charges of treason and of aiding the Russians, embarked on boats and drowned in the sea.

The Turks also amused themselves with firing practice, taking the heads of little children as targets. The survivors were sent to Erzerum. Christian Turks state that the whole road was strewn with bodies of children and adults.

After the first expulsion the Turks removed Armenian boys, some of whom were, distributed among Turkish families, in order to be converted to Islam, while others were massacred, and, according to the Greeks, collected in baskets and drowned in the sea.

When the Turks fled from Trebisond the Armenian children distributed among Turkish families were abandoned to the Greeks. These children are now being collected by the delegates of the benevolent societies at Batum. Up to the present 50 children have been collected.

Some of the children were saved by the Greeks, while others fled to neighboring spots or hid in ditches, feeding on roots and fruit or anything that was given to them.

The children collected at Trebisond present a terrible spectacle. They are clad in rags, and are sickly and haggard, and ask all the time if they are going to be massacred.

FAY ASKED PRESIDENT TO SEND HIM HOME

German Conspirator Wanted to Offer "His Life to His Country."

NEW YORK, June 19.—Lieut. Robert Fay, sentenced to eight years in the federal prison at Atlanta for plotting to attach bombs to vessels carrying supplies to the Entente Allies, admitted to-day that he had written to President Wilson, asking that he be deported to Germany instead of being sent of prison. He is now in the Tombs in this city.

In his letter Foy said he asked that he be returned to his native land to "rehabilitate" himself by offering his life to his country. The punishment he would receive for deserting from the German army, even to "aid" the German cause in the United States, he declared, would be more severe than the prison term to which he was sentenced.

"If my life has to be wasted," he said, "I might as well waste it for my country, and be of some use to somebody. So far as my punishment is concerned, one day of drumfire is worse than ten years in prison."

THE PLAIN FACT IN THE CASE.

Providence Journal: So, the Germans are gradually revealing details of the great battle of the thirty-first of May, which confirm the British estimates. Their fleet was not only beaten, but it suffered terrible punishment. The story is coming out as the well-remembered confession of the submarine attack on the Channel steamer Sussex was dragged from them. The latter was delayed for diplomatic reasons. In the present instance "military reasons" are the official explanation. The plain fact is, in one case as in the other, that the Germans lied. The truth about the Lutsow might not now be told but for the fact that the British have the proof and the Germans know they have it—as, similarly, they made the belated discovery that the Government of the United States had proof that a German submarine torpedoed the Sussex. The official report of the Admiral of the British Grand Fleet is soon to be made public, and it will undoubtedly describe the sinking of the Lutsow. The German Admiralty has simply anticipated the disclosure. Has it any more confessions to make while there is yet a chance to save its face?

DESERTER GETS SIX MONTHS.

Cobourg, June 19. — Pte. Alfred Provost of the 139th Battalion, was sentenced by Col. Hunter at Kingston to six months in jail for desertion.

Provost came from Vermont and enlisted at Campbellford with four companions. When the battalion went to Barriefield he did not go. He was arrested in Campbellford and taken to Kingston.

REMARKABLE CAREER OF EMPRESS EUGENIE

About seventy years ago there could be seen in the Spanish capital a young girl who, apart from her wonderful beauty, attracted considerable attention by her high spirits and boyish manner. Dressed in brilliant Andalusian costume, a dagger in her belt and a cigarette between her lips, she accompanied her father and elder sister to bull fights and other public entertainments.

This girl —the child of a Spanish marquis and Marie Kirkpatrick, of Irish descent — became the Empress Eugenie. She owed her youthful, mannish ways to her father, who had been terribly disappointed when twice in succession the longed-for son and heir had not put in an appearance. To his wife's disgust he had done the next best thing and had brought up his two little girls to be thorough tom-boys, taking them to all the popular entertainments which were really only fit for men. It was in Paris that Eugenie met Napoleon III., to fall in love with her and eventually made her the Empress of the French.

Fled to England.

After the terrible struggle of 1870, which caused the dethronement of her husband she fled to England with her faithful secretary, M. Pietri. This devoted servant, the only remainder of the gay days in Paris, was very dear to the empress, and when in recent years he died, at the age of eighty-two, the blow fell very heavily. Her husband died many years after she had settled down in Farnborough, in Hampshire, where she now lives in retirement, while her only son, the prince imperial, died fighting gallantly for the British in the Zulu war of 1879. In reconnoitring the country he was surprised and cruelly killed by a party of savage Zulus.

Hardly has any history a tale more tragic than that of the Empress Eugenie—so sudden and splendid in elevation, so brilliant a career, so complete a fall. Now, in the autumn of her days, she is left absolutely alone, youth, beauty and imperial throne, husband, son, all are gone. It is a wonderful fact that the aged empress, who is now ninety years of age, has lived to see her country twice invaded by the Prussians. May she be spared to see her countrymen invade Germany!

Queen Victoria's Friend.

The late Queen Victoria was one of Eugenie's truest friends in her hours of trouble, and it was through her that Eugenie was enabled to bequeath the Farnborough estate to her heir, Prince Louis Napoleon, in spite of the fact that the English law forbids foreigners inheriting freehold property in this country. The empress, who is one of the richest women in the world—her fortune being estimated at no less than £6,000,000—is certainly one of the most charitable.

When her only child was born, Napoleon III. announced the fact that he and his wife would be the godparents to all the children who were born in France on the same day. No fewer than 3,600 children claimed imperial godparents and the empress still keeps a list of her charges and has set aside a legacy for each child now living. The empress was noted for her wonderful generosity in France, and she is no less charitable in England today. The greater part of her beautiful home at Farnborough is now utilized as a hospital for wounded British officers, where they receive every possible care and attention at the hands of this remarkable woman.

EASTERN ONTARIO DAIRYING INDUSTRY LARGELY INFLUENCED BY SENATOR DAN DERBYSHIRE

Senator Daniel Derbyshire died on Sunday night in the Brockville General Hospital, following seizure of paralysis ten days ago. He was well known throughout Peterborough and was an intimate friend of Mr. G. A. Gillespie. Senator Derbyshire occasionally attended Farmers' Institute and dairy meetings in this section, and those who have heard him recall his pleasing address, the big winning voice so essential to a successful public spirit, and his rich fund of humour. He was a big man in every sense of the word, and he accomplished big things during a long and useful career. Especially did he leave the beneficial impress of his interest, enthusiasm and vision upon the dairying industry of Ontario, and it would be difficult to estimate to what extent the present flourishing condition of this industry is attributable to "Dan" Derbyshire's influences.

The following is a sketch of his life from a Brockville source:

Born in the heart of one of the great dairying districts of Ontario, at Plum Hollow, Leeds county, December 11, 1864, Mr. Derbyshire was connected during the greater par of his life with the industry which he saw rise to immense proportions. So intimately and to such an extent was he associated with the dairying industry that he became known as the "Eastern Ontario Cheese King," being for twenty-five years President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

What the Province Owes Him.

What the late Speaker Ballantyne was to the dairy industry of western Ontario, "Dan" Derbyshire was to the dairy industry of eastern Ontario. For about a quarter of a century the latter was President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association; he might almost be said to have been the association during that period. In physical stature, in personality, in enthusiasm, he was the dominating figure of all the annual conventions held during the period of his Presidency. Even after laying down the office of President he was a regular attendant at the annual convention, and always presided at one session a least. His work was not confined to the more or less spectacular duties of convention week. He went up and down the concession lines and urged the formation of syndicates for the building of factories, and largely as a result two-thirds of all the cheese for which Ontario is famous is made in the territory within the limits of his activities. Mr. Derbyshire was also chiefly instrumental in inducing the Eastern Association to take up factory instruction work, and, when the Department of Agriculture assumed the task later on, he loyally aided in making the new departure a success. His activities were not confined, either, to the purely factory end of the cheese industry. Everywhere he preached better cows, and corn as the basis of feeding the cows. In short to Dan Derbyshire more than to any other one man Ontario is indebted for the pre-eminence she has long enjoyed in cheese-making.

He entered the business as a manufacturer in 1874 at Athens. He came to Brockville in 1879, and two years later became local representative of A. A. Ayer & Company. He served as Councillor and was Mayor of Brockville in 1889 and 1890. He was a big man in more ways than one, standing six feet four inches in his stocking feet. After unsuccessfully contesting the riding of Brockville in the Liberal interests in 1891 and 1900, he was elected in 1904, and three years later resigned and was called to the Senate. Hon. G. P. Graham being returned in his stead by acclamation.

Senator Derbyshire was a ready wit, also an authority on agricultural matters in the House and Senate. He was Grand Master for Ontario of the Oddfellows in 1909-10, and was also a prominent Mason of several degrees. He was a prominent member of the Bantist denomination.

He married, in 1889, Mary A. Cawley, who survives, with one son, Councillor John A. Derbyshire. Three brothers and four sisters also mourn, namely: Matthew, Vancouver, B. C.; William and Lindley, Mrs. Andrew Cohoe, Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Jacques and Mrs. Dale, all of Norwich, Ontario. The funeral will be held Wednesday at 2.30.

RUSSIANS ARE ADVANCING

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 19.—Heavy fighting between the Russians advancing toward Kovel and the Germans under Gen. Von Linsingen is reported by the Berlin Tageblatt's correspondent at the Austrian headquarters. According to an Amsterdam despatch to the Exchange Telegraph. The Russians are in superior numbers and the despatch asserts that the Tageblatt account of the fighting is worded so as to prepare Berlin for the news of another Teutonic retreat.

PARIS, June 19.— The Havas correspondent at Saionika telegraphs that news has just been received there that the Bulgarian troops in the region of Florina and Monastir have begun an advance.

WIFE DESERTER ENLISTS AND WILL SIGN OVER PORTION OF ARMY PAY

Located Near Port Stanley After Leaving Spouse in St. Thomas.

ST. THOMAS, June 19. — Mark Simons appeared before County Magistrate Hunt charged with wife-desertion.

Simons left his home at Bridgeburg a year ago, and eloped with a woman named Mrs. Long, a grass-widow. They lived near Port Stanley. Mrs. Simons recently learned of their whereabouts, and secured a warrant for the arrest of the absent husband.

He pleaded guilty and was given the option of enlisting or taking a term in prison. The magistrate sent for the recruiting officer, and Simons was signed up for the 91st. He also agreed to sign over a portion of his pay for the wife during his service.

THE NEW RUSSIAN SHELL APPALLING TO THE AUSTRIANS

LONDON, June 19.—A new kind of shell, said by some correspondents to be a Japanese invention, while others assert it is the product of Russian scientists, is generally given the chief credit for the success of the new Russian offensive, in despatches from Petrograd. Incredible quantities of this new missile are being used by General Brusiloff, and its effect is said to surpass everything witnessed in the war thus far.

"Of course, nothing can be said about the nature of this shell," says the Morning Post's correspondent at Petrograd, who asserts it is the product of the co-operative research of the Russian universities.

"In fighting, hitherto, the capture of positions has been gradual process, but in the present occasion it is rapid beyond belief, the destruction or capture of men coming like a lightning stroke, leaving the staff officers, miles behind the firing line, with no [illegible] repairing the initial misfortune, and they simply fled. The astounding quantity of booty of every kind is likewise evidence of this.

Claims $500 Damages For Injury to His Auto

Judgment was reserved this morning by His Honour Judge Huycke after hearing the evidence in the action for damages James Akey has brought against the township of Otonabee. It arose out of the plaintiff's injuring his car on Oct. 6th, 1914 near the bridge at Wallace's Point by driving into an open culvert on the roadway from Stewart's, for which the plaintiff claimed the municipality was responsible to the extent of $500. Mr. F. D. Kerr represented Otonabee Council and Mr. G. N. Gordon acted for the plaintiff.

GERMAN FISH PRICES HIGH

Huge Catches Failed to Reduce the Cost of Living

Herring Caught in Huge Quantities Fail to Cheapen Food.

While the big catch of herrings and sprats made by German fishermen this spring has been a bonanza for the fishermen and the owners of fishing smacks, it has not helped solve the problem of the high cost of living in Germany, and persons conversant with the situation along the coast are demanding that maximum prices be established at the wholesale markets. A report sent from Lubeck the middle of May to several German newspapers describes conditions in the fishing industry as follows:

"In connection with the enormous catches of herring made by German fishermen along the coast of Schleswig-Holstein and in Danish and Swedish waters during March and April, and the huge quantities delivered to the German market from the Swedish fishing banks, it seems surprising that herring and sprats are kept at high prices and are even rising. Nor has the steady importation of large herring on a big scale from Norway affected the course of prices.

"In the beginning of March the herring fishermen made enormous catches in the Skagerak, the value of which on some days was estimated at almost 750,000 marks (about $178,500 at the normal rate of exchange). Now the fishing in the Skagerak is over and the fishermen have returned to their homes. We are informed that in four weeks each boat earned more than 25,000 marks and that quite young fishermen, just mustered out, have been paid as much as 3,500 marks in the month of March. Furthermore, it is announced that the catch exceeded all expectations, that fishermen earned as much in March as they generally do in a whole year, and that in former years a tenth of the present profit was regarded as an ample return.

"And in spite of all this, the prices of herrings and sprats are incomprehensibly high. The prices cannot be justified by the toil and expenses of herring fishermen, who unjustly increase the cost of this necessary article of popular food that fortunately is available in large quantities. Variations in the course of prices are understandable, as there are days in which the nets bring in but little, but the fact remains that in spite of frequent enormous catches of herring the high prices have not been materially reduced."

The Nation's Business

(From Financial Post.)

The abnormal rains in many parts of Canada have so interfered with farm work that it is now too late to plant many of the usual crops. Much land will go idle, or, if planted with the usual crops, will give less money to spend with their local merchants for supplies of all kinds; manufacturers will have fewer orders, banks will have smaller deposits, there will be less money and higher rates for investment in municipal bonds and other securities.

But live Ministers of Agriculture at Ottawa could have retrieved much of the situation. For the lessened farm revenues this year they will be directly to blame.

At our agricultural colleges, and experimental farms, we have a lot of splendid public servants. No men in Canada give better results for the money we pay them. As a result of experiments, they know exactly what it is most profitable to plant this late date, and what is not. For example, it is too late for wheat, barley and oats, but experiments show that peas, beans, and other crops may be put in. The trouble is very few farmers know this. The Ministers of Agriculture have not told them, or, if they have used Fourteenth Century Bell Ringing methods. That is, calling meetings which few attend or sending out bulletins which fewer read, because neither are timely. All the farmers can be reached by the methods pursued by modern merchants and manufacturers. They talk to the people they want to teach in the papers read by them. There are no worth-while farmers anywhere in Canada who are not readers of their local, town or village, newspaper. To tell them, in the columns of these papers, what experiments of our best farmers showed, at times like this, would cost but little and lead to millions of dollars worth of increased production. The farmers are yearning for this very information.

We are told to economize to meet the tremendous burdens, which war is imposing upon us, but if we curtail our purchases, there will be that much less employment for the workers in our shops and factories. The business-like method is to increase production that we may have more money. As Directors General of Agriculture some of our ministers are a joke. We spend millions finding what to do, then neglect to tell the people—for whom the work is done, who ought to know, who want to learn—anything about it.

This is a subject the press and business men should agitate. It means more money.

A million spent in intelligent talks in the small daily and country weekly press, telling the farmers the money-making things to do—that the experts and successful farmers have discovered — and how to do them, would produce tens of millions for distribution among all classes in Canada.

35 YEARS A TOBACCONIST "ALIVE" BOLLARD IS DEAD

Well-Known Business Man of Downtown District Passes Away.

TORONTO, June 19.— Mr. Arthur Bollard, who was probably best known as "Alive" Bollard, the tobacconist, formerly of Yonge street and latterly of Yonge Street Arcade, passed away yesterday at noon at his home, 256 Roxborough street east, aged sixty-six years. He had been ill about a month. Mr. Bollard, who had been in Canada about forty years, was a native of England.

His connection with the cigar and tobacco trade in Toronto goes back for about thirty-five years. He was a member of the Masonic Order and other societies, and a Presbyterian, having been a member of St. Andrew's church, Carlton street. He leaves one daughter, Mrs. W. E. Macpherson, of Toronto.

The funeral takes place to-morrow at 2.30 p.m.

CIDER STRONGEST DRINK SERVED ENGLAND'S KING.

War economy is widely practiced in the King's household. Cider-cup is the strongest drink served; lemonade, orangeade, and barley water are favourite drinks. Pheasants' eggs are being eaten by the Royal Family instead of plovers' eggs. Pheasant eggs are very plentiful, as there has been no shooting either at Windsor or at Sandringham, and eating the eggs saves the food needed to rear the young birds and also lessens damage to the cornfields from the game.

BIRTH.

READ.—To Mr. and Mrs. F. Read, 276 Bolivar Street, on June 18th, a son.
